[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 60—Creditor's appropriation of payments to one or other of debts—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 86, 88—Enforcement of mortgage—Rate of interest from date of suit to date fixed for realization.

One of two mortgages bore interest at 12 per cent. on the mortgage debt payable with rests; and the other carried simple interest. Payments made by the debtor had been appropriated by the creditor to payment of the interest on the bond bearing simple interest, while the compound interest, on the other hand, been left to accumulate. In a suit, brought against the representative of the debtor after his decease, to enforce the mortgage bearing compound interest, the objection was taken to the appropriation by the creditor.

Held, that the rule in section 60 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, follows the ordinary law in prescribing a rule as to the case in which the creditor may, at his discretion, apply, to one or other of the debts due to him, payments made by the debtor. A reluctance shown by the debtor to agree to pay compound interest, before he executed the mortgage bond at such interest, was not an indication, within that section, that he intended that application of his payments should be made first to that bond.

The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was in force when this suit was instituted, but not when the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties commenced. Assuming that a discretionary power to a Court remained under section 209, Civil Procedure Code, to decree interest to run, at less than the contract rate, in a suit commenced before Act IV of 1882 became law, still the best guide to discretion, in this case, was to be found in section 86 * of that Act, which required the Courts to decree mortgage debts with interest at the rate provided by the mortgage (if to that rate no valid legal objection could be taken), down to the date fixed for realization.

APPEAL from a decree (24th April 1894) of the High Court, varying decrees (15th September 1892) of the Subordinate Judge of Patna.

The plaintiffs, now respondents, were the representatives of the late Nawab Latif Ali Khan, C.I.E., of Patna, who died on the 26th April 1890. The original defendant was Raj Kumari Ratan Koer, the grand-daughter of the late Run Bahadur Singh, Raja of [40] Tekari, who died in the same year, and his representative. She died after having obtained leave, on the 25th March 1895, to file this appeal, and by her will she had appointed the appellants to represent her. This suit was brought upon a registered mortgage, executed in favour of the late Nawab, on the 9th August 1880, corresponding to the 19th Sawan 1287, Fasli, by the late Raja, to secure repayment of Rs. 1,00,000 in five years, with interest payable at periods of four months, and at the rate of one per cent. a month, the unpaid interest in each month to be added to the principal.

* [Sec. 86.—In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit, if any, awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to, or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims; and shall, if necessary, put the defendant into possession of the property; but that, if the payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property.]

The plaint, filed on the 7th August 1891, claimed the principal, with Rs. 49,500 for interest and Rs. 10,278 on account of compound interest, with future interest from the date of the suit, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, till payment.

Among other grounds of defence, Raj Kumari, in her written statement, alleged that the late Nawab and the plaintiffs had credited to the interest due in another account money remitted to him by the late Raja for payment of the interest on the mortgage bond in suit; that this had been done in regard to a bond executed by the Raja at Gaya on the 26th March 1881, payable six months later, for Rs. 38,550 in favour of the late Nawab which bond bore simple interest only; that sums, amounting to Rs. 9,100, after the 26th September 1881, had been credited to the interest account of that bond, without any right on the part of the creditor to apply them in that manner; and that such sums ought to have been credited to the account of the mortgage bond of the 9th August 1880.

The issues raised these questions. The Subordinate Judge, in deciding in favour of the plaintiff on the facts, was of opinion that the law in section 92 of the Evidence Act would have precluded variation of the mortgage bond by oral evidence of what had been said at the time. He decided the question of appropriation by the creditor according to section 60 of the Contract Act, IX of 1872, there being no intimation by the debtor to which debt the payments were to be applied, and "no other circumstances" indicating to which debt the payment was to be applied. His decree was for payment at the mortgage rate of [41] interest down to the date of the institution of the suit, and he decreed interest at 4 per cent. per annum from that date until realization, fixing the latter date at six months from the date of his decree.

Both parties appealed to the High Court; the defendant, on the ground, amongst others, that section 60 of the Contract Act, 1872, had been wrongly applied; the plaintiff, cross-appealing, that the right direction in the decree would have allowed interest at 12 per cent. until the date of payment.

The High Court (BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ.) affirmed the findings below, but altered the rate of interest at 4 per cent. to 12 per cent. from the date of the institution of the suit until realization. Referring to Surya Narain Singh v. Jogendra Narain Roy Chowdhri, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 360, they made the decree "that interest run, on the amount due on the mortgage with interest, at 12 per cent. from the 7th August 1891 to the 15th March 1893, the date fixed by the lower Court for the repayment of principal and interest."

On this appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Appellants.—On the finding of the Subordinate Judge, and on the construction of the two bonds, an implied intimation should have been attributed to the Raja to the effect that he intended that payments made by him should be applied in payment of that bond which carried compound interest. He could not have intended that the period during which such interest should accumulate should be unnecessarily prolonged.

The facts, showing that the Raja would have first paid off the debt bearing compound interest, should have been considered to be an indication by him of that bond to which, he intended that his payments should be applied. This should have been held to have rendered section 60 of the Contract Act, 1872, inapplicable in this case.

Regarding the interest at 12 per cent. allowed by the High Court, it was clear that the plaintiffs' claim related to a transaction [42] which preceded the date of the coming into operation of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Section 86 of that Act was inapplicable to the decree in question. The first Court, not being bound by it, rightly decreed interest from the date of the institution of the suit at the Court's discretion, under section 209, Civil Procedure Code, which was applicable to the decree in question.

Sir W. Rattigan, Q. C., and Mr. A. Phillips, for the Respondents, in regard to the appropriation of payments, were called upon only as to one item of Rs. 1,734, which purported to have been credited to the Gaya bond on a date before any money on it was due. As to this, it was argued that, if opportunity had been afforded by the point having been mentioned at the hearing, it might have been explained. Several explanations were conceivable. The defendant [?] might have shown a mistake in the date, or that the date of the receipt of the money, and not the date of its appropriation to the bond was represented by the entry. At this stage the account should not be re-opened. As to the interest to be paid the decree of the High Court was right. Section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the remedy of creditors claiming enforcement of mortgage securities, and the fact of the indebtedness having arisen, and of the mortgage having been executed before the Act came into operation, did not prevent sections 86, 88 from being applied to this decree. The remedy was governed by the Law of Procedure in force at the time of the suit. No right or liability, which had arisen under a different law, in force before the passing of the Act IV of 1882, was affected by the application of section 86 to the decree in the suit commenced before the passing of the Act.

But even if it were assumed that the provisions of the Act were inapplicable to this decree, the result would be the same. If it were to be taken that the Court at the date of this decree could in the matter of a mortgage award interest at its discretion, without adhering to the stipulated rate, from the date of the institution of the suit, acting under section 209 of the Civil Procedure Code, still, in the exercise of that discretion, the rate proscribed in the Act of 1882 was shown thereby to be a suitable rate. There could be [43] no better exercise of the Court's discretion, and on this ground the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, should the other ground fail.

In regard to the rate of 12 per cent. the reasons for that, the contract rate being given down to the date of the decree, appeared in the judgment of this Committee in Orde v. Skinner, (1880) I.L.R., 3 All. 91 (107); L. R., 7 I. A., 196 (211).

Mr. C. W. Arathoon replied.

Afterwards, on the 8th July, their Lordships' judgment was given by .

Lord Hobhouse.—The suit in which this appeal is presented is one for the enforcement of a simple mortgage. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 1,24,239-8 and interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit to date of realization; with direction for sale in case of non-payment in six months. Both parties appealed to the High Court on several grounds; when the High Court varied the decree by ordering 12 per cent. interest instead of 4, and with that exception affirmed it.

The defendant appeals from the High Court decree on grounds of which only two need be considered.

The mortgage bond in question is dated the 9th August 1880. The principal money secured is a lakh of rupees to be paid in five years. Interest is to be paid at the rate of rupee 1 per cent. per mensem, by three equal instalments in the year, each for four months' interest. In default of those payments of interest, the bond provides that the unpaid interest shall be added to capital and bear interest in its turn.

By their plaint the mortgagees claimed Rs. 49,500 interest and Rs. 10,728 compound interest. The sum allowed by the Subordinate Judge is considerably less; but the defendant contends that it ought to be less still; because the mortgagees have appropriated to another bond called the Gaya bond which carries simple interest, divers payments which they should have appropriated to the bond now in suit which carries interest on interest.

[44] The Gaya bond is dated 26th March 1881 and is made payable six months later. The Indian Contract Act, 1872, follows the ordinary rules of law in providing that when the debtor has omitted to intimate, and when there are no circumstances indicating, to which of several debts a payment is to be applied, the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor. In this case the mortgagor did omit to intimate any intention on the point. Mr. Arathoon contends that there are circumstances indicating that his payments should be applied to the bond in suit. But the only circumstance he can point to is the original reluctance of the mortgagor to pay any compound interest at all. That reluctance was overcome, and it has nothing whatever to do with the appropriation of payments. It is clear that the mortgagees had a right, in the silence of the debtor to apply to the Gaya bond payments made after 26th September 1881 when that bond had fallen due.

One sum, however, Rs. 1,734-12 in amount, is endorsed on the Gaya bond as having been paid on a day before the bond fell due. It is a very small matter, because it is only the interest on that sum which is in question. As regards the principal it cannot signify to the mortgagors whether it went in payment of one bond or the other. Still, if there were clearly an error it might now be rectified. But it is certain that the specific point was never raised in the Courts below. In her written statement the defendant, who represents the original mortgagor, complains that the mortgagees have wrongly made credits to the interest due on other bonds, not that anything had been credited to interest not due. Both in that statement and in her grounds of appeal to the High Court the ground taken by her is that every one of the payments made should have been credited to the bond in suit, not that the earliest payment was distinguishable from the others. The case has been argued in both Courts on grounds applying equally to all the payments, and the defendant's arguments have been rightly rejected. If the point now made had been made in the Courts below, some answer or explanation might have been forthcoming. Their Lordships are not in a position to deal with it now.

[45] The second ground taken for the appeal is that the High Court have altered the rate of interest after the date of suit from 4 to 12 per cent. The Subordinate Judge evidently considered that the case fell within section 209 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives a discretion to the Court in such matters. The High Court founded their order on sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, which indicate clearly enough that the ordinary decree in a suit of this kind should direct accounts allowing the rate of interest provided by the mortgage up to the date of realization.

It is pointed out by Mr. Arathoon that, though the suit was instituted after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the legal relations of debtor and creditor had arisen before it. Whether that would prevent the application of the Act is disputed, but assuming in the defendant's favour that it would, the same result must ensue in this case. The discretion given by the Code is a judicial discretion to be exercised on proper judicial grounds. The Legislature has stated what should be the rule in suits of this kind, and the Courts cannot have a better guide to their discretion. No peculiarity has been shown to exist in this case for cutting down the mortgage rate of interest. If the High Court has allowed something less, the mortgagee makes no complaint. The mortgagor cannot complain if he is made to pay no more than he contracted to pay.

The appeal, therefore, fails on both the assigned grounds. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss it, and the appellants must pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT, 1882, SEC 88--INTEREST IN MORTGAGE DECREE—

In The Maharaja of Bhartpur v. Rani Kanno Dei (1900) 23 All., 181 P.C., the Privy Council said with reference to this decision, "It is true that in the case of Rameswar Koer, (1898) 26 Cal., 39, decided in July 1898 this Board upheld the High Court of Calcutta in awarding interest subsequent to the date fixed for payment by the mortgagor, which would have been wrong if the decision in Amolak Ram, (1896) 19 All., 174, had been right. But that point was not raised, and probably never was thought of by anybody until Amolak Ram's case came to be known, so that the decision of this Board is rather a proof of the prevalence of doctrines contrary to the principle of Amolak Ram than a conscious pronouncement against it." In that decision they expressed "their concurrence with the Courts of Calcutta and Madras and with the ultimate decision of the Court of Allahabad" in (1899) 21 All., 361, as regards the interpretation of sec. 88.

In Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen, (1906) 34 Cal., 150, the Privy Council dealt in extenso with these questions. They said, "The point argued on the cross-appeal was that interest ought to have been allowed at the rate stipulated in the bonds with (it is assumed) compound interest from the fixed day, until actual realisation. The learned Counsel referred to the provisions contained in ss. 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, and relied in support of his argument on the language used by Lord HOBHOUSE in delivering the judgment of this Board in the case of Rameswar Koer v. Mahomed Mehdi, (1898) 26 Cal., 39 * * "Their Lordships have carefully examined the case cited by Mr. Cohen (26 Cal. 39) and are satisfied that the question which is now before them was not before the Board or present to the mind of Lord HOBHOUSE. It was an appeal by the mortgagor from a decree of the High Court of Calcutta, which had directed payment of interest at 12 per cent. per annum (being the mortgage rate) from the date of the institution of the suit to the date fixed by the Subordinate Judge for the repayment of principal and interest, but contained no direction for payment of interest after that date. And the point argued was that interest from the date of the suit should be at 4 per cent. only as had been directed by the Subordinate Judge, instead of at 12 per cent. allowed by the High Court. The mortgagee did not appeal. The passage in the judgment which is relied on, is as follows :—

'The High Court founded their order on sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, which indicate clearly enough that the ordinary decree in a suit of this kind should direct accounts allowing the rate of interest provided by the mortgage, up to the date of realization.'

"The expression up to the date of realisation may have been used per in curiam, or it may have meant 'the day fixed for realisation,' as in fact it seems to have been understood by the reporter of the case in the Indian Law Reports as expressed in his marginal note, 26 Cal. 39. Their Lordships cannot have intended to say that sections 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act indicate that interest at the mortgage rate should be paid up to the time of actual payment of the mortgage money to the mortgagee. These sections contain no direction for interest beyond the day to be fixed by the Court up to which the account is directed to be taken, and in fact the whole difficulty on which there has been so much controversy has arisen from that circumstance. It is enough to say that the question as to the rate of interest (if any) to be allowed after the fixed day until actual realisation was not before the Board and the case is not an authority on that question."

Finally they held in that case as follows. "Their Lordships have no hesitation in expressing their concurrence with the High Court of Calcutta, not only in allowing interest after the fixed day, but also in allowing interest at the Court rate and not at the mortgage rate." This decision was applied by the Privy Council in (1907) 35 Cal. 221.

Similar construction had been placed in (1900) 23 Mad., 637; (1901) 29 Cal., 43; (1902) 6 C.W.N., 769; (1903) 30 Cal., 953; (1903) 31 Cal., 138; (1905) 29 Mad., 170; (1907) 29 All., 322. [46] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th July, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Srikant Mondul and others, Minors, by their mother and Guardian Satyamoni Dasi.....Plaintiffs

Saroda Kant Mondul and others.....Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 85—Sub-lease of a raiyat holding, by a registered instrument for a period of more than nine years, whether valid.

A sub-lease of a holding, by a *raiya*t without the consent of the landlord though created by a registered instrument, is altogether void, under section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE facts of this case are as follows : The plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendants for recovery of possession of a hut, as well as for the declaration of their jamai right to certain land, on the allegation that the plaintiffs obtained a permanent lease of the land from the defendant No. 7 and that the remaining defendants, who were the superior landlords and persons claiming under them, resisted the plaintiffs from obtaining possession of the same. The defence of the landlord defendants, inter alia, was that defendant No. 7, who was only a raiyat, had no right to grant a sub-lease of the raiyat holding without their consent, and as such the sub-lease was invalid. The sub-lease was for a period of more than nine years, and was created by a registered instrument. The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal to the District Judge he reversed the decision of the first Court, holding that inasmuch as defendant No. 7, the grantor of the sub-lease, was a raiyat, he had no right to create a sub-lease in favour of the plaintiffs, without the consent of the landlords, under section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, mainly on the ground that the sub-lease was valid at least for nine years.

Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhury, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ), was as follows :—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs, appellants, for declaration of their jamai right to certain lands and their purchased right to a hut standing on the land, and for possession of the same, on the allegation that the plaintiffs have obtained a permanent lease of the land from the defendant No. 7, who is a gantidar, and that the remaining defendants, who are the superior landlords, and persons claiming under them, have resisted the plaintiffs in obtaining possession of the same.

The defence of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the superior landlords, was to the effect that the defendant No. 7, under whom the plaintiffs claim to hold as sub-lessees, never had any permanent right in the land, that he was only a raiyat in respect of the same, and that the plaintiffs therefore have acquired no right to the property in dispute.

The first Court found for the plaintiffs and gave them a decree. On appeal by the defendants, Nos. 1 and 2 the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree, holding that the plaintiffs have acquired no right to the land in dispute by their sub-lease, it being invalid under section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs, appellants, that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court, dismissing the whole suit, is wrong in law, first, because the suit, so far as it relates to the hut in question, ought not to have been dismissed, when the first Court found that the plaintiffs had proved that they had purchased the hut and that finding had not been displaced; and secondly, because the finding of the Lower Appellate Court, that the sub-lease is altogether void, is incorrect, and the Lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the sub-lease was valid, at least for nine years.

The first contention is substantially correct, and the case must go back to the Lower Appellate Court in order that it may dispose of the appeal with reference to the hut.

[48] As regards the second point, section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides in sub-section 1, that if a raiyat sub-lets otherwise than by a registered instrument, the sub-lease shall not be valid against his landlord unless made with the landlord's consent; the second sub-section provides that a sub-lease by a raiyat shall not be admitted to registration if it purports to create a term exceeding nine years; and the third sub-section provides that where a raiyyat has, without the consent of his landlord, granted a sub-lease by an instrument registered before the commencement of the Act, the sub-lease shall not be valid for more than nine years from the commencement of the Act.

The only case, then, in which, according to this section, a sub-lease created by a registered instrument without the consent of the landlord, though purporting to be for a longer period than nine years, is to be upheld for the period of nine years, reckoned from the commencement of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is where the document was registered before the commencement of the Act. In any other case, the validity of a sub-lease will have to be tested by the conditions imposed by section 85; and there is nothing in the section authorising the Court to split the contract of sub-letting into two parts, a valid portion extending to a period of nine years, and an invalid portion for the remainder of the term.

It was argued that the sub-lease in this case was registered, and as there was nothing on the face of that document to disentitle it to be registered, the grantor purporting to be, not a raiyyat, but a tenure-holder, the condition required by the first sub-section was satisfied, and the sub-lease was one by a registered instrument, and was therefore valid.

We are of opinion that this argument is wholly unsound; for if it were otherwise, it would always be in the power of any raiyyat to render the section altogether nugatory by pretending to be a tenure-holder and granting a sub-lease in perpetuity, or for any long term, and thus inducing the registering officer to register it. The effect, such as section 85 attaches to a registered sub-lease, attaches to such a document when the registration has taken place, not merely as a matter of fact, but also in accordance with the conditions of sub-section 2; and in the present case, it having [49] been found that the grantor of the sub-lease was a raiyyat we must take it that the sub-lease ought not to have been admitted to registration if it had been executed without a misrepresentation of fact as it has been.

That being so, we think that the Lower Appellate Court was quite right in holding that the sub-lease in this case was altogether void, having regard to the provisions of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As the appeal fails upon the main contention raised in it, we think that notwithstanding that the case has to be remanded to the Lower Appellate Court, in regard to the claim for the hut, the respondents are entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 7th July, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY AND MR. JUSTICE HENDERSON

Basanta Kumar Ghattak.....Appellant

Evidence—Evidence in Criminal Case—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), section 342—Statement of accused under that section—Misdirection.

A gap in the evidence for the prosecution cannot be filled up by any statement made by the accused in his examination under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is a misdirection to ask the jury to consider a document, purporting to be proved by such a statement, as evidence against the accused.

THE appellant had filed a petition of complaint against one Nibarun Chunder Biswas, who was committed for trial to the Sessions Court at Jessore under section 477 of the Penal Code. At the trial the appellant was examined as a witness, and ordered by the Sessions Court to be committed for trial under section 193 of the Penal Code for having made false statements. The evidence adduced at the trial of the appellant consisted of his petition of complaint, his statement on oath and deposition before the Com-[50] mitting Magistrate, and also his deposition before the Sessions Court. There was no evidence to prove the petition of complaint, but the order on the back of it in the handwriting of the Deputy Magistrate, and the statement of the accused taken under section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, were considered as sufficient to prove it. The Sessions Judge agreeing with the jury convicted the appellant. In appeal before the High Court it was argued that the petition of complaint was wrongly admitted as evidence in the case, and that the Sessions Judge had misdirected the jury by telling them that the filing of that petition was one of the circumstances from which they were to find that the charge had been proved.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Appellant.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Henderson, J.), was as follows :—

This is an appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge of Jessore, who tried the case with the aid of a jury.

It has been argued before us that there have been several misdirections in the charge. The only misdirection, however, that we can find in it is in regard to a petition of complaint, and an order on the back of it, which was put in evidence and is called Exhibit III. It was a complaint made in another proceeding altogether, and all the evidence given in regard to it is that the order on the back of it is in the handwriting of a certain Deputy Magistrate. There is no evidence to show that this complaint was ever put in by the present appellant, and that being so, we think that the evidence that the handwriting on the back of it is the handwriting of a Deputy Magistrate, is not sufficient. The Sessions Judge in charging the jury pointed out this as one of the material circumstances from which the intention of the appellant would be apparent, and the document itself was read out.* We think under these circumstances there has been a misdirection.

[51] It has also been pointed out by Counsel on behalf of the appellant that the statement of the appellant was taken under section 342, and, so far as we can see, he has properly objected to the reception of that evidence. The object of that section is not to fill up a gap in the evidence for the prosecution, but, to enable the prisoner to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. At that time this statement was not properly in evidence against him, and we think the Judge was wrong in asking the accused about it.

The result is that the conviction and sentence are set aside, and the case remanded to the Sessions Judge for a retrial.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 9th May, 1898.

PRESENT :

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 19—Acknowledgment by guardian of minor—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sections 27 and 29—Act XL of 1858—Guardian, Powers of.

An acknowledgment of a debt by the guardian of a minor appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act does not bind the minor and is not such an acknowledgment under section 19† of the Limitation Act as would give a new period of limitation against the minor.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 473 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Atal Behari Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Lohardagga, dated the 9th of February 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Bhabun Mohan Ganguli, Munsif of Ranchi, dated the 9th of December 1895.

† [Sec. 19 :—If, before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit or application

Effect of acknowledgment in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed ; but oral evidence of its contents shall not be received.

Explanation 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery, performance or enjoyment has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver, perform, or permit to enjoy, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right.

Explanation 2.—In this section "signed" means signed either personally or by an agent duly authorized in this behalf.]

THE suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted on the 2nd of April 1895 for the recovery of Rs. 500 with interest, alleged to have been lent to the minor defendant's father on the 18th of March 1891. The plaintiff stated that the certificated guardian of the minor defendant executed a deed on the 14th of March 1894, in which the guardian made an acknowledgment of the loan. The Original Court dismissed the suit, holding that the guardian had no power to acknowledge a debt so as to bind the [52] minor under section 19 of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred, and gave a decree for the amount claimed. The defendant then preferred this second appeal.

Babu Jogesh Chunder De for the Appellant.

Babu Jogendra Chunder Ghose for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Gupta, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated the 9th February 1897.

The defendant's father had given a bond for money to the plaintiff, and after he died one Akhaj Sahun was appointed guardian, under Act XL of 1858, of the minor and obtained a certificate. That certificate gives him all the powers he can exercise under the late Guardians and Wards Act. Under section 27 of the present Act large powers are given to the guardian in relation to the property of the ward, but these powers are somewhat limited by section 29. Before the passing of the latter Act, two kinds of guardians were acknowledged in our Courts, namely, a natural guardian and a certificated guardian, and the powers of a guardian who had obtained a certificate were more limited than those of the natural guardian. The present Act has somewhat enlarged the powers given under Act XL of 1858, but they are certainly not greater than those given to a natural guardian. The debt fell due and was acknowledged by the guardian Akhaj Sahun within the period of limitation, and the question we have now to decide is whether a guardian, under the Guardians and Wards Act, has the power under section 19 of the Limitation Act to give a new period of limitation by a proper acknowledgment. A guardian is not ordinarily an agent. He has certain statutory powers in regard to the property under his management and no more. In some three decisions of this Court it has been decided that a natural guardian has not the power to acknowledge a debt so as to bind the minor under section 19 of the Limitation Act. [53] We can see no difference in regard to that section between a guardian who has obtained a certificate and one who has not.

We, therefore, decree the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in all the Courts.

Second Appeal—Grounds of Second Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 584, 585—Professional communication—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sections 65, 66, 127—Secondary Evidence.

The grounds upon which a second appeal lies to the High Court are those set out in section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code, and section 585 enacts that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 584. The provisions of those sections should be strictly adhered to. Anangamanjari Chowdhurani v. Tripura Sundari Chowdhurani, (1887) I. L.R., 14 Cal., 740 : I. L. R., 14 I. (Per BANERJEE, J.)—Section 127 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) extends to a communication made to the pleader's clerk the same confidential character that attaches to a communication to the pleader direct, under section 126.

(Per BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.)—Where oral evidence was given to prove the contents of a letter, which was neither produced nor called for, but no objection was raised to the giving of the evidence, Held that this was secondary evidence of the contents of a document, and could not be given without satisfying the conditions of section 65 of the Evidence Act. Section 66 rendered it legally inadmissible, although no objection was raised to the giving of it.

[54] THE facts of this case, so far as they are material to this report, appear from the judgments. The appeal originally came on for hearing before Mr. Justice RAMPINI and Mr. Justice HENDERSON, who differed in opinion, and the case was referred, under section 575 of the Civil Procedure Code, to Mr. Justice BANERJEE who agreed with Mr. Justice RAMPINI.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Moulvie Mahomed Yusuf, and Babu Uma Kali Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Moulvie Serajul Islam, Moulvie Syed Shumsul Huda, and Moulvie Mahomed Mustafa Khan, for the Respondents.

The judgments of the High Court were as follows :—

Rampini, J.—This is a suit to recover possession of an eight-annas share of mouzah Ledha, which the plaintiff purchased at a sale in execution of a decree obtained against the defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 resists the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he is in possession of the property by virtue of a mokurari lease executed in his favour by the defendant No. 2. The plaintiff seeks to have this mokurari lease set aside on the ground that it is a fictitious and collusive lease, and that the defendant No. 1 is but a benamidar for defendant No. 2, who is still the owner, and who is really in possession of the mouzah.

The Munsif decreed the suit, but on appeal his decree was reversed by the District Judge, who, on the 30th July 1894, dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the mokurari lease was a fictitious transaction. A second appeal was then preferred to this Court, and on the 13th May 1896 the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court was set aside by a Division Bench of this Court, and the appeal was remanded to the Judge with certain instructions. The ground of the remand by this Court was that the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court was erroneous in law. The defects in the District Judge's judgment pointed out by this Court were: (1) That the Judge was wrong in supposing that the Munsif had shifted the onus of proof from the plaintiff to the defendants merely because of the relationship between the latter; (2) that the Judge was wrong in supposing that the transaction took place [55] long before the plaintiff attempted to sell the property; and (3) that the Judge had omitted to remark upon the absence of the defendant No. 1 and upon his omission to prove that he actually paid consideration for the deed.

The case accordingly went back to the Judge "for a fresh decision on the point, as to whether the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case, such as he might reasonably be expected to prove, and, if so, whether the defendant had succeeded in rebutting it."

The appeal was retried by the District Judge on the 17th August 1896, and he has now found: (1) that the plaintiff has entirely failed to make out any prima facie case whatever against the defendant No. 1, whose bona fides was alone in issue; and (2) that the only point on which the plaintiff had offered evidence had been fully rebutted by the defence witnesses. He accordingly again decreed the appeal.

The plaintiff again appeals to this Court, and again it is argued that the Judge's decision is erroneous in law, and it has been contended that there are errors and defects in the Judge's judgment, which have affected the merits of his decision, and we are again asked to remand the case to the Judge with fresh instructions for a fresh decision.

I am unable to see that there are any such errors or defects in the Judge's decision as would justify us in taking this course. The Judge appears to me to have fully carried out the instructions given him by this Court, when remanding the case. He has rightly placed the onus of proof in the first instance, on the plaintiff, and has considered the evidence on both sides and has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has not succeeded in establishing his case that the mokurari is a fictitious and fraudulent transaction. He has further held that the defendants have rebutted the evidence adduced by the plaintiff in support of his case. He has fully considered the evidence of the passing of the consideration and holds that it did not pass. He has considered the non-appearance of the defendant No. 1 in the Munsif's Court, and his failure to give evidence as to the [56] passing of the consideration. He has further discussed the evidence of possession on both sides, and after fully complying with this Court's instructions has come to a fresh decision in the case.

I can see no defect in his judgment such as would justify us in again remanding the case.

There appears to me to be only one error in his judgment on a point of law, viz., that he has excluded the evidence of two pleaders on the ground that it was inadmissible under section 126 of the Evidence Act. But he points out that the Bench of this Court, who remanded the case, did not in any way animadvert on the exclusion by him of the evidence of these two witnesses at the first hearing of the appeal, and he argues that this shows either that the exclusion of the evidence of these two pleaders was not objected to before this Court, or else that this Court considered that their evidence had been rightly excluded from consideration.

However this may be, I consider that the evidence of these two pleaders is inadmissible, and has been rightly excluded, though not for the reason assigned by the District Judge. Their evidence has been read to us. They were called on to give evidence as to the contents of a letter received by a pleader's mohurir from the defendant No. 1. Now this letter was not called for, and was not produced at the Court. Therefore, no secondary evidence of its contents was admissible, and the evidence of the pleaders is, therefore, inadmissible under section 66 of the Evidence Act. The learned Counsel for the appellant urges that no objection appears to have been raised to the giving of this evidence, and hence he contends that their evidence is admissible. But there is no law in this country that the absence of objection to evidence, which is legally inadmissible, makes it admissible. I therefore consider that the evidence of the pleaders has been rightly excluded from consideration. In any case, their evidence, which has been referred to before us by both sides, is not material. The Munsif points out that their evidence at the best can only give rise to a suspicion with regard to the claim of defendant No. 1.

[57] I am further of opinion that we cannot interfere with the judgment of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court as his finding on the only issue that arises in the case is a finding of fact, which cannot be set aside by us in second appeal. There are numerous rulings of the Privy Council to this effect : see Anangamanjari Chowdhurani v. Tripura Sundari Chowdhurani, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 740 : L. R., 14 I. A., 101 ; Pertap Chunder Ghose v. Mohendra Nath Purkait, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 291 : L. R., 16 I. A., 233 ; Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhuri, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 23 : L. R., 17 I. A., 122 ; Ram Ratan Sukal v. Nandu, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 249 : L. R., 19 I. A., 1 ; Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 93 : L. R., 19 I. A., 228 ; and Lukhi Narain Jaga Deb v. Joda Nath Deo, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 504 : L. R., 21 I. A., 39. I am, therefore, of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, but as my learned brother does not agree with me on this point, the appeal must be laid before the learned Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge.

Henderson, J.—This was a suit by the plaintiffs, who are respectively the auction purchaser of an eight-anna share in a certain mouzah named Ledha, and his teccadar, to obtain direct possession of that share by setting aside a mokurari, which had been set up by the defendants, on the ground that the mokurari was fraudulent and executed without consideration. It was alleged in the plaint that the plaintiffs had been in possession of the mouzah, but had been dispossessed, and an issue was framed upon this allegation. The Munsif was of opinion that the issue as to the possession and dispossession of the plaintiff was not very material, and he found upon the evidence that the plaintiff had never been in possession, although the plaintiff No. 2 had made an attempt to take possession, but without success.

The real issue in the case was, whether the mokurari executed by the defendant No. 2 in favour of the defendant No. 1 was collusive and fraudulent. As to this issue the Munsif held, and rightly held, that under the circumstances it was for the plaintiffs to make out a prima facie case. He found that a few years [58] before the execution of the mokurari, the plaintiff No. 1 had obtained a decree against the defendant No. 2; that the defendant No. 1 was a relative of defendant No. 2; and that notwithstanding the execution of the mokurari the defendant No. 2 had continued to remain in possession of the mouzah. Under these circumstances he held that the plaintiffs had made out a prima facie case, and proceeded to deal with the evidence adduced by the defendant to meet that case. Upon that evidence he found that the consideration for the mokurari had not been satisfactorily proved, and that there had been no change in the possession; and he laid considerable stress on the fact that the defendant No. 1 had not himself given evidence to prove payment of consideration and change of possession. Upon these findings he came to the conclusion that the mokurari was fictitious and gave the plaintiffs a decree. On appeal the District Judge held that the plaintiffs entirely failed to prove their case, and that the defendants were not called upon to produce even as much evidence as they did, and he allowed the appeal. On second appeal, the High Court, after commenting at some length upon various passages in the judgment of the District Judge, and pointing out that he had not sufficiently considered the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses, that the defendant No. 2 had after the execution of the mokurari continued in possession, and that he had altogether omitted to remark upon the evidence of the defendant No. 1, and upon his omission to prove that he actually paid consideration for the deed, made an order remanding the case in the following terms:—"Under these circumstances, we think that the District Judge has not properly applied his mind to the evidence in the case, and that the case ought to be sent back to him for a fresh decision on the point whether the plaintiffs have made out a prima facie case, such as he might reasonably be expected to prove, and if so whether the defendant has succeeded in rebutting it. The case will go back accordingly." The District Judge has now reconsidered his former decision, and has held that the plaintiffs have entirely failed to prove their case.

With regard to the question whether the defendant No. 2 ever relinquished possession, he says: "But admitting their existence (the relationships between the defendants), what the [59] plaintiffs really undertake to prove, and that under the circumstances is about the only relevant fact they are in a position to prove, is that defendant No. 2 [not?] has relinquished possession. If he establishes a prima facie case on this point the onus certainly shifts very heavily to the defendants." He then deals with the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to show that they had had possession, but had been dispossessed by the defendant No. 2. This evidence he rejects as the Munsif had done. He goes on to say:

"It is argued by respondents that, although he disbelieves the possession of Ajudhia Sing (plaintiff No. 2), and his dispossession by Shamsher Bahadur (defendant No. 2), the Munsif is at liberty to take the plaintiffs' evidence, as a whole, as sufficient to prove that Shamsher Bahadur never relinquished possession to his alleged vendors (mokuraridars).

"The next argument is that the consideration of Rs. 1,000 is inadequate and defendant No. 2's evidence shows that it was probably never paid. The third argument is that the defendant No. 2 produces no witnesses as to the passing of the consideration. The fourth, that defendant No. 1, though given every opportunity, does not appear. Finally, it is said that no challans for Government revenue are produced.

"As regards the first point I find it is impossible to separate the false story of dispossession by Shamsher Bahadur from the general allegation that Shamsher Bahadur was in possession. The whole evidence is directed to one point, and the possession of Shamsher Bahadur is merely incidental to his conduct in dispossessing Ajudhia Sing, an event which never happened. The case on plaintiffs' evidence is simply this: A dispossessed B. Therefore A must have held possession. When it is shown that the first member of this proposition is absolutely untrue, it seems impossible to me to assume the second."

I shall first deal with the finding that it is impossible to separate the false story of dispossession by Shamsher Bahadur, the defendant No. 2, from the general allegation that Shamsher Bahadur was in possession, that is, did not relinquish possession. To my mind there is no connection between the two points. They are quite distinct. It may be that the plaintiffs' [60] story that they were dispossessed is entirely false, or false so far that they merely attempted unsuccessfully, as the Munsif held, to take possession. But in either view it does not follow that the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to show that the defendant No. 2 never relinquished possession after the execution of the mokurari is false. The non-relinquishment of possession depends upon evidence which is entirely independent of the evidence as to the alleged dispossession, and that evidence is corroborated by other circumstances, which are admitted. This appears from the original judgment of the District Judge. The weight to be given to that evidence, and to the corroborating circumstances, was no doubt a question for the Judge. In his original judgment the District Judge makes the following remarks: "The only point that plaintiff does offer any evidence on is the point of defendant No. 2's possession. All his witnesses say that defendant No. 2 continued in possession, and defendant No. 1 never had possession. This, it is contended, is supported by the defendant's evidence that the village amlas were never changed. I do not think this contention can prevail, the parties are admittedly relatives. The patwari is a permanent official, and the barahil is the chowkidar of the village, and has always been barahil of the sixteen annas. The plaintiff's witnesses are ryots of a neighbouring village, and there is not a particle of evidence to show where the collections really went. It is only shown that the same servants continued to collect them." In his judgment on remand the District Judge has repeated his observations with regard to the fact that the patwari, barahil and chowkidar had not been changed, but he appears to have withdrawn from his consideration the evidence as to the non-relinquishment, apparently because he has been unable to separate what he calls the false story of dispossession by the defendant No. 2 from the alleged non-relinquishment of possession by defendant No. 2. In this, I think, he has erred. In the passage I have quoted from his former judgment he had stated that all the plaintiff's witnesses say that defendant No. 2 continued in possession and that defendant No. 1 never was in possession. In his present judgment he appears also to be wrong in saying that the whole evidence is directed to one point, and that the [61] possession of Shamsher Bahadur is merely incidental to his conduct in dispossessing Ajudhya Singh (plaintiff No. 2). The case on the plaintiffs' evidence is not simply the A and B proposition stated in the passage I have quoted. It is not quite clear whether the District Judge means to hold, but I think he does mean to hold, that the Munsif was not at liberty to take the plaintiffs' evidence, as a whole, to prove that Shamsher Bahadur, defendant No. 2, never relinquished possession to his alleged vendor (mokuridar); but, if [he does mean so to hold, I think he is again wrong.

The District Judge does not appear to have properly applied his mind to the point whether possession changed on the execution of the mokurari.

It has been contended that the District Judge has wrongly excluded from consideration the evidence of two pleaders who were called by the plaintiffs. It may be, and I express no opinion as to it, that this evidence is of little weight, but it was clearly relevant on the question whether the defendant No. 2 did in fact relinquish possession to the defendant No. 1. With regard to this evidence the Munsif makes the following remarks: "The plaintiffs examined two pleaders of this Court, one Babu Thakur Prasad, and another Babu Sashi Bhusan Mukerjee, pleaders for defendant No. 1. It appears from their evidence that in the latter part of the year 1892, the defendant No. 1 wrote a letter to the address of one Abdul Thakur, mohurir of pleader Babu Shashi Bhusan Mukerjee; that in that letter reference was made to the successful result of the criminal case in favour of defendant No. 1; and that the defendant No. 1 in that letter stated that the enam or reward for the criminal case will be sent by the defendant No. 2. The letter is not forthcoming. It is said to be with Abdul Thakur, and it was not called for. The letter was being opened by Babu Sashi Bhusan on a particular day in this Court room, when Babu Thakur Pershad, pleader, without any authority and against the protest of Sashi Babu, read a portion of it to the hearing of Munshi Ibrahim Hossein, plaintiff's pleader, who immediately said to the other two pleaders that they would have to give evidence on this point, and that they should remember the content [62] (sic) thereof. This fact throws a good deal of suspicion on the claim of defendant No. 1 to this property as his own."

In his original judgment the District Judge, with regard to this evidence, made the following remarks: "The communications were privileged and I must expunge all reference to this evidence from the judgment and the record." In his judgment now under appeal he says: "The evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 7 and 8 I excluded as inadmissible, and their Lordships have not overruled my finding on this point. I need not, therefore, re-admit their evidence, but would merely draw attention to the Munsif's remarks on it at pages 8 and 9 of the paper book, as showing that it was on their evidence alone, coupled with the fact of relationship, that the Munsif held the document fictitious and threw the onus on the defendants. If their evidence disappears there is not one particle of the plaintiff's case left."

I may mention here that it was pointed out to us that it was in evidence that Sashi Bhusan Mukerjee on being pressed stated that the costs in the criminal case, which arose out of the attempt by the plaintiffs to get possession, would be paid by defendant No. 2. There can be no question that the evidence of the pleaders (witnesses Nos. 7 and 8) was admissible, and that the District Judge had, therefore, improperly withdrawn it from consideration. The fact that this Court, in remanding the case, did not refer to the opinion expressed by the District Judge, as to the admissibility of the evidence, does not, it seems to me, preclude us now from dealing with it. The remark of the District Judge, that it was on their evidence alone coupled with the fact of relationship that the Munsif held the mokurari fictitious and threw the onus on the defendants, is not correct. It is merely a repetition of what he had said in his previous judgment, and upon this point this Court in remanding the case pointed out the incorrectness of the statement, and drew his attention to the fact that the Munsif had relied upon other circumstances, and amongst them to the continuance in possession by the defendant No. 2. What the Munsif said on page 8 was: "He adduced evidence to show that he obtained the decree against defendant No. 1 in the year 1888, that the defendant No. 1 is maternal [63] uncle of one Ekbul Hossein, who is defendant No. 2's sister's husband, and that the defendant No. 2 is in actual possession of the property. The relationship as between defendant No. 2 and defendant No. 1 has been admitted. The plaintiff No. 1 has, therefore, shown that the particular transaction is suspicious, and the onus, therefore, shifts on the defendant No. 1 to show that the consideration was actually paid, and that he is actually in possession for himself.

As to the consideration for the mokurari the High Court on remanding the case said: "On the question of consideration the Judge merely says this: 'The defendant meets the mere statement of plaintiff that no consideration passed by his own statement on oath that he got the money.' That remark applies to defendant No. 2, who was the party alleged to be interested in effecting this fictitious transfer in order to save the property from his creditor. The Judge omits altogether to remark upon the absence of the defendant No. 1, and upon his omission to prove that he actually paid consideration for the deed." The District Judge now makes the following remark: "I do not think any witnesses as to the passing of the consideration were necessary, unless plaintiff had made out some prima facie case to prove that no consideration did pass. It is absurd to say that defendant must prove affirmatively every point which plaintiff has entirely neglected to give any evidence upon. Defendant No. 1 had no obligation beyond putting forward defendant No. 2 to admit the receipt and to prove the potta, which is itself a perfectly valid legal receipt." The passage which I have first quoted shows a want of appreciation of the position. The determination of the question, whether the consideration was paid or not, could only become necessary, if the plaintiff's made out a prima facie case that the mokurari was not genuine, and then it was for the defendants, who alone had any knowledge on the subject, and not for the plaintiffs, to prove consideration. It was not enough to say that the defendant No. 1 had no obligation beyond putting forward defendant No. 2 to admit the receipt and prove the potta, which is itself a perfectly valid receipt. The recital as to payment in the potta is no evidence of payment as between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The [64] District Judge appears to have paid very little attention, if any, to the direction in this connection given to him in the judgment remanding the case as to the absence of the defendant No. 1, and his omission to prove that he actually paid consideration for the mokurari. Moreover, in dealing with the discrepancies between the evidence of defendant No. 2 and the recitals in the mokurari as to the payment of consideration, the Judge relies upon a supposed usage, as to which there is absolutely no evidence.

With regard to the fact that the defendant No. 1 did not give evidence the District Judge finds that his non-appearance was due to a misapprehension of the proper procedure on the part of the Munsif, and he has quoted a passage from the Munsif's judgment, but I am unable to see that there was any misapprehension on the part of the Munsif as to the proper procedure. It appears that while the plaintiffs were anxious to have the defendant No. 1 examined in Court, they did not wish to examine him as their witness on commission. It was no part of the duty of the plaintiffs to call the defendant No. 1 as their witness. If it became material to prove that the consideration actually passed it was for the defendant No. 1 to prove that fact. He had ample opportunity, the Munsif has stated, to give his evidence, the case being adjourned on many occasions for his appearance. It was not until after the conclusion of the evidence on both sides that any application was made by his pleader that he might be examined on commission. No medical certificate as to his health appears to have been furnished on his behalf, for the Judge remarks that if the Munsif doubted that the man was really ill he should have ordered a medical certificate to be produced. The District Judge has held that the defendant No. 1 was perfectly ready and also within time with his evidence, and had no opportunity given him to give it. This may possibly amount, though I am not prepared to say it does, to a finding of fact with which this Court ordinarily cannot interfere, but it seems to me that it also involves a finding that the Munsif was wrong in refusing, as he did, under the circumstances stated by him, to issue a commission at the last moment—a finding with which I cannot agree.

[65] With regard to the non-production of the challans for Government revenue, the District Judge remarks that "their non-production by any one shows that the defendant No. 1 must have been the person who paid." This certainly was not the proper inference to draw. If the plaintiffs had made out a sufficient case to make it necessary to prove who paid the Government revenue, it was for the defendant No. 1 to prove that he, if it was the fact, paid it. Again, the District Judge states that the defendant No. 1 was precluded from producing the challans, as he was given no opportunity to give his evidence, but surely these challans might have been proved, without the defendant No. 1 going into the witness box himself.

In my opinion, if the Judge really considered that the defendant No. 1 had been improperly precluded from giving evidence, which under the circumstances was necessary for his case, his proper course would have been to remand the case in order that his evidence might be taken.

Finally, the District Judge finds that "the plaintiff has entirely failed to prove his case, i.e., to make out any prima facie case whatever against defendant No. 1 whose bona fides alone is in issue, and that the only point the plaintiff offered evidence upon has been fully rebutted by the defence witnesses," and he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Even in the statement of his final conclusion the District Judge repeats the mistake in saying that there was only one point on which the plaintiffs had given evidence, the one point being apparently the alleged dispossession of the plaintiffs by the defendant No. 2, and not the non-relinquishment of possession by the defendant No. 2 on the execution of the mokurari. See paper book, page 9.

It has been urged before us by the respondent's pleader that the finding on the whole case is a finding of fact with which this Court cannot interfere on second appeal, and we have been referred to a number of decisions of the Privy Council. On the other hand, Counsel for the appellants has contended that the District Judge has not complied with the directions given to him by this Court in its judgment remanding the case, and that by [66] reason of the defects in his judgment, which I have pointed out, there has been an entire mistrial of the case.

The question, whether a second appeal will lie, having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council in Durga Chowdhram v. Jewahin Singh Chowdhri, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 23 : L. R., 17 I. A., 122, and Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton, (1892) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 93 : L. R., 19 I. A., 228, is one which is not free from difficulty. I may mention, however, that the judgment of the learned Judges of this Court, who made the order of remand in this case, is really an authority, if the point were taken, that a second appeal does lie. The finding of the District Judge, with which this Court had then to deal, is the same finding as that now before us. But, be that as it may, the judgment of the District Judge is extremely unsatisfactory, and I consider there is great force in the contention that there has really been a mistrial of the case.

In the first place, the District Judge has improperly excluded from consideration the fact, which he himself admits, that all the witnesses for the plaintiffs say that the defendant No. 2 continued in possession, and that the defendant No. 1 never was in possession after the execution of the mokurari. He has done so not so far as one can gather from his judgment because he has disbelieved their evidence, but because he considered it was impossible to separate the story of the alleged dispossession of the plaintiffs from the story of the defendant No. 2 having continued in possession—two matters between which, as I have said before, there was no apparent connection. This error is one of law rather than of fact. Had he considered that evidence it is possible he would have taken a very different view as to the necessity for the defendants to have proved affirmatively that the consideration actually passed. He might also have taken a different view of the fact that after the execution of the mokurari the same servant continued to collect the rents.

In the next place he was wrong in treating the evidence as to the possession of the defendant No. 2 as being merely incidental [67] to his conduct in connection with the alleged dispossession of the plaintiffs. This also is not a mere error in finding of facts.

Again he erred in holding that the Munsif and therefore he himself also were not at liberty to take the plaintiffs' evidence as a whole to prove that the defendant No. 2 never relinquished possession, and also in excluding altogether from consideration the evidence of the pleaders. These I take it are errors in law.

In stating that, apart from the relationship and the evidence of the pleaders, there was not a particle of the plaintiffs' case left; he appears merely to be repeating the view already referred to that the evidence as to non-relinquishment could not in the face of the story as to the alleged dispossession be considered.

The District Judge has also erred in law in treating the recitals in the mokurari as to the payment of consideration as any evidence as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and also in relying upon a supposed usage in respect to such recitals as to which there was no evidence whatever. With regard to the passing of the consideration, if, by reason of the case made by the plaintiffs as to the relationship of the defendants and the non-relinquishment of possession by the defendant No. 2, it became necessary to decide the question at all, it was for the defendant to show that the consideration actually passed.

The finding that the fact that the defendant No. 1 did not give his evidence was due to a misapprehension on the part of the Munsif as to the proper procedure, and that the defendant No. 1 had no opportunity given to him to give his evidence, in my opinion precluded the District Judge from drawing—as he was entitled though not bound to draw—an inference against the defendant.

The errors to which I have drawn attention are not merely errors in findings as to matters of fact. They are no doubt involved in such findings, and if they are not strictly errors in law they are errors in law and fact. To use a phrase more often applied to a charge to a jury, the District Judge has misdirected himself as to various matters of law and fact, and, moreover, while he has omitted to take into consideration all [68] evidence in the case, he has relied on matters which were not in evidence at all.

For the reasons stated above, I am of opinion that it is impossible to say that there has been a proper trial of the case by the District Judge. His final conclusion that the plaintiffs have entirely failed to make out a case against defendant No. 1 is one based upon, amongst other considerations, the various erroneous findings to which I have alluded. It is not correct, therefore, in my opinion to say that his final conclusion is merely an erroneous finding of fact, with which this Court cannot, regard being had to the decisions of the Privy Council to which I have referred, interfere on second appeal. I would therefore send the case back to the District Judge in order that he may reconsider his decision in the light of the observations which I have made.

Banerjee, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought to recover possession of certain immoveable property upon obtaining a declaration that the mokurari lease, dated the 5th December 1891, executed by the defendant No. 2 in favour of the defendant No. 1, was a fabricated, collusive and fraudulent document, and that the defendant No. 1 had acquired no title under it.

The allegations of fact upon which the plaintiffs brought this suit were, that the plaintiff No. 1 had purchased an eight-annas share of mouzah Ledha at a sale in execution of a decree against defendant No. 2; that the defendant No. 1 in collusion with the defendant No. 2 dispossessed the plaintiff No. 2, who was a ticcadar under the plaintiff No. 1, and set up a false and fraudulent mokurari lease; and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, obliged to bring this suit.

The defence of the defendant No. 1, who alone contested the suit, was to the effect that the mokurari lease impugned by the plaintiffs was a real bona fide and valid lease, and that the defendant No. 1 was entitled to retain possession of the property in dispute as *mokurari*dar.

The first Court found for the plaintiffs and gave them a decree. [69] On appeal by the defendant No. 1, the learned District Judge reversed the Munsif's decree and dismissed the suit. There was a second appeal against the District Judge's judgment; upon which that judgment was set aside, and the case remanded to the District Judge for a fresh decision upon the point as to whether the plaintiffs had made out a prima facie case, such as they might reasonably be expected to prove, and, if so, whether the defendant had succeeded in rebutting it. Upon this remand, the learned District Judge, after a consideration of the evidence, has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have failed to make out a prima facie case, and he has accordingly again dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have now preferred this second appeal, and as the learned Judges, Mr. Justice RAMPINI and Mr. Justice HENDERSON, before whom the appeal came on for hearing, have differed in opinion, the former being of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed, and the latter that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court ought to be reversed, and the case remanded, the case has been referred to me under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with section 557.

The grounds upon which the learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court ought to be reversed are, first, that the learned Judge below is in error in holding that it is impossible to separate the false story of dispossession by Shamsher Bahadur from the general allegation that Shamsher Bahadur was in possession, when he ought to have held that the two points were fairly separable from one another; second, that the learned Judge below was in error in excluding from consideration the evidence of the two pleaders as inadmissible; third, that the learned Judge below is wrong in holding that no witnesses, as to the passing of consideration, were necessary; fourth, that the learned Judge in the Court below is also wrong in his remarks about the non-examination of the defendant No. 1; fifth, that the learned Judge below is further wrong in his remarks on the non-production of the Government chakhan; and, sixth, that the learned Judge below is wrong in observing that the evidence as to the payment of consideration a few days after registration, was exactly in conformity with usage, in the absence of evidence [70] to prove such usage. And these, I may add, are also the main grounds upon which Mr. Justice HENDERSON in his judgment says that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court ought to be set aside.

Before considering these points in detail, I may observe that the grounds upon which a second appeal lies, and it is open to this Court to interfere with the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court, are those set out in section 584 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and section 585 expressly enacts that no second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 584. And their Lordships of the Privy Council have, in more than one case, pointed out the necessity of adhering strictly to the provisions of these sections. I need only refer to the cases of Anangamangari Chowdhurani v. Tripura Sundari Chowdhurani, (1887) 1. L. R., 14 Cal., 740; L. R., 14 I. A., 101; Pertap Chunder Ghose v. Mohendra Nath Purkait, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 291; L. R., 16 I. A., 233; Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhurani, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 23; L. R., 17 I. A., 122; and Ramratan Sukal v. Nandu, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 249; L. R., 19 I. A., 1.

Now, the grounds mentioned above, upon which I am asked to interfere with the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court can come only under the heads (a) and (c) of section 584, if indeed they can come under the section at all.

Let us then see how far the grounds urged before me by the learned Vakil for the appellant really come under either of those two heads. The first ground is, that the learned Judge below is in error in saying that it is impossible to separate the false story of dispossession by Shamsher Bahadur from the general allegation that Shamsher Bahadur was in possession, when really there is no logical impossibility in separating the one from the other. Can this come under either clause (a) or clause (c) of that section, 584? That is, is it contrary to any law or does it involve any error of procedure, for a Court that has to deal with the facts of a case, to say, that it cannot believe one part of the story told by certain witnesses when another part of the story told by the same witnesses is manifestly false?

[71] The answer to this question must, in my opinion, be in the negative. It is true that the Lower Appellate Court has expressed itself a little too strongly when it says that it is impossible to separate the one story from the other; but we must take language in its ordinary sense, and I do not think that the learned Judge below meant, in the passage of the judgment to which reference is made, that it was logically impossible to separate one part of the story from the other. All that he means to say, as is evident from the context and especially from an earlier part of the judgment, in which he has criticised the evidence of the witnesses in detail, is, that taking the evidence as a whole, he finds it practically impossible to accept as true that part of their statements wherein they allege that the defendant No. 2, Shamsher Bahadur, was all along in possession, when he must disbelieve their evidence so far as it goes to show that the plaintiff, Ajudhya Singh, had obtained possession, and had been subsequently dispossessed by Shamsher Bahadur.

Upon the second point, the learned Judge below is of opinion that the evidence of the two pleaders, who depose to defendant No. 1 having written to the mohurir of one of them, who was his own pleader, that the pleader's reward in a certain criminal case was to be paid by the defendant No. 2 was inadmissible, because it involved the disclosure of a privileged communication. That view Mr. Justice RAMPINI considers incorrect, though he is of opinion that the evidence has been rightly excluded. I am of opinion that so far as the evidence of the pleader Shashi Bhusan Mukerjee is concerned, the ground upon which the learned Judge below has excluded it, is correct, because Sashi Bhusan Mukerjee was the pleader of defendant No. 1, who wrote the letter, and though the communication contained in the letter was not addressed to the pleader direct but was addressed to the pleader's clerk, section 127 of the Evidence Act extends to such a communication the same confidential character that attaches to a communication to a pleader direct under section 126.

As regards the evidence of the other pleader, Thakur Pershad, I concur with Mr. Justice RAMPINI in thinking that the learned Judge was wrong in excluding it on the ground of its involving [72] a disclosure of a privileged communication; and I also agree with him in thinking that, though the evidence of this second pleader was not inadmissible upon the ground upon which the learned District Judge excluded it, it is really inadmissible on the ground that it involves the giving of secondary evidence of the contents of a document without satisfying the conditions required to be fulfilled by section 65 of the Evidence Act.

As to the third point, no doubt the learned Judge below is wrong in law when he says, "I do not think any witnesses as to the passing of the consideration were necessary;" but that part of his judgment is wholly matter of surplusage, he having in an earlier part of his judgment found that there was evidence to prove payment of consideration, that evidence consisting of the receipt for the consideration and the deposition on oath of the defendant No. 2 in which the receipt of consideration is admitted.

On the fourth point I think it enough to say that the learned Judge below has found—I am quoting his words—"that the defendant No. 1 was perfectly ready and also within time with his evidence and had no opportunity given him to give it;" and I think that this finding is sufficient to dispose of the objection that the learned Judge below was wrong in not attaching due weight to the non-examination of defendant No. 1; and this remark is sufficient also to meet the fifth point raised.

As to the sixth point, it is true that the learned Judge below does make use of the word "usage," when he says that "it is the invariable practice to acknowledge full consideration of the purchase-money in these deeds, and the deposit of 25 per cent. or so, followed by the payment in full four or five days after registration, i.e., when 'takaza badlani, or exchange of the registration receipt for the money takes place, is so exactly in conformity with usage that it corroborates defendant No. 2's statement.'" But what he really means to say is this, that the account given by the defendant No. 2 as to the manner in which consideration was paid, is one that accords best with the way in which such transactions usually take place; and I do not think that this involves any error of Law. If any fact had been found without any evidence to support it then no doubt the finding would have been open to interference in second [73] appeal as has been held by the Privy Council in the case of Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Brojendra Kishore Roy Choudhry, (1890) 1 L. R., 17 Cal., 875; L. R., 17 I. A., 65. But that is not the case here. I should add that not only has the Lower Appellate Court found in this case that the plaintiffs' evidence is insufficient to make out a prima facie case but it has also found that the evidence adduced by the defendant has sufficiently met the only case put forward by the plaintiff in his evidence. The learned Judge observes: "As regards the actual evidence to rebut plaintiff's case on the record it fully and categorically meets the only case put forward by plaintiff in his evidence. That case is, as I have said, that defendant No. 1 never had possession. Three *raiya*s of Ledha, of whom one is chowkidar and one is barahil, distinctly swear that he was." And, then, after giving his reasons for dissenting from the Munsiff's view, that these witnesses were not reliable, he concludes in these words: "I have thus given the evidence for both sides my most mature and detailed consideration, and I can only repeat my previous finding that the plaintiff has entirely failed to prove his case, i.e., to make out any prima facie case whatever against defendant, No. 1, whose bona fides alone is in issue, and that the only point the plaintiff offered evidence upon has been fully rebutted by the defence witnesses."

I am, therefore, of opinion that no ground has been made out for the interference of this Court with the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court in second appeal, and I agree with Mr. Justice RAMPINI in dismissing this appeal with costs. The respondent is entitled to the costs of the two hearings in this Court.

[74] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd August, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Corporation of Calcutta.....Petitioners

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888), sections 125, 132 and 135—"Valuation," Meaning of—Re-valuation made by the Municipality within six years from the date of the valuation made after hearing objection, Legality of—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), section 25—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 622—Statute 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, section 15—Superintendence of High Court.

The word "valuation" in section 135 of the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Bengal Act II of 1888) means, not "the amount of the valuation" only, but also the process or act of valuation.

A valuation was made by the Calcutta Municipality of a holding; the rate-payer objected to the amount, and the Vice-Chairman of the Municipality, on hearing the objection, fixed the valuation at a certain amount. Within six years from this valuation fixed after objection, a re-valuation was made by the Municipality, and the rate-payer objected to the legality of such valuation on the ground that the Municipality had no power to make a re-valuation within six years from the date of the last valuation. The Vice-Chairman overruled the objection, and the rate-payer appealed under section 157 of the Act to the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah, who allowed the appeal.

Held, that inasmuch as the objection raised by the rate-payer was an objection to the valuation within the meaning of section 135 of the Act the Judge of the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to deal with it. That being so, it was not open to the High Court to interfere, either under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, or under sec. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under section 15 of 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. C. P. Hill and Mr. W. K. Eddis for the Petitioner.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, Babu Ganendro Nath Bose, and Babu Nanda Lal Sircar for the Opposite Party.

[75] The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and BANERJEE, J.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C. J. (BANERJEE, J., concurring).—The facts necessary to be stated for the decision of this rule are shortly as follows: In a valuation made by the Corporation of Calcutta to take effect from the 1st April 1891, the annual value of certain premises belonging to the opposite party was fixed by the Commissioners at 651 rupees. On the 2nd April 1891, the opposite party objected to that valuation, but, owing, as it is said, to the great number of objections taken by other rate-payers, the objection was not determined until the 28th January 1895, when the Vice-Chairman reduced the annual value to 487 rupees. Under the "Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act, 1888" (Bengal Act II of 1888) fresh valuations are to be made every six years, and, in 1897, the Commissioners made a fresh valuation to take effect from the 1st April 1897 and the annual value of the above property was fixed at 566 rupees. On the 10th July 1897 the opposite party, under section 135 of the Act, gave notice of his objections to the last valuation. These objections were heard by the Vice-Chairman on the 10th December 1897, and the valuation was reduced to 540 rupees. The opposite party appealed under section 157 to the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah, and the Judge of that Court, on the 23rd May 1898, allowed the appeal, and determined that the said valuation was illegal, inasmuch as a period of six years had not expired from the date of the last preceding valuation, and set aside the last valuation. Under these circumstances we are invited by the present rule to interfere under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887).

To this rule two objections are raised—

First.—That, unless the Judge of the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to determine the matter, this Court cannot interfere, either under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, or under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or under section 15 of 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104.

Secondly.—That, if the above point be decided adversely to the opposite party, the Judge was right on the merits.

It has not been disputed by Mr. Hill, nor could it well be dis-[76]puted on the authorities, as they stand, that if the Judge of the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to determine the matter, this Court will not interfere under section 15 of Statute 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104 (see the cases collected in the case of Tejram v. Harsukh, (1875) I. L. R., 1 All., 101. Save in cases cognizable by the Small Cause Court, we could not interfere under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act by reason of sub-section (c) of section 3 of that Act. As regards section 622, although this Court may interfere in regard to certain errors other than those of jurisdiction, no such errors have been suggested in the present case. But the Corporation contend that the Judge of the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to determine the question of the legality of the valuation in the sense of whether or not the Corporation could make the valuation at the time they did, and it becomes necessary to decide this question at the outset, for if it be decided against the contention of the Corporation, the second question, as to the merits, will not arise.

The contention of the opposite party is that, upon the true construction of the Act I have referred to (Bengal Act II of 1888), the Corporation were premature in re-valuing his house, as six years had not elapsed from the date of the last "valuation," viz., the 28th January 1895. The question of jurisdiction appears to me to hinge upon what is meant by the term "valuation" in section 135 of the Act, for the person dissatisfied with that "valuation" may object if he comply with the provisions of the section. The Corporation contend that the term "valuation" means "the amount of the valuation" or the amount at which any particular property is valued, and that it is only to the amount of the valuation that the rate-payer can object; and it is only such an objection with which the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to deal. The point is, perhaps, not free from doubt, but the first criticism on this contention is that the Act speaks of "valuation", not "amount of the valuation," and it would be rather incongruous if the dissatisfied person, i.e., the rate-payer, can object to the payment of part of the valuation, but cannot challenge the valuation [77] in its entirety. The opposite party here, i.e., the rate-payer, says that he objects, not to a part of the valuation, but to the valuation in its entirety, and that he objects to that valuation, because it is premature, i.e., made before the Corporation were entitled to make it, and consequently that it imposes upon him a liability to pay the new assessment from a date from which he is not bound to pay it. He argues that this goes to the very root of the matter, and consequently that he objects to the entire valuation. It is a little difficult to see why this is not an objection to the valuation. What does the term "valuation" mean? Is it confined merely to the amount at which the property is valued, or does it cover the process or act of valuation? Section 125 speaks of a valuation being cancelled on the ground of irregularity, which points to something beyond the mere question of amount. If a valuation were made before the proper time it would be irregular. Again section 132, which speaks of the valuation of districts, imports that the term "valuation" cannot be construed in the restricted sense for which the Corporation contend, for the valuation of a district cannot mean the mere amount of the valuation, but must include the process or act of valuation itself. A "valuation" is the act of valuing, and the opposite party may under section 135 object to that act of valuing, and here he objects to the whole act of valuing on the ground that it is unauthorised and premature.

I think then the contention of the opposite party is well founded, and that we should be placing a narrow construction on the section if we were to adopt the argument of the Corporation. In my opinion, then, the objection raised by the rate-payer was an objection to the valuation within the meaning of section 135, and that being so, the Judge of the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to deal with it, and it is not open to us to interfere.

I do not propose to enter into the merits, i.e., as to whether or not the Judge of the Small Cause Court has placed a right construction on the Act, but I cannot refrain from saying that the language of the Act is very far from clear upon the point, and that the view taken by the Judge of the Small Cause Court is open to the criticism, on the score of confusion and [78] inconvenience in the working of the assessment of the Corporation, to which Mr. Hill has subjected it. However, we have nothing to do with that; if the Act does not meet, in this respect, the reasonable requirements of the Corporation, it may be advisable to amend it. That, again, is a matter for the consideration of the Corporation.

For these reasons the rule must be discharged with costs.

I. As regards the jurisdiction of the High Court, this was followed in (1901) 6 C.W.N., 480; (1909) 36 Cal., 994; 13 C.W.N., 1221; 6 C.L.J., 50; but see 31 Mad., 510.

II. In (1910) 15 C.L.J., 500, with reference to sec. 162 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, III of 1899 (B.C.), it was held that the Small Cause Court Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the question of valuation and that question alone; as to the manner in which the land was to be assessed, after the valuation had been settled, whether it was or was not to be assessed as vacant land, was a question entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court Judge.

III. 'Valuation' includes the whole process or act of valuation. This was applied in (1905) 33 Cal., 396; 10 C.W.N., 289; 3 C.L.J., 169.]

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Totaluddi Peada and others.....Defendants

Mahar Ali Shaha.....Plaintiff.*

Mortgage—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 59—Mortgage deed signed by the mortgagor, attested by one witness, and containing an acknowledgment by the Sub-Registrar, whether valid—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), section 50—Mortgage being invalid whether a money decree can be made upon the covenant in the bond.

The requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are not satisfied when a mortgage bond is signed by the mortgagor, attested by one witness, and contains the Sub-Registrar's signature to the endorsement, recording the admission of the execution by the executant; therefore such a mortgage is not valid in law.

When a suit is brought upon a mortgage bond, although the mortgage is held to be invalid on the ground that the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were not satisfied, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, upon the covenant, money which the defendant covenanted to pay.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff to enforce a mortgage bond. The bond was alleged to have been executed by three persons: M, T and G. M signed his name himself, but T's and G's names were signed by the pen of one Mangal Kazi, who also signed his name as the writer of the names of the executants. He did not sign separately as a witness, but the scribe signed his own name as such. Below the word witness [79] in the bond appeared the signatures of the scribe as well as of Mangal Kazi: the latter, however, as the person by whose pen two of the executants signed. M signed in the presence of Mangal Kazi. Before the Sub-Registrar, M signed himself, and T's name was written by the pen of the said Mangal

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 827 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Gris Chandra Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 17th of February 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Bhupal Chandra Ganguli, Munsif of that district, dated the 18th of November 1898 [1896 ?].

Kazi. G. was then in jail, and his admission was recorded by the officer in charge of the jail, who put his signature below the statement made by G. The bond also contained the Sub-Registrar's signature to the endorsement, recording the admission of the executants.

The defence, inter alia, was that no decree could be passed upon the bond, as it was an invalid one, the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act not having been satisfied. The Munsif dismissed the suit of the plaintiff, holding that the requirements of section 59 of the Act were not satisfied, and the bond was invalid under the law. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he reversed the decision of the first Court. Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen, for Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, for the Respondent.

The High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) delivered the following judgments:—

Maclean, C. J.—Upon the question whether this is or is not a valid mortgage, having regard to the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, I think it is not. That section says that a mortgage can only be effected by a registered instrument, signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. The question of attestation is a question of fact, and this mortgage was not attested by two witnesses; for I am unable to accept the argument for the plaintiff that the acknowledgment by the Sub-Registrar is equivalent to the attestation of an attesting witness. But although as a mortgage the deed may not stand, I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon the covenants in the bond, the principal money which the defendants covenanted to pay. There is no question of this money demand [80] being barred by limitation, and he is entitled to a money decree on that covenant.

Then, as regards the interest, which is at a high rate, the question of liability must depend upon the question whether the plaintiff did or did not obtain possession of the land covered by the mortgage. Upon that question, as no evidence was gone into on the point in either of the lower Courts, I think there must be a remand to the Lower Appellate Court, in order that it may ascertain whether the plaintiff did or did not get possession. We think that, under the circumstances, there should be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The suit out of which this appeal arises is brought to enforce a mortgage bond. The mortgage bond is attested by only one witness; and the question is whether it can be valid, having regard to the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court of Appeal below has, in effect, held that the requirements of section 59 have been satisfied by the Registrar's signature to the endorsement recording the admission of execution by the executant; and, in support of this view, the Lower Appellate Court refers to certain cases, of which I may mention Horendra Narain Acharji Chowdhry v. Chandra Kanta Lahiri, (1888) I.L.R., 16 Cal., 19, which are cases under section 50 of the Indian Succession Act.

I am of opinion that this view is unsound. It is quite true that the signature of the Registrar at the foot of the registration endorsement embodying the admission of the executant has been held to be sufficient attestation within the meaning of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act; but that is no reason for holding that the signature of the Registrar would be sufficient attestation within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. For section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, clause 3, says that a will "shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will or have seen some other person sign the will in the presence or by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark or the [81] signature of some other person," and the Registrar's signature would come under the last description of attestation referred to in the third clause of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act. But section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act does not show that the attestation therein contemplated is anything other than the attestation of the act of signing by the executant; and it cannot, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, be taken to include the attestation of the executant's admission of having signed the document.

It was then contended that though this mortgage may be invalid under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, still the plaintiff would be entitled to have a declaration that the property in suit is charged with liability to satisfy the debt under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. I am of opinion that section 100 is not intended to cover a case like this. It contemplates a case in which the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, although certain property is made security for the payment of money, and not a case where property is intended to be mortgaged, but the mortgage has become invalid by reason of the mortgage-deed not fulfilling the requirements of the law.

Upon the question of interest and the question of the plaintiff's right to obtain a money decree, I agree entirely in the view taken by the learned Chief Justice.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh].

Oudh Estates' Act (1 of 1869) --Estate of a sanad-holding talukhdar—Lineal primogeniture by custom-- Award of a body of talukhdars within section 33 of Oudh Estates' Act—Withdrawal of a voluntary admission.

The title to a talukhdari estate devolving upon a single heir by a custom of lineal primogeniture was contested. The plaintiff claimed to succeed his [82] deceased brother as talukhdar. The defendant, who was his paternal uncle, was in possession. Before the annexation of the province the kabuliyat had been taken in the name of the plaintiff's brother as talukhdar, who afterwards had been settled with at both the summary settlements. By primogeniture, whether lineal or by proximity of degree (of which latter kind there was no evidence as to its being the customary one) he was the heir. To him a sanad had been granted, and the talukhdari had been entered in list II under the Act of 1869. On the other hand, it was urged that the above was consistent with the existence of a trust for the benefit of the titular talukhdar's uncles, of whom the defendant was the survivor, they having assented to the recognition of a nominal title in their nephew.

Held, that, in intention as well as in form, the grant of the talukhdari had been made absolutely to the sanad-holding talukhdar.

In regard to the state of things before annexation, it might have been questioned whether or not the property was being held benami at that time. But after the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, had become law, the title shown by the plaintiff must prevail, and he must recover the estate, unless a trust for the defendant should have been established. There had been no consideration given, and there was nothing to create a trust. There had been no transfer, no estoppel, and no bar by time.

In 1868 an award had been made by a body of talukhdars as arbitrators within section 33 of the Act, between members of the family other than the present disputants. This as well as a wajib-ul-arz of one of the villages of the talukh was admissible as evidence of what was the custom in regard to its devolution.

In 1879 the plaintiff had, on his brother's death, while admitting "the custom prevailing in my family of gaddinashini," joined in a petition that the defendant's name should be entered dakhil kharij in the revenue records.

Held, that there might be a withdrawal of any gratuitous admission, unless there should be some obligation not to withdraw it; that there was no such obligation here; and that there had been no proof of any title upon which the admission could rest.

APPEAL from a decree (26th July 1894) of the Court above mentioned, reversing a decree (7th July 1891) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

This suit was brought by the present respondent against Kazim, Husain Khan, now deceased, and represented by his son the present appellant, to obtain possession of the talukhdari estates of Bhatwamau in the Bara Banki District and of Katori Khund in that of Sitapur, with other property; the plaintiff [83] making title through his brother Badshah Husain, deceased in November 1878.

The ancestor, who was talukhdar, was Imam Ali Khan, who was succeeded by his son Ali Baksh Khan, who died about the year 1839 leaving four sons. The eldest of these, Nabi Baksh, who was killed in 1857, left two sons, one the said Badshah, and the other Sirdar Husain, the plaintiff-respondent.

The relationship of the parties and all the material facts of the case appear in their Lordships' judgment.

In the time of the last Nawab of Oudh the kabuliyat of the above two estates was taken in the name of Badshah, who was then a minor. After the annexation in 1856, at the first summary settlement, the settlement of the talukh was made in his name. At the restoration of the talukh, in the second summary settlement following upon the events of 1857-58, the talukh was again settled in his name as talukhdar. On the 11th October 1860 a sanad was granted in his name. Afterwards when the lists were prepared under the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, he was entered as talukhdar in list II.

The principal question raised on this appeal was whether Badshah was the absolute owner, or was merely the nominal talukhdar holding in trust for two brothers of his father, that is, for the elder Tajammal till his decease, and afterwards for Kazim, the surviving brother. Also it was questioned whether there had or had not been acts that amounted to a transfer of the proprietary right by the plaintiff to the defendant.

The plaintiff (March 1889) alleged the succession of the plaintiff as talukhdar, under clause 6 of section 22 of the Act I of 1869, on the death of Badshah, and that Tajammal at one time, and on his death Kazim, had managed the estate under a written authority from Badshah. It was added that Kazim had obtained a dakhil kharij in 1879 with the plaintiff's assent, but this assent had been given under undue influence exercised over him. Possession of the talukhdari estates, and of the whole of the property left by Badshah, and mesne profits, with interest, were claimed.

The defendant Kazim answered that he and his deceased [84] brother Tajammal, by whose exertions the estates, at one time lost to the family, had been recovered, were entitled; and that the defendant was now the real proprietor. If the plaintiff had ever been entitled to the succession as talukhdar,—though this was denied,—yet, by his own acts in 1879, the plaintiff had made it over to Kazim.

The questions, which the above indicated, were stated in the issues framed between the parties.

The District Judge found that until 1856 the custom of the family was for one member to hold the estate, and that under the Nawab of Oudh the estate at one time had been lost to the family, but was recovered by the exertions of Tajammal Husain with the aid of the defendant; and that these two had the beneficial ownership of the estate, and caused the summary settlement of 1856 to be made with Badshah, as a nominal owner or trustee for them. He was of opinion that what took place afterwards, the issue of the sanad, and the registration under the Oudh Estates' Act, 1869, gave no better title to him, and that consequently the respondent had failed in establishing his right to the possession of the estate. He dismissed the suit for the talukhdari estate.

An issue, whether the defendant had acquired any of the property in his hands with his own funds was found against him.

Both parties appealed.

The Appellate Court was constituted under Act XIV of 1891, of both the Judicial, and the Additional Judicial, Commissioner.

Their judgment was that the decree of the first Court should be reversed, upon the view which they took of the evidence. They attributed weight to the fact that Badshah's name was entered in the kabuliyat prior to the annexation, and that no satisfactory explanation as to this, adversely to the title of Badshah, had come from the defendant. They considered the facts as to the conduct of Tajammal, and of the defendant, in connection with the settling of the estates in the name of Badshah, and the entry in list II, without finding any evidence of a trust.

The judgment concluded by summing up to the following [85] effect the main conclusions at which the Court arrived: The plaintiff was, in their opinion, the heir of Badshah, the last legal owner; and the plaintiff had established that he had not acted with a free will and intention when he petitioned for the defendant's name to be inscribed in the malguzari register. The defendant, on the other hand, had not established that the plaintiff had transferred the talukhdari rights to him, or shown that the suit was barred.

The decree was made for possession and mesne profits.

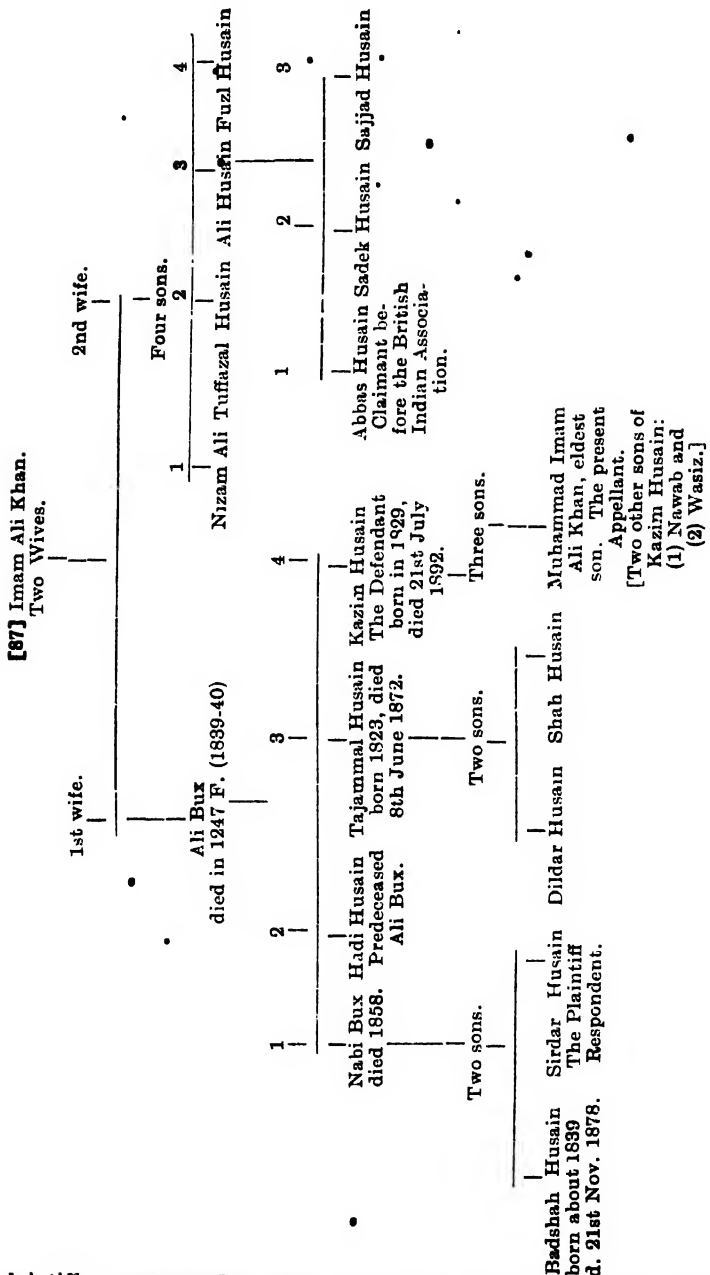

Mr. Lawson Walton, Q. C., and Mr. G. E. A. Ross, for the appellant, contended that the evidence had shown that Badshah had nominally held the estate, and was, in fact, constituted a trustee for the defendant. The original putting forward of Badshah had taken place in consequence of the state of things in Oudh before annexation having rendered it expedient. He had continued to be the ostensible owner, but had not interfered in the management of the talukh. This had been left to Tajammal, and after his death to the defendant Kazim Husain. Badshah had never taken any active part, or exercised proprietary rights over the estates. The mutation of names in the settlement records had, on the death of Badshah, been made in favour of the uncles, with the consent of the plaintiff—a fact which could have hardly taken place had not the position of the plaintiff been that of a person only nominally entitled. All the circumstances connected with the restitution of the talukh, after the confiscation of 1858, and the settlement in Badshah's name, at the second summary settlement, were reviewed. The good opinion entertained of Tajammal by the authorities was referred to; and it was contended that the issue of the sanad in Badshah's name was not inconsistent with the real proprietorship having belonged to that elder member of the family, who managed the property, but had concurred in allowing the nominal position of talukhdar to remain as it had previously been registered. The distinct admission by Badshah that all the authority which he had was to be exercised by Tajammal could be accounted for by, there having been the understanding that the actual proprietorship should not be interfered with; nor was there any interference [86] by Badshah, who lived a retired life on the maintenance supplied by his uncle. Reliance was placed on the admission by the plaintiff that Kazim was entitled to the proprietary possession as shown by his signing the petition of the 25th November 1878, for the latter to be entered in the collectorate register, and by his statement made shortly afterwards. Reference was made to Ramanand Kuar v. Raghu Nath Kuar, (1881) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 769; L. R., 9 I. A., 41; Thukrain Sookraj Koowar v. The Government; (1871) 14 Moo. I. A., 11; Hardeo v. Jewahir Singh, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 522; L. R., 4 I. A., 178; and Shere Bahadur Singh v. Dariao Kuar, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 645, on the subject of talukhdari estates held in trust, and the constitution of the trusts in such cases. Reference was also made to the Indian Contract Act, IX of 1872, section 16.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondent, were not called upon.

Afterwards, on the 26th July, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—The subject of this suit is the talukh with the estates of Bhatwamau, and other property said to have belonged to Badshah Husain viz., as one whose estates, according to the custom of the family on and before the 13th February 1856, ordinarily devolved on a single heir. His title was either conferred or recognized by the Mahomedan Government before the annexation. After that event both summary settlements were made with him, and the sanad was granted to him. He remained legal owner until his death in 1878, when his legal title passed to the plaintiff. At that time Kasim was managing the estates and receiving the rents. The suit was commenced in March 1889. It is not now contended that the defendant has had any such possession as creates a bar by time. So far the facts of the case are undisputed.

Khan. The case can be stated more briefly and clearly by inserting a pedigree which is not disputed.

The plaintiff, now respondent, who sues for possession, is shown on the pedigree as the brother and heir of Badshah. The original defendant Kazim Husain, whose eldest son is now the appellant, is shown as the plaintiff's uncle. The talukhdar is [88] entered in List II of the Oudh Estates' Act.

The defendant's case is that, before the death of Ali Bux this estate, like many others, was suffering from the misrule and disorder which was the proximate cause of the annexation. Rents were unpaid, tenants absconded, cultivation ceased, and the Government officers tried to extort revenue, which was not earned, by harsh measures against the persons of the proprietors. As regards this estate he says that after the death of Ali, Tajammal, then a youth, was seized and cast into prison, and Nabi, the heir, was frightened, and preferred seeking safety by deserting the estate which the defendant describes as being "lost to the family." He adds that he and his brother Tajammal prevailed on the authorities to recognize Nabi's son Badshah then about 10 years old, and to take a kabuliat from him; but he alleges that the real benefit was given to Tajammal and himself who became joint proprietors, Badshah being in effect a benamidar for them. As for the settlements, he contends that the first was the consequence of Badshah's position as kabuliatdar at the annexation, and that the second and the sanad were arranged by Tajammal with the British officers, and that whatever legal interests were passed to Badshah were clothed with a trust for his two uncles. And he further contends that after the death of Badshah the plaintiff did acts by which the defendant's right of ownership was confirmed or fully recognized.

The questions thus raised are of a kind which is very familiar in Indian land litigation, and which happens to have come before [89] their Lordships frequently during the last few months: questions of benami where there is undoubtedly an ostensible or paper title on one side, and on the other side an allegation of possession in accordance with a real title. As regards the time prior to annexation it is a pure benami case. Afterwards a different element comes in, because the Oudh Estates Act introduces a mode of tenure more nearly resembling the English principle of distinction between legal and equitable estates, and the defendant has to meet the difficulty that the plaintiff possesses a legal estate by the force of which he must recover unless a trust can be fastened on it. Still the disputes are throughout strongly analogous to benami disputes, and both sides have adduced, as is usual, a great volume of evidence, including an amount of fiction and falsehood more than is usual even in controversies of this kind.

The District Judge, who tried the cause, believed the substance of the defendant's story, and dismissed the suit, but without costs. The Court of Appeal consisting of the Judicial Commissioner and Additional Judicial Commissioner reversed that judgment, and gave the plaintiff a decree for possession and mesne profits. Their Lordships have now to decide whether the Court of Appeal is right. They do not find it necessary to go into the numerous intricate discussions of subordinate points which have been elaborated with great care by the learned Judges below. They have been much aided by the fulness and accuracy with which all the broader features of the case have been presented by the Counsel for the appellants. At the close of Mr. Ross's able argument they had arrived at the conclusion that the apparent title and the real title coincide, and both belong to the plaintiff.

The history divides itself into three stages : that which comes before the annexation, that which extends from the annexation to the death of Badshah, and that which comes after the death of Badshah.

The first question is what was the position of Badshah at the time of annexation ; and it is perhaps the most important of the questions, because without understanding it rightly it is difficult to get a clear idea of the subsequent events. Is the position which Badshah obtained as kabuliatdar to be attributed to the [90] fact that the talukh descended according to the rule of primogeniture so that after Nabi Badshah would be the heir of Ali Bakhsh, or to the fact that Tajammal and Kazim themselves becoming beneficial owners chose him as their benamidar ? The first step is to ascertain whether the rule of descent was that of primogeniture. That it descended by custom to a single heir is the common case of both parties. The District Judge is of opinion that it descended by primogeniture not lineal. The only alternative to lineal primogeniture is primogeniture by proximity of degree. But there is no evidence to prove such a mode of descent, and if there were it would not help the defendant's case. Among those who are equal in proximity the elder in line is to be preferred. During Nabi's life therefore he was heir by proximity, and if he were to be considered as dead his son Badshah would be heir to him. It has indeed been suggested in argument, mainly with an eye to the last part of the case, that the family could elect one of themselves to be sole owner, but first, such a custom is not primogeniture, and, secondly, there is no evidence of it except that of the defendant himself and a statement made in mutation proceedings which will presently be examined. Independently, however, of the failure to show an alternative there is good evidence in favour of lineal primogeniture.

In the record is a judgment, signed by Sir Man Sing, of the Committee of talukhdars who made many awards respecting the provisions to be made for relatives of talukhdars which, by section 33 of the Oudh Estates Act, became, when duly approved and filed, legal decrees. Abbas, who was first cousin of Nabi, Tajammal, and Kazim, sued Badshah for partition ; and thereupon arose an inquiry what was the descendible character of the estate. The judgment bears date the 2nd November 1868, and on this point it was as follows :

"Secondly—The statements made at the time of the Summary Settlement and the conclusion arrived at by the Settlement Officers from inquiries (made into the matter) and the statements made by the witnesses before the Committee, tend to show that the custom of succession by right of primogeniture did prevail in this family. After Imam Ali Khan his eldest son Ali Bakhsh Khan, after Ali Bakhsh Khan his eldest son Nabi Bakhsh Khan, [91] and after Nabi Bakhsh Khan his eldest son Badshah Husain Khan, respectively, succeeded to the estate and remained as sole proprietors."

The final award was that Badshah should "remain in possession under the rule of primogeniture and the ancient custom," and that Abbas and other cadets of the family should have a specified amount of land for maintenance.

Besides these decisions which seem to fall strictly within the province of the Committee, they addressed themselves to the question how it happened that the kabuliat, the summary settlements, and the sanad were procured by or for Badshah. Leaving out Hindustani words they expressed themselves thus—and though it was on account of their loyal services that the estate was conferred and the sanad granted, out of their own free will, in order to keep their family usage intact, got the kabuliat made and the sanad granted in the name of Badshah Husain Khan. This is no secret and the fact is known to ourselves as well as to all the officers. It was for this that Badshah Husain Khan was declared to be the owner at the Summary Settlement, and Tajammal Husain Khan reserved no part of the estate for himself, although he had power to do what he liked, and it was quite possible to do so."

"Looking into the circumstances of the case and from the information obtained from those acquainted with facts, it is found that Tajammal Husain Khan and others, brothers of Nabi Bakhsh Khan and others, brothers of Nabi Bakhsh Khan . . . in spite of their having been themselves proprietors, . . .

It is not contended that any part of this award is binding on the parties in the present suit. But it cannot be doubted that a suit for partition in 1868, when Tajammal was at the head of affairs in this talukh, was one in which he took an active (probably the most active) part, though Badshah was the defendant on the record. In a question of family custom it is impossible to disregard the conclusions of gentlemen who discharged such functions as those of the Committee. Whether their statements as to the special incidents of the kabuliat and sanad should be looked at is another question. But the defendant relies on the passage just quoted as [92] showing that Tajammal was master of the situation, and might have had the kabuliat and the sanad made to him if he had pleased. The Committee have mixed up two the matters of kabuliat and sanad together, though they fall under different considerations. But taking it in the defendant's favour that the Committee really knew the facts and that we ought to receive their account, how does it bear on matters prior to annexation. They say in effect that Tajammal "and others" might have got the kabuliat in their names, but that they deliberately preferred to get it in the name of Badshah in order to keep their family "usage intact." That opinion does not support the defendant's claim, but is fatal to it. If Tajammal, or he and others, had really though secretly become proprietors, the family usage would have been destroyed.

There is no explanation what is meant by "others," nor in what sense the Committee meant to style them as proprietors. There is no proof or probability that Tajammal got any concession from the King of Oudh in his own favour; nor any evidence to support Kazim's story that it was he and Tajammal who got the kabuliat for Badshah because they thought that a young boy would not be so severely treated as Tajammal had been. Nabi was in the service of the King and so remained till the annexation. It is a much simpler explanation of the facts to suppose that the substitution of his son for himself was by his own wish.

Another piece of evidence on this part of the case is the wajib-ul-arz of the village Deokalia, which is part of the Bhatwamau estate. This class of document is always admissible in evidence being an official village record. Its weight may be very slight or may be considerable according to circumstances. This record was made in June 1871, when Tajammal was still at the head of affairs in the talukh, and was verified by Karemat Khan, who is described in it as the agent of Badshah under a power-of-attorney, but is proved to have been the servant of Tajammal and of the defendant. If any mis-statement was made, it could hardly have been one to the prejudice of Tajammal and Kazim. The document appears to their Lordships to [93] be of substantial weight on the question of descent, and it has been so treated by the Court of Appeal. The history of Deokalia is part of the history of the talukh. The wajib-ul-arz traces the descent of the talukh to Ali Bux and then proceeds—

"After the death of Ali Bakhsh Khan, out of his sons the eldest son Nabi Bakhsh Khan became the owner of the estate; and Hadi Hasan Khan, Tajammal Husain Khan and Kazim Husain Khan lived in commensality with Nabi Bakhsh Khan. Nabi Bakhsh Khan in his own lifetime got the kabuliat of the estate executed in the name of his son Badshah Husain Khan, the present talukhdar, under whom the following new villages have been added to the estate."

The defendant, while admitting that the history of the talukh is correct, declares that the quoted passage is entirely false. But he has no ground for saying so except his own improbable and unverified story as to the mode in which the kabuliat was procured. The village record gives an intelligible explanation of the facts which Kazim does not. Their Lordships hold it to be proved, first, that the talukh was one which, according to the custom of the family, descended by lineal primogeniture, and, secondly, that Kazim's story of the loss of the estate, its re-acquisition by Tajammal and himself, and the introduction of Badshah as kabuliatdar, must be rejected. The evidence leads them to think it most probable that Badshah was introduced because his father Nabi was for some reason desirous of relinquishing his position as talukhdar, and wished the next in lineal succession to be substituted for him.

The events after the annexation lend at first sight more colour to the defendant's claim. Up to the first Summary Settlement of 1856 we have no more evidence than before. The Company's officers found Badshah, then a youth of about 17 years, in possession under the kubaliat, and for aught that appears they simply acted on the existing state of things. But then came the Mutiny and the confiscations which upset all the settlements of 1856. Nabi joined the insurgents and was killed in 1858. It may well be that when it came to be considered to whom the confiscated estates should be restored, difficulty was felt about [94] re-instating the eldest son of Nabi. About this time Tajammal came upon the scene, and took part in getting back the estate. He too had joined the insurgents, but he had come over to the British side and had made himself active and useful in restoring order. It is clear that he stood high in the opinion of Colonel Barrow, who was a valued and trusted officer of great weight in Oudh affairs. Tajammal was a man of strong character, and it is possible that his young nephew might not have succeeded in doing what he did. There is, however, no evidence or reason to believe that he could have got the estate for himself, as is intimated by the talukhdars' committee. It must be remembered that the British Government made a great point of recognising old titles and of restoring as many estates as they could with due regard for security. They felt that the position of the Oudh talukhdars was a very peculiar and painful one; that the inducement to take up arms was in many cases very strong; and that when the political necessity of putting down armed revolt had been satisfied, it was both the most prudent course, and the most consistent with a fair consideration of the case, to reinstate those who would enter frankly into the new conditions. It is possible and probable that on this point Tajammal was useful in satisfying Colonel Barrow and other officers.

The documents which bear directly on the reinstatement of Badshah are three in number. The first is a rubkar of the Collector of Lucknow, dated 9th January 1859.

"Badshah Husain Khan, talukhdar of Bhatwamau, Pargana Fatehpur, appeared before me in camp to-day. By reason of shelter having been given to Munshi Abdul Hakim, Extra Assistant Commissioner, sanction is hereby given that the talukha be restored to Badshah Husain Khan as heretofore, according to the Settlement of 1264 Fasli, in case the Special Commissioner of Oudh does not sanction the mustajari (farming lease). Therefore it is ordered that the tahsildar be ordered to settle the taluka with Badshah Husain Khan, according to the terms of the Settlement of 1264 Fasli, and send the Settlement file with tabuliat within two days for my signature, and the Sadar Kanungo is to report, within one day, whether sanction for mustajari of the ilaka has been received from Major Barrow."

[95] The second is a letter from Colonel Barrow, dated 27th January 1859. He writes :—

"This taluka is re-settled with its old proprietor Badshah Husain Khan. Our total assessment is rather above the old Government jama."

And on the 11th October 1860 the sanad was issued.

It is clear that in intention as well as in form the grant of the estate was made to Badshah. Tajammal probably rendered efficient service in getting it. Of what Kazim did, if he did anything, we have no evidence. There is much to justify the opinion of the talukhdars' committee that Tajammal was active in keeping the family custom intact, but there is nothing to show that others were concerned with him, or that he and others were ever proprietors except in the very restricted sense of having some share or interest in the estate for maintenance. We cannot suppose any ownership to have been conferred on him or Kazim unless we first suppose that the British Government lent itself to a benami grant or a secret trust—a thing which nobody has ventured to suggest.

It is certain that during his life Tajammal managed the affairs of the talukh and to a great extent disposed of its revenues. From his age, his character, and his services, he was naturally held in high honour by his nephews. Badshah appears to have been a weak, indolent and self-indulgent man, who with a concubine was kept in the residence at Bhatwamau on a sufficiently liberal scale to make him comfortable and who was satisfied with that position. The defendant indeed asserts that nearly the whole of the revenues were divided between himself and Tajammal, and that Badshah had a small fixed allowance. But he produced no accounts to support his assertion; or rather he did worse; he did tender some accounts which when the time for proof came were withdrawn. We must infer either that he had no accounts relevant to the question, or that having some he found that they would not suit his case. It is true that Tajammal was the principal acting personage: he was frequently addressed as talukhdar, and a great many instances are shown in which he was treated as representing the estate. But all that [96] is consistent with his being manager for Badshah, though his position as being eldest uncle, and his character and services, gave him exceptional predominance in the family and prominence in the eyes of the world. After his death it seems that Kazim enjoyed the same power and position, at least to a great extent.

Great reliance is placed by the defendant on two powers-of-attorney executed by Badshah in the years 1871 and 1873. The earlier of these was given to Tajammal, and it is a singular document. It commences with a recital.—

"Whereas the reins of management of the estate affairs, such as domestic affairs, administration of the ilaka, and the conduct of business appertaining thereto, in the Court detailed below, have always been in the hands and under the control of my respected and virtuous uncle, Raja Muhammad Tajammal Husain Khan Bahadur, who in every way is master of me and the estate in place of my father, but whereas by reason of the number (engagement for payment of the revenue) of the estate and the sanad being in my name, the said venerable has frequently to encounter difficulties in formal compliance with orders and conduct of cases relating to the estate, the necessity for executing the (mukhtarnama) general power-of-attorney has presented itself."

Badshah then covenants that "my respected uncle shall have full proprietary powers like myself," and he personally binds himself to maintain his uncle in the engagement of all the powers specified in five following paragraphs. As to the first paragraph there is doubt about the translation which the Court below has thought of importance and their Lordships do not comment on it. The 2nd, 3rd and 5th are ordinary powers. The 4th runs as follows:—

"4. That like myself, the declarant personally, he has absolute powers of making transfers by mortgage or sale, etc., of the whole or any part of my moveable or immoveable property, and of executing documents of every description, gift, bakshishnama, grant of cash or land, tamliknama (deed of settlement) and will and to have them duly registered."

The later power was given to Kazim after the death of [97] Tajammal. It is nearly the same with the earlier one, the only substantial difference being that the fourth paragraph asserts not only that Kazim enjoys, but that he has heretofore enjoyed, the powers therein mentioned.

These deeds, as is contended, and as the District Judge decided, confer the fullest proprietary powers and are a complete admission of the benami title. To their Lordships it seems that though obviously framed in the interest of Tajammal and of the defendant, they do not prove his case. If his story is true, Tajammal and himself were in the year 1871 actually in proprietary enjoyment. Why were such powers necessary? The reason given is that the settlement and sanad were in Badshah's name. But that, according to the defendant, was all a sham well known to the principals and not imposing on the rest of the world. In the ordinary case of benami the holding of a settlement or transfer by the benamidar would not interfere with the real owner's enjoyment. If the sanad did so, why not throw off the temporary mask and claim the full ownership? Why be at the pains of framing a circuitous and inconsistent document such as that of 1871? It professes to be a power-of-attorney, and yet has its permanence secured by covenant. It states that Tajammal had the reins of Government in various specified departments, whereas the claim now is that the recital recognizes and that the fourth paragraph confers full beneficial ownership. It states that Tajammal is "master of me and the estate in place of my father"; whereas the defendant's story is that Nabi never was owner and had nothing to do with Badshah's ownership. It purports at the outset to give full proprietary powers to Tajammal "like myself," and does the same thing in paragraph 4, so that he has only the powers which Badshah also has. If it was really intended to be an admission of full ownership, or to confer full ownership under the guise of a power-of-attorney, it is a very insidious document, and such as would require satisfactory explanation before it could be permitted to operate as between uncle and nephew situated as Tajammal and Badshah were. Treating it as a power-of-attorney it goes to show ownership not in Tajammal but in Badshah.

[98] Another remark to be made on these powers is that they do not support, but tend to destroy, the defendant's theory of joint ownership. In the deed of 1871 Tajammal is treated as absolute owner, not as joint with Kazim. In that of 1873 Kazim is treated as absolute owner. How did he become so, seeing that Tajammal left sons? Nay, not only is he credited with having absolute powers, but with having "heretofore enjoyed" them. How is that reconciled with the enjoyment of absolute powers by Tajammal alone within a few months before? The phenomena are inexplicable on the theory of proprietorship in Tajammal and Kazim. But they are clear enough if we suppose the two uncles to have been managers in exceptional honour and moral authority, " with the reins of management of the estate affairs in their hands "; and that is what their Lordships conclude to be the true state of the case.

After the death of Badshah it seems that the mutual relations which subsisted between him and the defendant were continued for a while as between the plaintiff and the defendant; for how long, or when dissension began, it is not material to enquire. What is material is to see if the plaintiff's dealings with the estate after it vested in him have precluded him from making his present claim.

Badshah died on 21st November 1878. Four days afterwards the plaintiff and his cousin Dildar, the eldest son of Tajammal, presented an application for mutation of names. They stated as follows :—

" After compliments we beg to submit that Badshah Husain Khan, talukhdar of the Bhatwamau estate, breathed his last on 21st November 1878, and that according to the usage and custom of gaddi-nashini prevailing in our family, we, the heirs of the deceased talukhdar, have unanimously with our own consent appointed Muhammad Kazim Husain Khan, son of Ali Bakhsh Khan, our own uncle, the head of our family, our patron and protector, who is qualified in every way as a gaddi-nashin in place of the deceased."

And they prayed for mutation to Kazim.

In addition to this application the plaintiff on the 26th [99] February 1879 filed a written statement which, after reference to the application, proceeded thus :—

" Even now, without coercion and reluctance, and of my own free will and accord, I do affirm the application and give my cordial assent to the same being granted for these reasons, namely, first such a conduct on my part is the natural consequence of the cordiality, confidence and mutual love and affection prevailing in our family, and similarly it was due to the cordiality existing between my father and my uncles, that those persons, though themselves real owners of the estate, caused the lambardari of their ancestral and self-acquired estate to be recorded in the name of my deceased brother Badshah Husain Khan; and, secondly, on account of the same love and amity my said uncle was so thick and thin with my late brother, as if the two had only one soul for two bodies; and my deceased brother ratified and admitted for ever the absolute proprietary powers exercised, and formal proceedings taken by the said uncle under the power-of-attorney, dated 30th April 1873, executed in favour of my said uncle, which I may call a will. Under these circumstances the late Badshah Husain Khan shall, as it were, be alive during the life-time of the said uncle. The affection and amity of feelings prevailing between my late brother Badshah Husain Khan and my said uncle were only equalled by the kindness shown me by the said uncle. I too cherish the same feelings of obedience and love to my said uncle, as it was my duty to cherish to the said two souls during the life-time of my late brother. Therefore in my said uncle I recognize a living representation of my late brother in flesh and blood. I make this request with all pleasure and pray that the Government may accede to it, and the name of my said uncle may be recorded in the lambardari register. Because of his kindness I am quite certain of my becoming a proprietor on his demise. Being thus confident why should I make any other application than the one I make against the time-honoured customs ? "

Upon these representations mutation was effected in favour of Kazim.

These proceedings seem to have caused great difficulty in the [100] Courts below. Apparently in both Courts it was considered that unless the plaintiff could displace his statements by showing his ignorance of their being made, or that he was pressed into making them by the defendant, his case would be defeated, or at least seriously damaged. Indeed, the District Judge thought that the plaintiff must procure formal cancellation of the mutation before he could maintain the suit. Accordingly those questions have been elaborately tried and argued. In order to show first his ignorance and secondly pressure by the defendant, the plaintiff has told stories which both Courts have found to be entirely false. The Court of Appeal thought that undue influence might be properly inferred from the relative positions of uncle and nephew, from the highly suspicious character of the application and statements, and from the false reasons assigned for mutation, especially the false statement of the family custom.

Their Lordships do not enter into this discussion. They do not see how the proceedings bar the right of the plaintiff to assert his legal title. Supposing that in 1878 he believed them to be true and made them spontaneously, why should he not assert the true state of the case after he has learned it? An Oudh talukh cannot be transferred like an ordinary estate under Mahomedan or Hindu law, because the Oudh Estates Act requires special modes of transfer. It is not now contended that the mutation operated as a transfer. It would be absurd to suppose that the plaintiff made any misrepresentation to the defendant; neither was the situation of defendant altered in any way to his prejudice. No consideration was given by the defendant, nor is there anything in the transaction to create a trust. Possibly it might have given the defendant a possession on which time would run; but if so time has not run long enough to create a bar. Mr. Ross, who pressed this part of his case very earnestly though with great fairness, rested mainly, as their Lordships understood, on the admission of title made by the plaintiff; but a gratuitous admission may be withdrawn unless there is some obligation not to withdraw it; and there is not here any title on which such an admission can rest. If then there is no transfer, no estoppel, no bar by time, no trust, why [101] should not the plaintiff assert his legal rights, whatever he may, in ignorance of the facts or in deference to his uncle or for any other cause not injurious to the defendant, have admitted? Their Lordships hold that he can assert them, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and to dismiss the appeal. The appellants must pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Summons, Service of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 79, 80—

Affidavit of service of summons, Sufficiency of.

Where a defendant cannot be found the affidavit of service must show—

- (1) That proper efforts were made to find him ; and
- (2) That the copy of the summons was affixed on the door of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at the time of service.

Whether or not these conditions are established to the satisfaction of the Court must in each case depend on its own particular circumstances.

IN this case a question arose as to the sufficiency of the proof of service of the summons under the last paragraph of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The defendant did not appear at the hearing.

Mr. K. N. Sen Gupta for the Plaintiff.

Jenkins, J.—The sufficiency of service comes constantly before the Court in dealing with undefended cases, and as it appears to have been thought that I have laid down a rule of practice on the subject beyond the provisions of the Code, I am desirous of removing that misapprehension.

[102] Section 79 provides that “when the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.” Then in section 80 it is further provided that, “if the defendant or other person refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or if the serving officer cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept the service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom the service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides and then return the original to the Court from which it issued, with a return endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy and the circumstances under which he did so.”

It will be seen, therefore, that (leaving out of consideration the contingency of there being an agent) the primary method of service is by tendering or delivering a copy of the summons to the defendant personally and obtaining his acknowledgment. It is obvious, however, that this mode may fail for one of two reasons: either the defendant may refuse to sign the acknowledgment, or it may be impossible to find him, and accordingly a method of service by affixing a copy of the summons is provided. Apart from refusal to sign there are two necessary conditions to the validity of this mode of service: 1st, the serving officer must have been unable to find the defendant, and 2ndly he must have affixed a copy of the summons “on the outer door of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides " and return the original to the Court in the manner prescribed by the Code.

I will shortly deal with these two conditions. For the purpose of establishing that the defendant cannot be found it must be shown that proper efforts to find him were made, as, for instance, that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect he would be found. Then to satisfy the second condition it must be shown that the copy was affixed on the door of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at the time of service.

[103] Whether or not these conditions are established to the satisfaction of the Court must in each case depend on its own particular circumstances. These requirements are prescribed by the Code and not by any rule of practice outside the Code, and having regard to the applications so frequently made under section 108, I have always thought it necessary to closely scrutinize the mode of service on which reliance is placed. In this particular case I am satisfied that the service was in accordance with the provisions of the Code, and is therefore valid.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Sourendra Mohan Tagore.....Defendant No. 3

Landlord and Tenant—Liability for Rent—Regulation VIII of 1819, section 6—Liability of the transferee of a fractional share of putni to pay rent—Personal liability of putndar for rent, notwithstanding a stipulation in the putni lease that arrears of rent should be realized by auction sale of the putni—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 65.

Although the transferee of a fractional share of a putni cannot enforce registration of his name on payment of the necessary fee and tender of the requisite security, yet the transfer is not altogether void and he is liable for rent severally and jointly with the registered tenant, if the landlord chooses to recognize him as one of the joint holders of the putni, and he is also liable for the entire rent of the putni estate.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 68 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Ananta Ram Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 21st of January 1897.

Notwithstanding a stipulation in the putni lease that on default of any instalment of rent, the landlord shall be entitled to realize the same by auction sale of the putni mehal, the putnidar is also personally liable for the rent of the said mehal.

Fotick Chunder Dey Sircar v. Foley, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 492, and Tarini Prosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari Debi, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 301, referred to.

THIS appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, respondent, for arrears of rent and cesses due in respect of a putni [104] tenure, pergunnah Plassey, on the allegation that the putni was granted by the plaintiff's predecessor on the 10th of Sraban 1251 B. S. (25th July 1843) to Kesab Chandra Roy; that it passed by successive sales for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819, first to Tarini Prosad Ghose, and after him to Rakhal Das Mukerji, and then by inheritance to Sarat Moni Devi and Haridasi Devi, defendants 1 and 2; and that by some arrangement with defendants 1 and 2 the defendant No. 3, Raja Sir Sourendro Mohan Tagore, was in joint possession with them of the putni during the period for which rent was claimed, that is, the year 1301 (1894-95).

The defence of defendant No. 1 was to the effect that she was entitled to eight annas, that is a moiety, of the putni; that the said eight annas share was leased in perpetuity to the defendant No. 3 in two equal halves, one by the defendant No. 1 and the other by her predecessor in title defendant No. 2, with a stipulation in each case that defendant No. 3 should pay to the zemindar the putni rent payable in respect of the said share; and that consequently the defendant No. 3 and not defendant No. 1 was liable for the rent claimed.

The defence of defendant No. 2 was denial of liability on the ground that she did not any longer own any interest in the putni.

The defence of defendant No. 3 was that he was not liable for the rent claimed, as he had not been recorded as putnidar in the plaintiff's sherista, and as he had made a gift of his interest in the tenure to one Danesh Prokas Ganguli in Kartick 1302 (October 1895).

The Court below exempted defendant No. 2 from liability and gave the plaintiff a decree making defendants 1 and 3 liable, for the amount claimed.

Against that decree the defendant No. 3 preferred this appeal making the plaintiff alone respondent, and it was contended on his behalf—first, that no decree ought to have been made against defendant No. 3, as the plaint disclosed no cause of action against him; secondly, that even if any decree could properly be made against him, it ought either to specify the extent of his liability, or to direct that the plaintiff should in the first instance proceed [105] against the putni tenure for realization of the amount decreed; and, thirdly, that the decree ought not to have allowed interest at the rate claimed during the pendency of the suit.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Sreenath Dass and Babu Promotha Nath Sen for the Respondent.

At the hearing of the appeal an objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiff, respondent, that the appeal could not proceed in the absence of defendant No. 1, who was not made a respondent, and who was likely to be affected by the result of the appeal if it was decided in favour of the appellant. If the appeal had been likely to succeed, we should have felt bound to make defendant No. 1 a respondent under section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But as in our opinion the appeal fails on the merits, it becomes unnecessary to say more on this point.

With reference to the first contention of the appellant, it is enough to say that, in our opinion, the plaint discloses a sufficient cause of action against the defendant No. 3, when it alleges that defendant No. 3 was, by an arrangement with the other defendants, in possession of the putni jointly with them, and when it asks for a decree for the arrears of rent due in respect of the putni. Such a decree may be executed by the sale of the putni which will pass the entire tenure and not merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor; and to a suit in which such a decree may be passed a party in the position of defendant No. 3, who has an interest in the putni, must clearly be a proper party.

Nor is there any good reason why the suit should not be decreed against defendant No. 3. It is not disputed that during the time in respect of which rent is claimed in this suit, defendant No. 3 held and owned an eight-anna share of the mehal Pergunnah Plassey as putnidar, and the remaining eight annas as mourasi ijardar under defendant No. 1. The only ground urged for exempting defendant No. 3 from liability is, that his name has not been registered as a tenant in the plaintiff's office, and that section 6 of the Regulation VIII of 1819 stands in the way [106] of his name being so registered, he being a transferee of only a fractional share of the putni. Now, though it is quite true that the latter part of section 6 of the Regulation VIII of 1819 provides that the right of the transferee to enforce registration of his name on payment of the necessary fee and tender of the requisite security does not extend to the case of transfer of a fractional share of a putni, yet it does not follow that the transfer of a fractional share of a putni is altogether void, or even that the transferee of such a share is not liable for rent jointly with the registered tenant, if the landlord chooses to recognise him as one of the joint-holders of the putni. The portion of the section to which reference is made runs thus: "It is hereby provided that the rules of this and of the preceding section shall not be held to apply to transfers of any fractional portion of a putni taluk, nor to any alienation other than of the entire interest; for no apportionment of the zemindar's reserved rent can be allowed to stand good unless made under his special sanction."

The true meaning and intention of the provision is, we think, not to make the alienation of a fractional portion of a putni taluk without the sanction of the zemindar absolutely void, nor even to exempt the transferee from liability for rent jointly with the transferor if the landlord chooses to recognise him as one of the joint holders of the putni, but only to prevent any splitting of the tenure and apportionment of the rent without the sanction of the landlord, as the concluding words of the section, which contain the reason for the provision, clearly show.

The first contention of the appellant must therefore fail.

The second contention of the appellant has two branches, which we shall consider separately.

The first branch of the second contention, namely, that the decree against the defendant No. 3 ought to specify his liability, and as he is the purchaser of only one-half of the putni his liability should be limited to one-half of the amount decreed, is, we think, completely met by the provision of section 6 of Regulation VIII of 1819 just quoted above. It is argued for the appellant that if the landlord sues the transferee, he by so doing waives the benefit of the provisions in section 6 relating to alienation of a part only of the putni, and that if the decree [107] makes the transferee of a part only of the putni jointly and severally liable with the transferor for the entire rent it throws on the transferee a heavier liability than what should justly attach to him.

We do not consider this argument sound. By suing the unregistered transferee of a part of the putni jointly with the transferor, the zemindar only recognises him as one of the joint holders of the putni, but because he does so, he cannot be said to have waived the right secured to him by section 6 of Regulation VIII of 1819 to preserve the unity of the tenure held under him without splitting it and apportioning its rent. And as for the hardship of throwing on the transferee of a part of the putni the joint liability for the rent of the whole, it is in the first place the result of the transferee's own act in accepting the transfer without the previous sanction of the zemindar to an apportionment of the rent. And in the second place, the hardship is only apparent and not real; whereas the opposite view would in a case like the present involve real hardship on the transferor. For if the transferee of a part of the putni is made to pay the rent of the whole he can always obtain contribution from the transferor or owner of the remaining part; and in this particular case the transferee has taken care to stipulate in the mourasi lease he has taken of the remaining share from the transferor or owner of that share, that he is to pay the zemindar's rent out of the amount payable by him as rent of the mourasi tenure; whereas if the transferor or owner of the remaining share, that is the defendant No. 1, were alone made liable for the entire rent, it would be throwing on her the burden of paying what the defendant No. 3 has already undertaken to pay for her. Moreover, if the entire rent be realized from defendant No. 3, no suit for contribution will be necessary, as that defendant can always set off the amount paid in excess of his liability and on account of defendant No. 1, against the mourasi rent due to defendant No. 1; whereas, if the decree is made against defendant No. 1 alone, a suit by her against defendant No. 3 would be inevitable; so that the decree made by the Court below may result in preventing a multiplicity of suits.

The first branch of the appellant's second contention should, in our opinion, therefore fail.

[108] The second branch of the second contention, namely, that the decree ought to direct the sale of the putni tenure in the first place, is sought to be based on the terms of the putni lease as well as on the provisions of the rent law. But the clause in the putni kabuliyat, which is relied upon and which runs in these words, namely, "If I fail to pay the money due for any instalment, you shall be entitled to realize the same with interest from the first day of the month following the one for which default shall be made by auction sale of the said mehals under the provision of Regulation VIII," is only an enabling clause and cannot be taken as restricting the landlord's right to hold the tenant personally liable for the rent. Nor is there anything in the putni Regulation (VIII of 1819) to support the contention urged, while, on the contrary, the third clause of section 17 of the Regulation would go to show that arrears of putni rent other than those for the current year (and those claimed in this suit are of that description) become the personal debt of the talukdar. And section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is the provision of the rent law relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant, has been held not to limit in any way the personal liability of the tenant for rent. See Fotick Chunder Dey Sircar v. Foley, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 492, and Tarini Prosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari Devi, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 301.

The third contention of the appellant is, in our opinion, equally unsustainable. There is no reason shown why interest should not run at the rate at which the Court below has allowed it during the pendency of the suit. The Court has by section 209 of the Code of Civil Procedure full discretion to award interest at such rate as it considers reasonable during the pendency of the suit; and having regard to the rate allowed, which is not very high, to the nature of the defence, and to the groundless objections upon which payment has been withheld, we do not think that there is any reason for reducing the rate of interest.

The grounds urged before us, therefore, all fail, and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

S. C. G.

Appeal dismissed.

On second appeal by H to the High Court.

Held, referring to section 559 of the Civil Procedure Code (1882). that the Lower Appellate Court was right in adding as a party respondent to the appeal.

Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I. L. R., 5 All., 266, dissented from. Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 565, and Manickya Moyee v. Boroda Prasad Mookerjee, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 355, referred to.

THE action, which gave rise to this appeal, was founded upon a hundi, executed by C. F. Carleton, owner of Byria Indigo Factory, in favor of the plaintiff Basdeo Bajpye, and the greater part of the loan was for the purpose of a purchase of certain land from the plaintiff himself. Carleton afterwards sold the factory with all its liabilities and dues to H. W. Hudson, who obtained possession of the land aforesaid. The present suit for recovery of money due upon the hundi was brought against C. F. Carleton as defendant No. 1, and H. W. Hudson as defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 2, alone appeared in the first instance and pleaded that there was no cause of action against him. The Munsif held that the defence was good. The defendant [110] No. 1 then applied for permission to file his written statement, but his application was refused and the suit was decreed ex-parte against him. The defendant No. 1 appealed against that decree making the plaintiff only respondent to the appeal. Subsequently, the defendant No. 2 was made a respondent by an order passed by the Court of Appeal, and eventually the Munsif's decree was set aside and a decree passed against defendant No. 2, which provided that in case the plaintiff failed to realize the entire amount from the defendant No. 2, defendant No. 1 should be liable for the balance.

The defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court, and one of the grounds urged was: "That the Court below was wrong in making the defendant No. 2 a party respondent and passing a decree against him, notwithstanding that the plaintiff did not appeal against the decree of the Court of First Instance by which the defendant No. 2 was released."

The arguments and cases cited on both sides sufficiently appear from the judgment of the High Court.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of certain money upon a hundi bearing date the 11th September 1892, executed by the defendant No. 1 Charles Frederic Carleton in favour of the plaintiff. It appears that, at the time of the execution of the hundi, Carleton was the owner of the Byria factory, and that the plaintiff had purchased at an execution sale the holding of a certain raiyyat, which Carleton was anxious to buy from him, the plaintiff. Carleton, however, was rather short of money then, and he borrowed the amount required for the purchase of the property by the execution of the hundi in question. No conveyance of the property, however, was executed by the plaintiff at that time, for reasons to which it is not necessary for [111] us to refer. Subsequently, the Byria factory, with all the lands appertaining to it, was transferred by Carleton to the other defendant, Hudson; and the correspondence, to which our attention has been called by the learned Vakils on either side in the course of the argument before us, shows distinctly that the land, which it was arranged should be conveyed by the plaintiff to Carleton, came into the hands of Hudson, and he held it for the purposes of raising indigo on it.

The suit, with which we are now concerned, was a suit instituted by the plaintiff against both Carleton and Hudson; and the relief that the plaintiff asked for was as against both the defendants. The Court of First Instance, however, held that there was no cause of action, so far as the defendant Hudson was concerned, and that the decree should go against Carleton alone; and a decree was accordingly made. From that decree, the defendant No. 1, Carleton, appealed, and one of the grounds that was set out in his petition of appeal to the Lower Appellate Court was that, inasmuch as he had sold his right and interest in the Byria factory, together with the debts due by him to the defendant No. 2, Hudson, he (the appellant) could not be held liable for the debts due to the plaintiff, and that the liability was in the proprietor of the factory. The Subordinate Judge, before whom the appeal came on for trial, was of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Hudson should be made a party respondent to the appeal, he not having been made a party to it by the defendant No. 1. Hudson was accordingly made a party, and the Sub-Judge in dealing with the merits of the case held that the defendant Hudson was liable to pay the plaintiff the money claimed. He, accordingly, modified the decree of the Court of First Instance in this wise, namely, that a decree should be made against Hudson for payment of the money claimed with costs, and that, if by execution of such decree, the plaintiff be unable to realise the whole of the decretal amount from him, then the defendant No. 1 should be made liable for the balance.

The appeal before us is by the defendant No. 2, Hudson; and it has been urged by the learned Vakild on his behalf that inasmuch [112] as no appeal had been preferred by the plaintiff against the decree of the Court of First Instance, dismissing his claim as against the defendant, Hudson, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in law with reference to the provisions of section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in making him a party respondent to the appeal preferred by the defendant No. 1. It has been further contended that inasmuch as the suit of the plaintiff, so far as the defendant No. 2 is concerned, has been based upon the allegation that the defendant No. 1, when he sold the factory to the defendant No. 2, deposited with the latter the amount covered by the hundi, and gave instructions to him to pay that money to the plaintiff, and inasmuch as that allegation has not been held by the Subordinate Judge to be proved, and also, inasmuch as the documents referred to in the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court do not warrant the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived, the decree passed by him is bad in law.

In support of the first contention raised before us, the learned Vakild for the appellant has relied upon the case of Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I.L.R., 5 All., 266, as showing that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have added Hudson as a party respondent when no appeal had been made by the plaintiff against the decree of the Court of First Instance. This case, however, has been considered in a recent case before this Court, namely, the case of Upendra Lall Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 565, where a Division Bench of the Court, disagreeing with the view expressed by the Allahabad High Court in Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I. L. R., 5 All., 266, came to the conclusion, in circumstances somewhat similar to those in the present case, that it is quite open to the Appellate Court, with reference to the terms of section 559 of the Code, to add a party as respondent to an appeal when no appeal had been made against him. We must confess that the matter is not altogether free from doubt; but having given it our best consideration we must say that our doubt is not so very strong as to necessitate our differing from [113] the view expressed in the case of Upendra Lall Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 565; and we think it is difficult to say that the defendant Hudson was not interested in the result of the appeal preferred by Carleton, or that his presence in that appeal was not necessary for the due adjudication of all the points arising in it. We might, in this connection, also refer to some of the observations of this Court in the case of Manickya Moyee v. Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 355, where, in a case where the appeal was preferred by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff omitted the name of one of the necessary defendants from the category of respondents, and this Court in appeal thought it necessary to add him as a party respondent, the learned Judges observed that they had the power to direct that that person be made a party to the appeal "inasmuch as the mortgagee respondent" (that is, the person against whom the appeal had been preferred) "has in a way a right to relief over against him, and it is proper that all questions in dispute should be settled so as to prevent as far as possible further litigation." It seems to us in this case that it was necessary for the purpose of settling all questions in dispute between the parties, and with a view to prevent future litigation in relation to the same matter, to make Hudson a party respondent to the appeal preferred by the defendant No. 1 to the Lower Appellate Court. We accordingly overrule the first objection.

With regard to the other point raised before us, no doubt the main allegation upon which the suit was brought, so far as the defendant No. 2 was concerned, was that defendant No. 1, while selling to the defendant No. 2 the Byria factory, placed in his hands the money covered by the hundi, and instructed him to deliver the same to the plaintiff. We do not know whether there is any evidence upon this record in support of this allegation; but certainly the Subordinate Judge has not come to any finding upon it. What he does find is practically that the defendant No. 2 took upon himself the liability of paying the money due under the hundi to the plaintiff when the Byria factory, with all the lands appertaining thereto, was transferred [114] to him. The letters, however, to which he refers do not by themselves warrant the conclusion at which he has arrived. But we have examined the whole of the correspondence placed before us on behalf of the appellant in this connection; and it seems to us that the letters marked A and B, coupled with what the defendant No. 2, or rather his manager, wrote in reply to the plaintiff, do indicate clearly that the defendant No. 2 did understand that after the transfer had been made to him it was he who had to pay the money covered by the hundi to the plaintiff. That being so, and it being quite clear that the land for the purchase of which this money was borrowed from the plaintiff was indisputably in his possession, though it is alleged in one of the letters that he had given up the land and left it free to the plaintiff to resume possession thereof, it seems to us that in equity the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the judgment which has been pronounced in his favour, namely, that the defendant No. 2 shall be made liable for the money claimed, and that in the event of the whole amount of such money not being recovered by the plaintiff from him, the defendant No. 1 shall be liable for the balance.

With these observations we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 544, 559 and 561—Cross-objection—Persons interested in the result of the appeal—Whether a respondent can prefer a cross-objection against another respondent—Added respondent.

In a suit for possession of land the Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit in part against the defendants. Some of the defendants appealed to the High Court without making the other defendants party respondents. The plaintiffs preferred cross-objections under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The non-appealing defendants were added [115] as respondents by an order of the High Court to the effect that they might be made parties without prejudice to any objection that might be urged on their behalf at the hearing of the appeal. The non-appealing defendants at the hearing of the appeal contended that they were wrongly made parties, and that the plaintiffs could not urge their cross-objection as against them.

Held, that the non-appealing defendants were persons, who were interested in the result of the appeal, within the meaning of section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that therefore they were rightly made parties.

Held, also, that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellant, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge a cross-objection against another respondent, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents; but as there was nothing exceptional in this case, the plaintiffs were not allowed to urge their cross-objections against the non-appealing defendants.

THE facts of this case, which fully appear from the judgment of the High Court, were as follow:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs respondents, to recover possession and mesne profits of four plots of land, some of which are covered with water, on the allegation that they appertain to their property, mouzah Dighalia, which they hold in zemindari and putni right, and from which they have been dispossessed by an order of the Joint Magistrate of Madaripore under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, dated the 10th May 1884. After the institution of the suit certain persons were added as defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred under sections 13 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiffs having sued the defendants in a previous suit in respect of a portion of the lands now in dispute in Suit No. 9 of 1864 and lost their suit; that the suit was barred by limitation, the plaintiffs not having had possession within twelve years of the lands in dispute; that the lands in dispute did not appertain to halka No. 15 of the thakbust maps to which halka the plaintiffs alleged the lands appertained, nor were the plaintiffs entitled to halka No. 15, and that the lands appertained to the defendants' estate. On behalf of the added defendants a further objection was taken, that the suit [116] was barred by the rule of three years' limitation, those defendants having been added as parties more than three years after the date of the order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure referred to in the plaint.

The Court below was of opinion that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by the principle of res judicata as to certain of the plots of land in dispute; that upon the question of limitation, as the evidence was unsatisfactory on both sides, possession should be held to follow title; and that the plaintiffs had made out their title to a portion of plot No. 1. It accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree in respect of a portion of the land in plot No. 1.

Against that decree some of the defendants preferred this appeal, and the plaintiffs filed cross-objections under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure in respect of the portion of the claim that was disallowed. The appealing defendants made the plaintiffs alone respondents in their appeal; and at the hearing of the appeal the question was raised whether, in the absence of the other defendants either as appellants or respondents, the cross-objections could be heard. Accordingly a rule was issued calling upon the non-appealing defendants to show cause why they should not be made parties to this appeal. The rule was disposed of by an order to the effect that they should be made parties without prejudice to any objection that might be urged on their behalf at the hearing of the appeal as to whether they ought to be made parties, and as to whether the cross-objections of the plaintiffs could be entertained as against them.

Babu Lal Mohun Das and Babu Horendra Nath Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Babu Sreenath Das, Babu Basant Kumar Bose, Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, Babu Pramatha Nath Sen, Babu Harakumar Mitter, and Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Stevens, JJ.) (after stating the facts of the case as above) was, so far as is material to this report, as follows:—

[117] The points urged in the appeal of the defendants are—first, that the Court below is wrong in holding that only a portion of the claim was barred by section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whereas it ought to have held that the whole of the claim was barred, partly under section 13 and partly under section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure; second, that the Court below is wrong in holding that the plaintiffs' claim was not barred by limitation, whereas upon the evidence it was clearly so barred; and, third that upon the question of title the Court below ought to have held that the plaintiffs have failed to make out their right to the lands in dispute.

For the plaintiffs, respondents, it is urged, by way of cross-objection, under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, first, that the Court below is wrong in holding that any part of the claim was barred under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure; second, that the Court below is wrong in holding that the claim as against the subsequently added defendants was barred by the rule of three years' limitation; and, third, that the Court below was wrong in holding that the title of the plaintiffs was not made out with reference to a portion of the claim, whereas it ought to have held that the plaintiffs' title had been made out with reference to the whole of the land in suit.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the defendants respondents to the hearing of the cross-objections, on the double ground of these defendants having been wrongly made respondents in the case, and of the cross-objections, not being tenable by the plaintiffs respondents against their co-respondents.

We shall deal with the appeal first and then with the cross-objections, and before disposing of the cross-objections we shall consider the preliminary objection to their tenability.

In support of the first contention urged on behalf of the appellants no tangible ground has been shown why we should hold that the land of plot No. 1 on the Amin's map was either included in the claim in the previous suit, or that the claim in respect thereof had been relinquished in that suit. In the previous suit the present plaintiffs or their predecessors in title claimed three plots of land, all lying to the east of a certain khal. That khal, [118] notwithstanding some change in position and magnitude by the shifting of its banks by encroachment or recess, is clearly shown by the evidence to be the same as the khal running north and south as shown in the present Amin's map, to the west of which lie the lands that have been decreed in favour of the plaintiffs in this suit. It cannot therefore possibly be said that any part of the land decreed in favour of the plaintiffs by the Court below formed part of the subject-matter of the former suit. Moreover, the land which the plaintiffs claimed in the former suit they claimed as being included in halkas Nos. 64 and 16, which they alleged to be their property, and no part of the lands of halka No. 15 was then in dispute; nor is it shown that the plaintiffs were then out of possession of any portion of the land now in dispute; so that it was not necessary for them to include in the former suit the lands now claimed by them. We must, therefore, hold that neither section 13 nor section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure can bar the plaintiffs' claim to the lands in respect of which a decree has been granted in their favour by the Court below.

With reference to the second point urged on behalf of the appellants, namely, that the Court below should have held that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by the twelve years' rule of limitation, we are of opinion that though the lower Court's statement of the rule of law applicable to such cases may not be quite correct, and though, where the evidence on the side of the plaintiffs is absolutely false and unsatisfactory, it may not always be safe to apply the principle that possession follows title, yet having regard to the nature of the lands in dispute, and to the nature of the evidence, we think that the safe rule to apply with reference to the claim in respect of plot No. 1 would be that possession followed title, as has been held in the cases of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis, (1880) 7 C. L. R., 364, and in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny, (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 744, in which the case of Radha Gobind Roy v. Inglis, (1880) 7 C. L. R., 364, has been explained.

[119] [The third contention was on the facts, and this portion of the judgment it is unnecessary to report.]

Coming now to the cross-objections of the plaintiffs respondents, we must first of all dispose of the preliminary objection to the hearing of the same as against the defendants other than those who have preferred the appeal. It is urged on their behalf that the right of a respondent to prefer cross-objections under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure is limited to urging them against the appellant, and that there is no right accorded to one respondent to prefer cross-objections against another respondent. In support of this contention the third paragraph of section 561 is referred to, which speaks of the acknowledgment of the appellant or his pleader, or a notice to the appellant or his pleader, in respect of the cross-objections as being a necessary preliminary, to their being entertained; and the cases of Kkermukuree Dossee v. Nilambur Mundul, (1865) 2 W. R., 227; Hassain Duksh Putooah v. Baroo Beparee, (1866) 5 W. R., 49; Tarucknath Roy v. Taboorunnissa Chowdhrair, (1867) 7 W. R., 39; Greesh Chunder Singh v. Gour Mohun Banerjee, (1867) 7 W. R., 49; Gudadhur Banerjee v. Monmohinee Dossea, (1867) 7 W. R., 366; Lallchand v. Kudmoo Koonwar, (1867) 7 W. R., 532; Goonomonee Dossia v. Parbutty Dossia, (1868) 10 W. R., 326; Anunto Dass Sein v. Ramjoy Sein, (1869) 11 W. R., 435; Anwar Jan Bibee v. Azmut Ali, (1871) 15 W. R., 26; Sharoda Soonduree Debee v. Gobind Monee, (1875) 24 W. R., 179, and Atma Ram v. Balkishen, (1883) I. L. R., 5 All., 266, are relied upon by the learned Vakils for the defendants respondents. On the other hand, it is urged for the plaintiffs respondents that the defendants respondents being clearly interested in the result of the appeal, which necessarily includes the result of the cross-objections, at least as against the appealing defendants, they have been rightly made parties under section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and they being thus before the Court at the hearing of the appeal and of the cross-objections, if the Court is satisfied upon the cross-objections (which must be heard) that the judgment of the Court [120] below is wrong, there is nothing in the law to prevent it from doing full justice and from reversing or altering the decree of the Court below upon the cross-objections, not only as against the appealing defendants, but also as against the defendants who have been subsequently brought on the record as party respondents. It was further urged that the rule that one respondent cannot urge cross-objections as against another respondent cannot be correct in its broad generality, but must be taken subject at least to one exception, namely, that when a case in the Court below proceeds upon a common ground with reference to all the defendants, in an appeal by some of them only, cross-objections against all of them may be urged, just as in an appeal by some of them the entire decree may be set aside under section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure in favour of all the defendants. And in support of this view the case of Anund Chunder Goopto v. Mohesh Chunder Mozoomdar, (1864) 1 W. R., 226; Pran Kishore Deb v. Mahomed Ameer, (1874) 21 W. R., 338; Timmayya Mada v. Lakshmana Bhakta, (1883) I. L. R., 7 Mad., 215, and Upendra Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 565, have been referred to.

The question raised in the preliminary objection, which has given rise to some conflict of decisions, is not altogether free from difficulty. There are no doubt considerations both ways. On the one hand, it may be said that the right of urging cross objections on the part of the respondent ought to be limited to urging them as against those of his adversaries in the Court below, who are dissatisfied with the decree of that Court, and who have preferred an appeal against the same, and that other parties, who have not preferred any appeal against the decree of the Court below, and against whom no appeal has been preferred, ought to be left unaffected by the appeal, except so far as it may benefit them under the provisions of section 544. On the other hand, it may be urged that cases may arise in which the appeal of some only of the defendants or of the plaintiffs may open up matters which render it necessary for the ends of justice that the [121] whole case should be gone into, and some of the respondents should be allowed the opportunity of urging cross-objections against their co-respondents.

Upon a consideration of the cases cited and of the arguments on both sides, we think that there are two questions that have to be separately considered—first, whether the non-appealing defendants have been rightly added as respondents; and, second, whether, if they have rightly been added as respondents, it is open to the plaintiffs respondents to urge cross-objections against them.

With reference to the first question we think that the answer should be in the affirmative. Upon the appeal of the defendants appellants the plaintiffs have taken cross-objections which must be maintainable against the appealing defendants; and if they are successful, they may result in letting the plaintiffs into possession of the lands in respect of which the plaintiffs' claim has been dismissed in the Court below, at least to the extent of the shares of the appealing defendants, and may thus affect the non-appealing defendants by introducing strangers who may interfere with their possession. It must, therefore, be held that the non-appealing defendants are persons who are interested in the result of the appeal within the meaning of section 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, if that is so, they have been rightly made parties.

Upon the second question, we are of opinion that no hard and fast rule can be laid down, and that the correct principle deducible from the cases cited may be shortly stated thus. As a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants; and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross-objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good (we do not attempt to lay down any definite exhaustive rule on the point) among other cases in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co-respondents. One instance of this kind is to be found in cases of the class considered in Upendra [122] Lal Mukerjee v. Girindra Nath Mukerjee, (1898) I.L.R., 25 Cal., 565. The view we take is in accordance with that taken in the case of Anwar Jan Bibee v. Azmut Ali, (1871) 15 W. R., 26, where the learned Judges observe: "It has been held in a long series of decisions that the cross-appeal cannot reopen any questions which have been decided between co-respondents, but must have reference to the appellant, and the points which are in dispute between the respondent, who takes the cross-appeal and the appellant. It is quite possible that there may be cases in which, when an appellant succeeds in his appeal, questions will be opened up as between the co-respondents, which would otherwise have been decided, and it is also possible when interests are identical that a respondent succeeding in his cross-appeal may open up questions as between himself and his co-respondents."

That being our view of the law, let us see whether there is any thing exceptional in this case that would justify the plaintiffs respondents urging their cross-objections as against the non-appealing defendants. We are of opinion that the question ought to be answered in the negative. The plaintiffs respondents laid claim to certain plots of land. Their claim was decreed only in part. They did not prefer any appeal against that part of the decree which dismissed their claim, or more correctly speaking they preferred an appeal, but it was found to be out of time and the petition of appeal was returned. Thereupon they contented themselves with preferring cross-objections with reference to the portions of the claim that had been disallowed. The appeal, however, in which they urged these cross-objections was at the instance of some only of the defendants in the case, the remaining defendants having been apparently satisfied with the decree that was made against them. Is there anything in justice which ought to entitle the plaintiffs to say that notwithstanding that they did not do that which was their proper course, namely, prefer an appeal against that portion of the decree, which went against them, they are entitled upon the appeal of some only of their adversaries in the Court below to open up the whole case as against the other defendants, [123] who were satisfied with the decree? As we have said above the ground upon which this right of theirs is sought to be based is that ~~as~~ the cross-objections must be heard as against the appealing defendants, and as the remaining defendants are on the record, if the Court is satisfied upon the cross-objections that the decree of the Court below is wrong on any point it ought not to allow the erroneous decree to remain in force and perpetuate an injustice when there is nothing expressly laid down in the law to prevent its doing full justice. We do not think that that is a correct way of stating the point. The correct way of stating it would be this, namely, whether upon the cross-objections of the plaintiffs, which must be heard as regards the appealing defendants, if the Appellate Court finds that the decree of the Court below is wrong, it ought nevertheless to allow such erroneous decree to stand and to abstain from rectifying it in full and thereby doing complete justice on the ground of the plaintiffs having deprived themselves of such measure of justice by their default in preferring an appeal in time, and when the question is thus stated the answer to it should evidently be in the affirmative, unless there be any exceptional reasons in the case. We may add that there is one important consideration pointed out in the argument on behalf of the defendants respondents, which strongly supports the view we take, namely, that to allow the plaintiffs in such a case to urge their cross-objections against the non-appealing defendants would be to place those defendants in a situation of risk, without their having done anything to incur that risk, and without their being able to withdraw themselves from that position. In the case of the appellants if any cross-objections are urged against them by the plaintiffs respondents they have the option of withdrawing the appeal and thereby preventing the cross-objections being heard, if upon consideration they find it better for them to allow the decree of the Court below to stand as it is. In the case of persons in the situation of the non-appealing defendants, they have not the power of withdrawing from the position of risk in which they may be placed, not by any action of their own, but merely by the action of their fellow-defendants or fellow-plaintiffs as the case may be.

[124] In this view of the matter, it becomes unnecessary to consider the special argument, which was addressed to us on behalf of those of the defendants respondents against whom the suit was dismissed in the Court below on the ground of three years' limitation—a ground which is not common to them, and to the other defendants. If, however, it were necessary to say anything on this point, we should simply have said that the main reason upon which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs respondents bases the right of his clients to urge their cross-objections against the non-appealing defendants, namely, the fact of the case in the Court below having proceeded upon a common ground, could not apply to those defendants.

[The Court then considered the cross-objections as against the appealing defendants, and the decision being on the facts it is unnecessary to report it. The judgment concluded as follows.]

This disposes of all the contentions raised by way of cross-objection.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs, subject to the modification referred to above, namely, that the decree of the lower Court should not extend beyond the thuk line of mouzah Deghalia as shown on the Amin's map; and the cross-objections must be disallowed with costs.

The defendants respondents will get separate costs. The chittas must be treated as papers printed for the purposes of the cross-objections.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

In the matter of the application of H. C. Studd and others.*

Practice—Remission of Process fees—Rules of High Court, Calcutta, Chapter XIV—Process fees—Remission of fees in analogous appeals by the same appellants.

Where twenty-nine appeals were presented by certain appellants, and an application was made for remission of process fees, and that only five sets of process fees instead of twenty-nine should be charged under Chapter XIV [125] of the Rules of High Court, on the ground that the appeals were analogous and on behalf of the same appellant, the Court (GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ.), refused the application.

Held, by RAMPINI, J., that the High Court has no power to grant the remission, and that the fees prescribed by the rules must be levied.

THIS was an application on behalf of the appellants in twenty-nine analogous appeals, praying that five sets of process fees instead of twenty-nine might be charged for serving notices of appeal to the respondents in all the appeals.

Babu Sorashi Charan Mitra, for the applicant, contended that the practice of the Court was to grant remission in analogous appeals by the same appellant, and there was nothing in the Rules of the Court which prevented the Court from exercising its discretion in such matters. Under section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court may pass any order it thinks proper as regards the process fees.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ.)

Ghose, J.—I have considered the application of the petitioners for leave to put in five, instead of the twenty-nine, sets of process fees required by the Rules of the Court on the subject; and I think that no sufficient ground has been made out for the granting of such indulgence. I accordingly refuse the application.

I express no opinion upon the question whether or not the Court has the power to relax in any case the process fee rules.

Rampini, J.—In this case, in consideration of his presenting twenty-nine analogous appeals, the applicant applies for a relaxation of the High Court process fee rules, and prays that five sets instead of twenty-nine sets of process fees may be levied. There has hitherto been some diversity of practice in this

* Civil Order No. 2773 of 1898.

Court in respect of this matter, some Benches readily granting a relaxation of these rules, and others refusing to do so.

I am of opinion that this Court has no power to relax the process fee rules in any way. Process fees are levied under the Rules framed by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of section 20 of the Court-fees Act. These rules have the force of law and therefore must be followed, and though the [126] High Court may from time to time alter and add to the Rules, it is necessary that the altered Rules should before being put in force be confirmed by the Local Government and sanctioned by the Governor-General of India in Council.

Now, the Rules which have been drawn up by this Court on the authority of this provision of the law are to be found in Chapter XIV of the High Court Rules for the Appellate Side of the Court, and it is by them prescribed that certain fees are to be levied on the processes issued in each case. It is to be observed that no power is given by these Rules to relax them or to remit the fees in any case whatever, and it appears to me that in these circumstances they cannot be relaxed, and that the fees prescribed by them must be levied, there being no power given to the Court to remit them. The absence in Chapter XIV of all power to relax the Rules or remit the fees is the more noticeable, as in Chapter IX of the High Court Rules, which relates to the preparation of the paper books in appeals from appellate decrees, by clause 11 of Rule 8, power is given to the Court upon the application of any party and upon good and sufficient reason being shown to give such special directions, as to any of the matters to which the Rules in Chapter IX relate, as it may deem fit and even by special order to exempt any party from the operation of any portion of those Rules. The absence of any analogous provisions in Chapter XIV in my opinion points to the conclusion that no discretion is given to the Court in any way to remit the process fees or to depart from the rules relating to them in any respect.

The learned pleader for the applicant, however, argues that, though such power may not be given to the Court by the High Court Rules on the subject, such power is given by section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code, which prescribes that "every process issued under this Code shall be served at the expense of the party on whose behalf it is issued, unless the Court otherwise directs." But this provision of the Civil Procedure Code does not appear to me to give a Court any power to depart from the Rules of the High Court on the subject of the levy of process fees, or to remit these fees. The section relates to the payment of process fees by the parties to a suit, and gives the Court [127] acting judicially power to make an order between party and party only, as to who should pay the process fees. It does not expressly give power to remit the fees, or what comes to the same thing, to order that the process should be served free, or, in other words, at the expense of Government, and in the present cases we cannot, I think, make such an order under section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code, seeing that the Government is no party to the suits.

For these reasons I am of opinion that there is no power anywhere given under which we could comply with the application of the pleader for the appellants in these cases, and I would, therefore, refuse it.

Application refused.

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Jogendra Nath Gossain and another

Debendra Nath Gossain.*

Receiver—Mortgage decree—Execution of mortgage decree by sale of properties in the possession of the Receiver.

A judgment-creditor can sell properties in the hands of a Receiver of the Court in execution of a mortgage decree, although he cannot execute a decree against such properties by way of attachment and sale.

Semle—A proceeding by way of attachment is an interference with the possession of the Receiver.

Hem Chunder Chunder v. Prankristo Chunder, (1876) 1 L.R., 1 Cal., 403, distinguished.

IN this case a Receiver had been appointed in a partition suit in which a decree had been made declaring the rights of the parties and directing the usual accounts and enquiries. During the partition proceedings and after the appointment of the Receiver two of the co-sharers mortgaged their interest in the undivided properties. The mortgagee obtained a decree on his [128] mortgage and sought to bring to sale certain properties which were included in his mortgage, but which were then in the hands of the Receiver.

A rule was obtained by the judgment-debtors calling on the judgment-creditor to show cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding to a sale of the properties in the hands of the Receiver, on the ground that to sell the mortgaged properties without the leave or sanction of this Court would amount to contempt of Court.

At the hearing of the rule—

Mr. L. P. Pugh for the judgment-debtor.

Mr. A. M. Dunne for the judgment-creditor.

Sale, J.—This is a rule calling on the judgment-creditor, who has obtained a decree on his mortgage under the Transfer of Property Act in the Alipore Court, to shew cause why he should not be restrained from proceeding to a sale of certain properties which are included in his mortgage, but which are now in the hands of the Receiver of this Court.

The suit in which this application is made, and in which the Receiver was appointed, is a partition suit in which a decree was made declaring the rights of the parties and directing the usual accounts and enquiries.

It appears that pending the partition proceedings and after the appointment of a Receiver two of the co-sharers mortgaged their interest in the undivided properties to the judgment-creditor. Some of the mortgaged properties being within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court the mortgagee instituted his suit in that Court, and seeks to bring to sale the particular properties mentioned in the rule, some of which are situated in Calcutta. The judgment-debtors, after obtaining several postponements of the sale for the purpose of paying off the judgment-creditor, now apply to restrain the mortgagee from proceeding to a sale on the ground that to sell the mortgaged properties without the leave or sanction of this Court would amount to contempt of Court. But the sale of the properties under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act can have no other effect, so far as the possession or [129] control of the Receiver is concerned, than a private sale by the mortgagors themselves. To obtain the benefits of his purchase and the rights incident thereto, the purchaser must seek the intervention of this Court, and he will be bound by all the proceedings in the partition suit in this Court.

This is not a case where the judgment-creditor is proceeding to execute his decree by attachment. This Court does not permit and will not recognise attachment of the properties in the hands of its Receiver, under process issued without sanction or leave, by inferior Courts, the reason being that a proceeding by way of attachment is an interference with the possession of the Receiver. But as the element of interference with the possession of the Receiver is absent from the present case there is no reason for restraining the sale. The case of Hem Chunder Chunder v. Prankristo Chunder, (1876) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 403, is distinguishable, inasmuch as the judgment-creditor in that case, if he had proceeded to execute his decree in the Mofussil Court, could have done so only by way of attachment and sale.

Under the Transfer of Property Act no attachment is necessary, and the reason for the course adopted in the former case does not now exist.

The result is that the rule must be discharged with costs, and the judgment-debtors must in pursuance of their undertaking also pay all costs occasioned by the interim stay of the sale.

[130] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th July, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhry.....Plaintiff

Promotha Nath Bhattacharjee and others.....Defendants.*

Interest—Interest on arrears of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 67, 178, sub-section 3, cl. (h) and 179—Contract to pay interest at higher rate than allowed by s. 67 of the Act.

A contract by a tenant holding under a permanent mokarari lease to pay interest on the arrears of rent at a higher rate than 12 per cent. per annum is not enforceable in law.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows:—

The question involved in this appeal is whether, having regard to the provisions of sections 178 and 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a contract by a tenant holding under a permanent mokarari lease to pay interest on the arrears of rent at a higher rate than 12 per cent. per annum is enforceable in law.

The plaintiff brought this suit to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 244 for arrears of rent and interest; the interest calculated being at the rate of one anna per rupee per month, according to the terms of a registered kabulnat executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff. This document is printed at page 6 of the paper book. It purports to create a permanent mokarari lease, and was admittedly executed after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[131] The Munsif made a decree in favour of the plaintiff in terms of his prayer. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge has varied the amount of interest awarded by the Munsif, and directed that the plaintiff should recover interest at the rate of 12 per cent. only. He was of opinion that section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not override the provisions of clause (h), section 178, relating to the payment of interest on arrears of rent.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and the contention on his behalf is that under section 179 the plaintiff is entitled to recover the interest agreed upon between the parties by their contract, and that the provisions of clause (h), section 178, do not affect the express terms of section 179. The sole question in this case is what is the meaning to be attached to the provisions of section 179, and whether in the case of tenants holding permanent tenures a contract to pay interest not in accordance with the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be regarded as valid in law. No authority has been cited on either side, and we must therefore deal with the point on general principles. Sub-section 3, clause (h), section 178, provides as follows: "Nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of this Act shall affect the provisions of section 67 relating to interest payable on arrears of rent." Section 67 provides that "an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the expiration of that quarter of the agricultural year in which the instalment falls due to the institution of the suit." It will be observed that the expression "tenant" in sub-section 3, clause (h) is of a general character. Section 5, which defines the word "tenant," is as follows: "'Tenant,' means a person who holds land under another person, and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent for that land to that person." Sub-section 3, clause (h), section 178, therefore includes tenants holding under mokarari leases. Section 179 provides "that nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent a proprietor or a holder of a permanent tenure in a permanently settled area from granting a permanent mokarari lease on any terms agreed on between him and his tenant." It is obvious that if the argument put forward [132] by the appellant be well-founded, we must hold that the Legislature intended by section 179 to repeal what it had expressly enacted by clause (h), sub-section 3, section 178. It may be observed that if this had been the intention of the Legislature nothing would have been easier than to include a saving clause to that effect in the clause referred to. Now, it is a well recognised principle in the interpretation of Statutes that an Act of the Legislature should be so construed as to give effect, so far as possible, to all its enactments; nor must it be so construed as to allow one provision to stultify the other. The question, which we have to determine, is whether there is anything in section 179 by which the Legislature intended to override the provisions of clause (h), sub-section 3, section 178. In order to answer the question it is necessary to bear in mind that ordinarily speaking the word "terms" used in connection with a lease does not include a condition relating to interest upon arrears of rent. In Redmond on Landlord and Tenant, p. 52, will be found a passage showing exactly the matter included in "the terms of a lease." Did the Legislature use the expression "terms" in section 179 of the Tenancy Act in its ordinary legal acceptation, or did it intend to give the word a wider meaning? Having regard to the provisions contained in section 67 and clause (h), sub-section 3, section 178, we are not prepared to say that it had the latter object in view. If that had been the intention it would have avoided the expression "terms," which conveys a distinctive signification in the treatises on the law relating to landlords and tenants, and employed instead the more comprehensive word "conditions." Then, again, it is to be observed that (apart from special legislation) it was considered at one time doubtful whether the holders of permanent tenures generally had the power to create permanent under-tenures. Under s. 3 of the Bengal Regulation of 1812 the proprietors alone were so authorised, and it is by no means improbable that the Legislature intended by section 179 to vest the holders of permanent tenures generally with the right of granting permanent mokarari leases on any terms agreed upon between the parties which did not contravene the substantive provisions of the law. However that may be, it seems to us that we ought not to put such a construction on section 179 [133] as would have the effect of nullifying, with respect to an important body of tenants, the enactment in the previous section.

For these reasons, as at present advised, we think that the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge in this case is correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 7th December, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

In the matter of Fakaruddin Mahomed Chowdhry, a Minor, Hafiz Aminuddin Ahmed.....Appellant

G. L. Garth and another.....Respondents.*

*Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), section 14—Proceedings for appointment of a guardian in more Courts than one—Report by District Court to High Court—Direction by Chief Justice—
Powers of High Court—Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, section 17—Jurisdiction—Costs.*

Section 14† of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) does not apply to the High Court in the exercise of its Original Civil jurisdiction; and the terms "report" in clause (2) of that section refers not to a judicial reference, but to a ministerial act.

Proceedings had been taken, for the appointment of a guardian of a minor, under that section, in the High Court and afterwards in a Mofussil Court. The latter reported the case to the High Court; and the Chief Justice thereupon directed that the proceedings in the Mofussil Court should be stayed, and that a Judge of the Original Side of the High Court should hear and determine the matter.

Held, that such direction was in order, and that the Judge who determined the matter had jurisdiction to do so.

* Appeal from order No. 4 of 1898.

† (Sec. 14 :—(1) If proceedings for the appointment or declaration of a guardian of a minor are taken in more Courts than one, each of those Courts shall, on being apprised of the proceedings in the other Court or Courts, stay the proceedings before itself.

(2) If the Courts are both or all subordinate to the same High Court, they shall report the case to the High Court, and the High Court shall determine in which of the Courts the proceedings with respect to the appointment or declaration of a guardian of the minor shall be had.

(3) In any other case in which proceedings are stayed under sub-section (1), the Courts shall report the case through the Local Government to the Governor-General in Council, and the Governor-General in Council shall determine in which of the Courts the proceedings with respect to the appointment or declaration of a guardian of the minor shall be had.)

Held, also, that although a petitioner had failed in his application on all points except the removal of the guardian, he was entitled to his costs up to and including the order removing the guardian, as he must be taken to have acted, so far, for the benefit of the minor.

THE appellant, the father-in-law of the above named minor, presented, before SALE, J., a petition for the removal of the minor's [134] mother from her position as guardian of the person of the infant. A rule issued, calling upon the mother to show cause why she should not be removed, and, after the hearing, it was made absolute. The respondent, Mr. Garth, who had, by an order of Court, been appointed guardian of a certain portion of the minor's estate, which was to be mortgaged under a scheme, was allowed to appear on the hearing of the rule. The order of SALE, J., further directed a reference to the Registrar to inquire and report who was a fit and proper person to be the guardian of the minor's person, and gave Mr. Garth leave to appear on the reference for the purpose of assisting the Registrar. By his report, the Registrar found that Moulvie Mahomed Wajid, of Barisal, was a fit and proper person to be the guardian.

Exceptions were taken to that report mainly on the ground that the minor having ceased to reside within the jurisdiction of the Court, SALE, J., could not entertain the matter. The report, however, was confirmed, but the learned Judge declined to allow the petitioner his costs. Afterwards, on the 13th September 1897, the petitioner presented a petition, in the district Court of Barisal, for the appointment of himself as guardian of the minor's person. The District Judge, acting under section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) reported the case to the High Court on the 12th December. The Chief Justice directed that the proceedings in the Barisal Court should be stayed, and deputed SALE, J., to continue to hear and determine the matter; and, on the 7th January, the last named Judge confirmed the Registrar's report.

The petitioner appealed.

Mr. K. N. Sen Gupta for the Appellant. —The lower Court had no jurisdiction to make the order now appealed from, because the minor was residing not in Calcutta, but at Barisal; and the Barisal Court alone had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter. The person appointed is not a fit and proper person; he intends to deal with the property of the minor in a manner prejudicial to the minor's interests. The order of the Chief Justice directing SALE, J., to hear and determine the application was ultra vires. Section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act directs "the Courts" to refer the matter to the High Court; and all [135] references from a Provincial Court must be heard by a division Bench of the High Court, under rule 3 of the Rules of the Appellate Side, and not by a Judge exercising Original Civil jurisdiction.

Mr. Dunne for G. L. Garth (and who was allowed to address the Court only as amicus curiæ): It is impossible that the words "the Court" in section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act should apply, because such a meaning is repugnant to the context, inasmuch as a "Court subordinate to the High Court" cannot be the High Court itself. Rule 51 of the Rules and Orders of the High Court provides that all the powers conferred on the High Court by the Letters Patent may be exercised by a single Judge. In this case, therefore, SALE, J., was "the High Court". Again, if section 14, clause (2), is to apply to the High Court, the High Court must "report the case"; but to whom could it report? The meaning of the section is that where there are proceedings in two Courts subordinate to the same High Court, they must stay their hands, and leave it to the Appellate Court to decide which of them shall try the case. The "report" mentioned in clause (2) does not mean a judicial reference; the word is not "reference" but "report," and it indicates a purely ministerial act; and the direction of the Chief Justice merely was that SALE, J., should continue to hear the matter, which was already properly before him, and that the proceedings at Barisal should be stayed; and it was perfectly in order. Section 47 of the Act also shows that the expression "District Court," as there used, is not intended to include the High Court.

Mr. Sen Gupta, in reply.—The term "the Court" must mean the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction, and "District Court" is to bear the same meaning as is assigned to that expression in the Civil Procedure Code, i.e., it includes the High Court. If this be held to lead to a repugnancy in the context, then clause (3) of section 14 of the Guardian and Wards Act which provides for "other cases" must apply.

Mr. W. M. Dass, for a relation of the minor, was not called upon.

[136] The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.):—

Maclean, C.J.—Three points have been argued before us upon this appeal. The first is, that the Court below had no jurisdiction to make the order appealed from. The order was made upon the application of the present appellant himself, who is now, for most obvious reasons, saying that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it. In my opinion the Court had ample jurisdiction to make the order.

It is clear upon the evidence, the appellant's own evidence, that the minor ordinarily resided in Calcutta, and that being so, under section 9 of the Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890, the Court below had ample jurisdiction to deal with the application.

The second point is, that having regard to the provisions of section 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act, the gentleman appointed as guardian was not a fit and proper person for the purpose. Hardly any argument, or anything worth calling an argument, has been addressed to us upon this point, which is absolutely untenable.

The third point is one of more importance. It is urged that the direction given to Mr. Justice SALE by myself, as Chief Justice, to determine the matters in dispute, was unauthorised having regard to the language of section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act. The short facts are these: The present appellant presented a petition on the Original Side of this Court, asking for the removal of the mother of the minor from her position of guardian of his person and property, and for the substitution of himself in her place. A rule was obtained calling upon the mother to show cause, and in the result the mother was removed, and Mr. Justice SALE, who tried the matter, directed an enquiry to be held before the Registrar, to ascertain and report who would be a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian in her place. That enquiry proceeded, and I do not think it is an unfair inference to draw from what appears in the case that the present appellant, finding that he was not likely to be appointed guardian (an office which he obviously desired) instituted fresh proceedings in the [137] District Court at Backergunge, asking for the same relief, which he had sought by his previous application before Mr. Justice SALE, alleging that the property of the minor was within the jurisdiction of the District Court and not of this Court on its Original Side. This was a most improper application. The District Judge, purporting to act under section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act, reported the matter to this Court on the 12th November 1897, and when the matter was brought before me, I determined that Mr. Justice SALE should deal with it; consequently the reference proceeded, the Registrar made his report, and Mr. Justice SALE, upon the matter coming before him on the 7th of January 1898, confirmed that report, and appointed a fit and proper person to be the minor's guardian.

It is from that order that the present appeal is preferred ; and it is urged before us that Mr. Justice SALE had no jurisdiction to try the case, and that the reference of the case to him by myself was bad, inasmuch as the order of reference ought to have been made by a Division Bench of this Court under Rule 3 of Chapter II of the Rules of the High Court, Appellate Side. I will deal with this objection at once.

That rule deals with references, and " references " in the ordinary acceptation of that term. Under section 14, the District Judge has only to report the case, not to refer it, and all the Judge did was to report it. The " references " referred to in Rule 3 are those which are to be heard and determined judicially, and do not apply to such a report as was made by the District Judge in this case.

However, as in my opinion section 14 does not apply to a case such as the present, whether the matter ought to have been dealt with by a Division Bench or by the Chief Justice, is a matter of no real moment. In my opinion when proceedings have been taken on the Original Side of this Court and also in a District Court, the section does not apply.

Section 14 says this : " If proceedings for the appointment or declaration of a guardian of a minor are taken in more Courts than one, each of those Courts shall, on being apprised of the proceedings in the other Court or Courts, stay the proceedings [138] before itself." If the section had stopped there it would have been a difficult matter to contend, successfully, that the word " Courts " did not cover every Court, and consequently embraced a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. But to appreciate what the Legislature intended we must look at the whole section, and moreover, the whole Act. Sub-section 2 of section 14 runs as follows : " If the Courts are both or all subordinate to the same High Court, they shall report the case to the High Court, and the High Court shall determine in which of the Courts the proceedings with respect to the appointment or declaration of a guardian shall be had."

" The Courts " referred to in this sub-section must mean the Courts referred to in sub-section 1.

Then it is argued for the appellant that looking at the definition of " the Courts " in the definition clause (clause 4) " the Court " means the " District Court " and the " District Court " includes " a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction." This is ingenious, but it is fallacious. In the first place the definition only applies " unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context," and in section 3 " nothing in this Act shall be construed to take away any power possessed by any High Court established under the Statute 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104." It is not disputed that this High Court in the exercise of its ordinary civil jurisdiction, having regard to section 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865, had power to deal with questions relating to the appointment of guardians of a minor's person and property, and, if so, it could not have been intended that such a Court should be included in section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act, so as to make it compulsory on that Court to stay the proceedings before itself. If it were otherwise, we should be construing the Act so as to take away, and in a most direct form, a power, and a most useful and important power, possessed by the High Court, which section 3 says is not to be done. If, then, this High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is not within sub-section 1 of section 14, that Court was not bound to stay the proceedings before itself, and I am not conscious of any power either [139] in a Division Bench of the Appellate Side of the High Court, or in the Chief Justice to stay such proceedings.

In this view Mr. Justice SALE was clearly entitled to proceed with the case, and without any direction from myself.

In my opinion the case of two petitions being presented, one in a District Court and one in this Court exercising its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, is one not covered by, and not contemplated by the Legislature under section 14, and that section was never intended to interfere with the clear right of this Court on its Original Side, to deal with the question of the appointment of guardians to minors. If, then, the case be not within sub-section 1 of section 14, as, in my opinion, it clearly is not, sub-sections 2 and 3 have no application. It is not necessary, in the view I take, to decide it; but had it been necessary, it is at least doubtful whether if "the Court," in sub-section (2) be read as including a High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, such a reading would not have been repugnant both to the subject and the context of the section.

The appellant, therefore, fails on all the above points and the appeal must be dismissed.

As regards the question of costs, loth as I am to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned Judge in the Court below, I can see no good reason why the appellant should have been deprived of his costs up to and including the hearing of the rule. The learned Judge gives no reason for refusing the appellant these costs. He succeeded in his application to have the mother removed, and it must be taken that this, which was done at his instance, was for the minor's benefit.

In my opinion he is entitled to have his costs out of the minor's estate up to and including the hearing of the rule, but nothing more. The order must be modified to this extent.

As regards the costs of the appeal, there will be no costs: for there is no respondent properly served. We give liberty, however, as Mr. Justice SALE did, to the guardian of the minor to allow the costs of Mr. GARTH, who has only been heard as amicus curiæ, and who has assisted the Court, out of the minor's estate which may come to his hands.

[140] Prinsep, J.—I desire only to add a few words with reference to section 14 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890). In all other respects, I agree entirely with the judgment that has been just now delivered by my Lord, the Chief Justice.

The present proceedings were commenced by an application made by the present appellant before the Original Side of this Court, under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, for the removal of the guardian previously appointed by a Judge sitting on the Original Side of the High Court, and for the appointment of himself as guardian. After the case had so far proceeded that it had been referred for enquiry to the Registrar as to the appointment of some particular person as a fit guardian of the minor, the petitioner applied to the District Judge of Backergunge under the Act, for the appointment of a guardian, alleging that that Court had jurisdiction over the matter. On hearing that proceedings had already been taken on the Original Side of this Court, the District Judge of Backergunge stayed his proceedings under section 14, sub-section (1), and reported to this Court under sub-section (2). There can be no doubt that the application made under such circumstances to the District Judge of Backergunge was not bond fide.

The petitioner had already complained in his petition to the Original Side of the High Court, of the conduct of the guardian living with the minor in Calcutta, to the detriment of the estate. He, therefore, admitted the jurisdiction of this Court; but it appeared that in the course of the proceedings the mother of the minor removed with the minor to Backergunge. It does not appear whether she removed permanently or temporarily. At all events this Court had ample jurisdiction to try the case when the petition was made.

In regard to the application of section 14 of the Act, that is to say, whether it applies to a matter before the Original Side of this Court, and to the same matter raised in the District Court outside of Calcutta, I should, myself, feel little difficulty in holding that it did apply, were it not for the terms of the last part of section 3 of the same Act—that saves the jurisdiction of the High Court established under Statute 24 and 25 Victoria, Chapter 104; and a reference to that Statute shows that the powers previously conferred on and exercised by the Supreme Court, to which the High Court has succeeded, were reserved for the High Court on its Original Side; and even having regard to the terms of section 3 and the definition of "High Court" given in the General Clauses Act, 1868, I find myself unable to hold that section 14 has in any way curtailed this jurisdiction of the Original Side of the High Court.

I, therefore, agree with the view expressed by my Lord, the Chief Justice, in holding that section 14 does not apply to any case before the Original Side of this Court, and that the report made by the District Judge of Backergunge was properly dealt with by referring it to the learned Judge before whom proceedings had been taken on the Original Side.

Ameer Ali, J.—I agree in holding that section 14 of Act VIII of 1890 (Guardians and Wards Act) does not apply to the Original Side of this Court. I only wish to add a few words with reference to Mr. Sen Gupta's contention that inasmuch as appeals are allowed from the Original Side of the High Court, it, that is, the Original Side, must, therefore, be regarded as subordinate to the Appellate Side of the same Court. Under section 14 of 24 and 25 Victoria Chapter 104, the Chief Justice of the High Court had power to determine what Judge in each case shall sit alone and what Judges of the Court, whether with or without the Chief Justice, shall constitute the several Division Courts. Ordinarily the Chief Justice determines that two Judges shall sit separately to try the cases arising within the original jurisdiction of the High Court, but two Judges are sometimes appointed to sit together. Section 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, gives a right of appeal from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court, or from the judgment of two or more Judges wherever such Judges are equally divided in opinion and do not amount in number to a majority of the whole of the Judges of the High Court at the time being, but not from other judgments except to the Privy Council. So that if one Judge of the High Court is appointed to sit alone in the exercise of original jurisdiction his decisions would be appealable to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction. This would also be the case if two Judges sat together in the exercise of original jurisdiction and disagreed. If two or more Judges forming a Division Bench on the Original Side [142] are agreed, there would be no right of appeal except to the Privy Council. Similarly on the Appellate Side, when two Judges sit together and they disagree, the judgment of the Court below is appealable to the High Court.

If the contention put forward with reference to the subordination of the Original Side of the Court, merely because an appeal was given from the decision of a single Judge, were correct it would follow that every Division Bench of this Court would be subordinate to some other Division Bench of the High Court. Again it must be remembered that rules of procedure, either for the Original Side or the Appellate Side, cannot be made except by the whole Court, thus showing that the Original Side of the Court is an integral part of the High Court. The mere statement of these facts is, it seems to me, sufficient to show that it could not have been intended that the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction should be treated as subordinate to any other part of the same Court.

I, therefore, agree with my Lord in dismissing the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Attorney for the Appellant: Mr. G. A. Smith.

Attorneys for the Respondents: Messrs. Sanderson & Co. (for Mr. Garth), and Babu Raj Mohon Dass (for Golam Obad Chowdhry).

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 20th, 21st and 22nd June and 13th July, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE P. O'KINEALY.

Motichand and another

Fulchand and another.*

Contract—Sale of Goods—Offer of Performance—Tender of railway receipts indorsed in blank—Goods not available—Goods subject to demurrage or freight—Duty of seller.

P agreed to sell and F to buy certain goods to be delivered to F in April-May 1897. The contract of sale contained (inter alia) the following clauses :—

"(10) The goods to be tendered fully 48 hours before the expiration of the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company in order to [143] enable buyers to weigh sample, and inspect the same; and the delivery not to be considered complete until the samples have been refracted and examined, and any dispute about quality, &c., settled.

"(11) If railway receipt be tendered, such to be handed to buyers 48 hours before the goods are liable to demurrage under the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company."

P, not having, before the 31st May, goods of his own to meet the contract, arranged with H for certain goods of H's to be delivered under it and tendered to F. On that day, certain railway receipts, which had been indorsed in blank by H, in respect of the said goods, were tendered to F. F was ready to pay for the goods; but, before tendering the price, he insisted upon an endorsement of the railway receipts by H to P and by P to himself. P was unable to point out the goods to be delivered under the contract, nor could he indicate the wagon-numbers. P refused to procure the endorsements, required by F, and thereupon F declined to take delivery as proposed, though he tendered the price in exchange for the goods.

Held, that, F not having had an opportunity of inspecting the goods as provided by the contract, the tender made as aforesaid by P was not such an offer of performance of the contract as F was bound to accept.

Held, also, that F was not bound to accept a tender of railway receipt for goods subject (as some of these were) to demurrage, nor for goods on which freight had not been paid (as was the case with some of these goods), nor for goods that were not available on the 31st May, as in the present case.

In order to establish a valid tender of the goods, it was for P to show that had F taken the railway receipts, the railway company would have been bound to deliver the goods upon production of the receipts; and F was under no duty to point out to P that the tender was defective. F's duty under the contract arose when a sufficient tender was made to him, and not till then.

Failure to justify an alleged breach of contract upon one ground only, which is found insufficient, does not disentitle the defendant to rely upon other grounds which his rights under the contract entitle him to rely upon. Cowan v. Milburn (1867) L. R., 2 Exch., 230, and Mothoormohun Roy v. Bank of Bengal, (1878) I. L. R. 3 Cal., 392, referred to.

On the 29th September 1896 the defendant Fulchand contracted with one Pursottom Lall to purchase from him 50 tons of linseed; and on the 23rd October he contracted to buy 100 tons of wheat. Both the linseed and the wheat were to be delivered at the Howrah Railway Station in April-May 1897.

[144] The contracts contained (inter alia) the clauses set forth in the foregoing head note.

Until the 30th or 31st May, the seller had no goods to deliver; but on the 29th May he sent to the defendant separate delivery orders in respect of each contract. The defendant's gomasta took them to Howrah, with money to pay for the goods; but the seller's gomasta, who attended on his master's behalf, was unable to point out the goods or give the wagon-numbers inasmuch as the delivery orders did not then, or at any subsequent time, indicate them. On the same day, however, the 29th May, a letter was written on the seller's behalf to the defendant offering that the seller's gomasta would point out the goods on the 31st May, and stating that the seller had made complete arrangements for delivery of the goods. The parties, accompanied by their respective attorneys, attended at Howrah accordingly, when Pursottom Lall handed over certain railway receipts covering goods belonging to one Hurdut Roy Chamaria, from whom Pursottom Lall had borrowed the goods in order to deliver them.

The plaintiff's attorney then handed over to the defendant's attorney seven railway receipts for the 100 tons wheat, and two railway receipts each for 25 tons of linseed. These receipts had been endorsed in blank by Hurdut Roy Chamaria. The defendant was ready to pay for the goods; but before tendering the price of them, the defendant's attorney required an endorsement of the railway receipt from Hurdut Roy Chamaria to Pursottom Lall and from Pursottom Lall to the defendant. The plaintiff's attorney refused to get the endorsements, saying that they were not necessary, and that the goods were deliverable on presentation of the railway receipts as they stood.

The defendant's attorney then formally tendered the price in exchange for the goods; but the plaintiff's attorney offered in return only the railway receipts, which were refused.

The goods covered by the railway receipts belonged to Hurdut Roy Chamaria who had not been paid for them; nor had the freight on them been paid.

[145] After the defendant's refusal to accept the railway receipts, Pursottom Lall assigned his cause of action in respect of both contracts, to the plaintiffs, who subsequently brought this action.

Mr. Avetoom and Mr. Knight for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Hyde and Mr. Sinha for the Defendants.

The judgment of O'Kinealy, J., was as follows:—

In this case the plaintiffs sue to recover the sum of Rs. 852-8-0 as damages for the neglect and refusal of the defendants to take delivery of 50 tons of linseed which they had contracted to purchase on the 29th of September 1896; and to recover the sum of Rs. 213-4-6 as damages for the neglect and refusal of the defendants to take delivery of 100 tons of wheat which they had contracted to purchase on the 23rd of October 1896. The contracts were made, the plaintiffs alleged, by the defendants with one Pursottom Lall, who was the seller of the goods, and after the date of the neglect and refusal relied on by the plaintiffs, Pursottom Lall, on the 13th of November 1897, assigned his causes of action in respect of both contracts to the plaintiffs for valuable consideration. The defendants are sued as partners in the firm of Hurnand Roy Fulchand, and the only ground upon which it is sought to make Sewmukh Roy liable is as a partner in that firm. I may say at once that the evidence before me is wholly insufficient to show that he is now, or was at the time the contracts were made, a partner in the firm and, therefore, as against him (he was not represented at the trial) the suit must be dismissed with costs.

The third paragraph of the plaint sets forth the circumstances upon which, in addition to the contracts and assignment, the plaintiffs rely in support of their claim. It is as follows: "That on or about the 26th and 31st days of May 1897 the said Pursottom Lall, in accordance with the said contracts, and in pursuance thereof, duly forwarded delivery orders in respect of the goods sold under the said contracts to the defendants, and offered to deliver, and at all due times was ready and willing to deliver, the said goods to the defendants, but notwithstanding the defendants neglected and refused to take delivery of the said goods or any part thereof."

[146] In the third paragraph of his written statement the defendant Fulchand traverses every one of these allegations, but admits that "the said Pursottom Lall tendered to this defendant certain railway receipts purporting to have been granted to one Hurdut Roy Chamaria and purporting to have been blank indorsed by him."

The fourth and fifth paragraphs of the written statement are as follows: "This defendant is informed and believes that the said Pursottom Lall was, at the dates mentioned in the last preceding paragraph, in insolvent circumstances, and that he was heavily indebted to, amongst others, the said Hurdut Roy Chamaria, and that the goods for which the said receipts purported to have been granted were the goods of the said Hurdut Roy Chamaria and not the goods of the said Pursottom Lall, and that he was not in a position to deliver or transfer the same to this defendant, and that the said Hurdut Roy Chamaria had not been paid for the said goods. This defendant was always ready and willing to take delivery of the said goods contracted for as aforesaid, and to pay for the same, and he offered to do so, and demanded delivery of the said goods, but the said Pursottom Lall refused to deliver the said goods, and only offered to this defendant the said receipts, and did not even show to this defendant or to any one on his behalf the goods for which the said receipts had been granted."

It is not necessary to refer to a further defence, having reference to the assignment of the 13th of November 1897, as that was abandoned at the hearing.

Both the linseed and the wheat were to be delivered in April-May 1897, and the whole of the evidence given in this case relates to what took place during the last week of May 1897 between Pursottom Lall and Fulchand, and with reference to the deliveries under these contracts.

It appears from this evidence that in the latter end of May Pursottom Lall's affairs became involved, and he was deeply in debt. His gomasta Dumun Lall, who was called, said he had paid off a sum of Rs. six lakhs by the end of May, and that he then only owed Rs. 60,000 or Rs. 70,000, and from the evidence [147] of Hurnand Roy, it is clear that Pursottom Lall was in great difficulties. He had, in fact, no goods to tender under these contracts at any time before the 31st of May. I am satisfied that this was so from the evidence of Dumun Lall and Hurnand Roy.

There is no doubt that the market was a falling market, and Pursottom Lall was anxious to obtain from his buyers the difference between the market rate and the contract rate, if he could do so without being under the necessity of making an actual tender of the goods, and he might have succeeded had he not been dealing with persons who knew he had no goods to deliver, and who were determined not to accept anything short of the actual goods contracted for.

The first action taken in respect of these contracts was by Pursottom Lall on the 26th of May. On that day he wrote to the defendant enclosing one delivery order for both the wheat and the linseed, and requesting him to send a man to the Howrah station with money to take delivery of the goods

On the 27th Pursottom Lall caused Babu A. K. Mukerjee, a pleader of the Small Cause Court, to write to the defendant pointing out that the delivery order had been sent to him, and that he had not taken delivery of and paid for the goods, and calling upon him to pay for and take delivery of them within twenty-four hours. The letter ends: "In default of compliance my client will look to you for the difference between the contract rate and the market rate." In the meantime the defendant had returned the delivery order to Pursottom Lall, enclosed in a letter, dated the 26th of May (but which Pursottom alleged he did not receive till the 28th), demanding separate delivery orders in respect of each contract, and these delivery orders were delivered to the defendant on the morning of the 29th of May. They were addressed to Dumun Lall, who was the gomasta of Pursottom Lall, and are in this form:—

"Re Contract No. 29, dated 23-10-96, for 100 tons wheat.

"Please deliver to Messrs. Hurnand Roy Fulchand 100 tons wheat under the above contract on receipt of the price thereof and of gunny bags."

[148] "Re Contract No. 1299, dated 29-9-96, for 50 tons linseed.

"Please deliver to Messrs. Hurnand Roy Fulchand 50 tons linseed under the above contract on receipt of the price thereof and of gunny bags."

When these delivery orders were received by the defendant, his gomasta took them to Howrah station with money to pay for the goods. He says: "I took more money with me than the amount that I calculated." (Shewn Exhibit B.) "This is the calculation: It amounts to Rs. 11,602-8, on the contract for 1,092 bags of wheat, and Rs. 305-12 is the price of gunny bags." (Shewn D.) "The price of the 50 tons linseed was Rs. 6,649-8-0 and Rupees 190-15-6 for the gunny bags. The total is not given. The wagon-number or pile-number is always given in delivery orders. These particulars were not written on the delivery orders I got. I said to Dumun, 'give me the goods, give me all the particulars,' that is, as to which shed they were in, where they were. He said he had no information as to the goods. Then I went to Mr. Farr's office and had a letter written." This meeting with Luchminarain on the 29th at Howrah was put to Dumun Lall in cross-examination, but he denied that he saw Luchminarain at Howrah on that day. I have no doubt that this denial is untrue. Mr. Pugh's letter of the 29th of May contains a circumstantial account of that meeting, and had that portion of Mr. Pugh's letter been an invention of his clients, I have no doubt that Mr. Leslie would have said so in his letter in reply of the 31st May, and would not have confined himself to the colourless statement "without admitting any of the statements contained in your letter." Dumun Lall, in cross-examination, was forced to admit that he was not in a position to point out the goods on the 29th, or give the wagon or pile numbers, and I have no doubt that he admitted his inability to do so to Luchminarain at Howrah on that day.

When Luchminarain went to Messrs. Farr and Pugh's office on the 29th, he instructed Mr. Pugh to write the letter I have referred to above, in answer to the pleader's letter of the 27th, and in this letter, after detailing the interview at Howrah between the defendant's gomasta and Dumun Lall, he states this: "Our [149] clients' monib gomasta will attend at the Howrah station again on Monday morning, and will again take with him the cash for payment of the goods, and we have to request that the sellers will be good enough to be in attendance prepared to furnish the wagon, and pillar or pile numbers, and to point out the goods intended to be delivered to our clients under the contracts above mentioned in the usual and customary manner, and will be present when samples for refraction are drawn and sealed. Meanwhile we are instructed to return the two delivery orders, which we do herewith, with the request that the sellers will add thereto the wagon and pillar numbers and return the delivery orders to our clients before 5 o'clock this afternoon "

These delivery orders were not returned to the defendant till the 31st, and then they were apparently in the same condition as before. They were enclosed in a letter from Mr. Leslie to Mr. Pugh, in which he says: "We are instructed to say that if your clients will call at Howrah at any time between 12 noon and 5 P.M. to-day with the delivery orders, which we return herewith, our client Babu Pursottom Lall, or his agent Dumun Lall, will point out the goods and give your clients delivery. We may mention that our client has made complete arrangements with Babu Hurdut Roy Chamaria, one of the leading produce dealers, for delivery of the goods sold to your clients, and your clients will be expected to pay for and take delivery thereof. Should your clients, however, fail to pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract, our client will hold them liable for the difference between the market rate and contract rate, and for any other loss and damage, costs, charges, and expenses he may suffer or sustain by reason of your clients' breach of contract."

This brings us to the 31st of May, the last day for giving delivery under these contracts, and the important question in this case is whether, as the plaintiff contends, Pursottom Lall made an offer of performance of each of the contracts on that day, which the defendant was bound to accept, or whether, as the defendant contends, no such offer of performance was made to him at all.

What took place at Howrah on the 31st is deposed to by all [150] the witnesses who were called. Mr. Leslie, his assistant Debendra Nath Ghose, the Small Cause Court pleader A. K. Mukerjee, with Hurnand Roy and Dumun Lall, were there, with Pursottom Lall, for the purpose of enabling the latter to perform his part of the contract. Mr. Pugh, with a Small Cause Court pleader and his clients' gomasta Luchminarain, went there, to enable the defendant to perform his part of the contract. It is strange that such an array of legal talent should be required to give and take delivery of 50 tons of linseed and 100 tons of wheat, if either party were really desirous of carrying out the contract, and I have no doubt that both parties were playing a game. Pursottom Lall wanted to put himself in a position to claim the difference between the contract rates and the market rates on the 31st of May without being compelled to deliver the goods covered by the contracts, and the defendant, on the other hand, was prepared to insist upon the actual delivery of the goods because he believed that Pursottom Lall had no goods to deliver.

After the interview at Howrah Station between Dumun Lall and Luchminarain on the 29th, and Mr. Pugh's letter of the same day, it became clear to Pursottom Lall that he must endeavour to procure goods for the purpose of making a tender under his contracts, and in order to do this he came to an arrangement with Hurdut Roy Chamaria, the bawan to Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. on the 30th of May.

Hurdut Roy says of this arrangement: "Before I went to Howrah on 31st May there had been an arrangement between me and Pursottom Lall. Babu Pursottom Lall is a friend of mine. He requested me to give him some help in giving delivery of certain goods from Howrah, and he also requested me to go to Howrah for this purpose. The goods were wheat and linseed. He said to me 'I have sold goods to certain parties. If my buyers ask me for delivery of the goods, will you deliver goods to them on my behalf?' I said 'all right.'" Then, afterwards, on the 31st, he made over railway receipts for linseed and wheat to Pursottom Lall. Probably some were made over on the 30th. The goods covered by these railway receipts were not his, but the goods of the consignees who handed him the receipts on the 30th or the 31st [151] of May. He knew nothing about these goods himself, and he could not swear that the goods covered by the railway receipts had arrived on the 31st of May, or when they arrived. The receipts were handed over to Mr. Leslie, and he says that at Howrah, Mr. Pugh came to him and said that he had come on behalf of Hurnand Roy Fulehand. He then tendered to Mr. Pugh seven separate railway receipts for 100 tons of wheat in all, and two railway receipts each for 25 tons of linseed. He says: "I believe I told Mr. Pugh the goods were ready for delivery. Mr. Pugh went with his client upstairs to the Goods Superintendent. I waited for some time, and as Mr. Pugh did not return, I went upstairs and found Mr. Pugh in consultation with the Goods Superintendent. I asked him if he had not made up his mind yet. He said he wanted the railway receipts which were endorsed by Hurdut Roy Chamaria, who, I believe, was the consignee named in the receipt. He wanted these receipts to be endorsed to Pursottom Lall, and then endorsed by Pursottom Lall to his client. I told Mr. Pugh it was wholly unnecessary as the goods were deliverable on the receipts in their present condition, they being endorsed by the consignee. Mr. Pugh tendered me a bundle of notes, which he said was the price of the goods; showed me a bundle of notes, which he said was the price of the goods, which he said he would not pay till he had the railway receipts indorsed by the buyers."

Mr. Leslie says the goods were in the Howrah Station at the time he tendered the receipts, and he again says: "It is perfectly true, as stated in my day book, that the goods were ready for delivery, and would be delivered on production of the railway receipts." But it is clear that Mr. Leslie is here expressing his belief, and is not speaking from actual knowledge. He was under the impression that the goods were Pursottom Lall's, and that they were sold to him by Hurdut Roy Chamaria on credit. That we know is not the case. He says he was taken to the godown and was shown the bags for delivery, but he did not check the bags, and I think the result of his evidence is that he believed the goods had arrived from what he was told and from the entries in the railway receipts. From the entry in receipt No. 4 (Exhibit No. 1) it appears that the goods covered by [152] that receipt were not available for delivery until the 2nd of June 1897. Mr. Leslie does not seem to have observed whether the freight was paid for the goods covered by the receipts which he tendered to Mr. Pugh; we know now that it was not paid in respect of any of the goods covered by the receipts which he tendered to Mr. Pugh, and which were put in evidence at the trial. Mr. Leslie made this further statement which I think is important in this connection: "It was not suggested that the money should be paid before the receipts were given up: but I would have refused to give the receipts without the money. I said: 'Here are the receipts, give me the money, and I will give you the receipts.' I would not have parted with the receipts without getting the money. Hurdut Roy Chamaria had not yet been paid for the goods." He was recalled the next day and asked to explain that statement, and he says this: "I meant I would not have given up the receipts for the purpose of taking delivery of the goods mentioned in them without being paid for them, but my impression is that Mr. Pugh asked me to let him take them upstairs to the Goods Superintendent for the purpose of making enquiry about them, and that I did give them to him, not for the purpose of taking delivery of the goods on them."

It does not appear that Mr. Leslie knew at this time what the terms of the contracts were, and I take the result of his evidence to be this: that he was of opinion, and that he acted upon the opinion, that the tender of the receipts in their then form and under the circumstances then existing, was equivalent to a delivery of the goods contracted for, and was sufficient to entitle him to demand immediate payment of the price of the goods.

Mr. Pugh's evidence is to the same effect. He says: "When I got to Howrah I saw Mr. Leslie. I said I had come to get delivery of the goods and had the money. He said 'Here are the railway receipts for 341 bags of linseed' and asked me to state if I would take them."

"Q. 'Take what'?"

"A. 'Take delivery.'"

"I looked at the receipts, and said they were blank-endorsed by Hurdut Roy Chamaria. I then asked Mr. Leslie if he would let [153] me have the receipts. He said: 'Yes, if you will pay for them.' I then asked him if he would wait a few minutes while I went and saw the Superintendent. He said 'All right.' Then Mr. Pugh went upstairs and saw the Superintendent, and while in conversation Mr. Leslie followed them. He then goes on to say: "Then Mr. Leslie came upstairs and asked me if I was prepared to take the receipts. Then we went downstairs, and I said 'you must have the receipts endorsed by Hurdut Roy Chamaria to Pursottom Lall, and by Pursottom Lall to my clients.' I told him that in consequence of the conversation I had with Mr. Burbridge. Mr. Leslie said, 'there is no use in doing that, you must take them as they are.' Mr. Leslie then tendered me the receipts for the wheat: seven receipts. They were in the same condition when I saw them as the linseed ones. I said 'you must have them endorsed in the same way.' He said he would not do that. On that I said, 'all right. I have got the money for all the goods here, and I will tender it to you. Do you want to take the numbers of the notes?' He said, 'no.' He then asked me if I would take the railway receipts as they then stood. I asked him if he would wait till I had seen Mr. Burbridge again. He said, 'No.' 'You must pay for them and take them now as they are. I can't, wait any longer.' On that I said I would not take them and went away."

It appears that Mr. Pugh did not make any enquiries as to whether the goods were in the Howrah Station, and he took no objection on that ground, neither did he take any objection on the ground that the freight on the goods covered by the receipts had not been paid, though he knew that the freight had not been paid for the linseed. He insisted upon the special endorsement in consequence of the Goods Superintendent telling him that such an endorsement was necessary, as otherwise the delivery of the goods might be stopped by notice from Hurdut Roy Chamaria or the consignees. And with reference to the non-payment of freight, he says in his cross-examination: "If freight had not been paid on the goods, there would, I suppose, have been no difficulty in deducting the freight from the money, or deducting the demurrage from the money. As far as I know it has never been done."

[154] Now that being what occurred at Howrah, the question arises whether the plaintiff is right in his contention, that what Mr. Leslie did on the 31st of May was a sufficient offer of performance which the defendant ought to have accepted. This brings me to the terms of the contracts and of the railway receipts which were tendered by Mr. Leslie.

Under the first clause of the contracts the goods are to be delivered in dry, sound, and merchantable condition. Clauses 10, 11 and 12 are as follows:—

"10. The goods to be tendered fully 48 hours before the expiration of the present term of 72 hours granted by the railway company in order to enable buyers to weigh, sample, and inspect the same, and the delivery not to be considered complete until the samples have been refracted and examined, and any dispute about quality, &c., settled.

"11. If railway receipt be tendered, such to be handed to buyers 48 hours before the goods are liable to demurrage under the present terms of 72 hours granted by the railway company.

"12. Sellers must be present at the time of delivery to inspect the weighing and sampling; should they fail to do so after notice to sellers or to selling brokers, buyers will weigh and sample within usual railway working hours, and sellers must abide by the result."

It is contended by the defendant that under these clauses he was entitled to have the goods themselves delivered to him, and a sufficient opportunity given to him to examine the goods for the purpose of seeing whether what was tendered to him was of the description, quality and quantity contracted for, and that he was not bound to pay for the goods until he should have had this opportunity, and the delivery should have become complete. He says it is clear that no such opportunity was allowed him, that Mr. Leslie's procedure was intended to force him to pay the price of the goods unconditionally upon tender of the railway receipts, and that, therefore, such a tender was not an offer of performance, such as he was bound to accept.

I think the defendant's contention is sound. I gather from [155] the evidence that Mr. Leslie would not have given up the receipts in order to enable the defendant to obtain delivery of the goods without first paying the price of the goods, and I do not think he was justified in taking up that position under the terms of the contracts. Besides, even if he were justified in taking up that position on the 31st of May 1897, the plaintiff must, in order to succeed, show that the goods covered by the railway receipts tendered to

Mr. Pugh on behalf of the defendant, were goods of the description contracted for, and there is no evidence before me, upon which I can rely, to show that that was the case. •

Again, the defendant contends that he was not bound to accept a tender of railway receipts for goods subject to demurrage, nor for goods not available for delivery on the 31st of May, nor for goods in respect to which the freight had not been paid at the time the receipts were tendered to him, and I am of opinion these contentions are also sound. Now when we turn to the receipts which have been put in evidence, that is to say four of those tendered to Mr. Pugh by Mr. Leslie, we find this :

From Exhibit No. 1 which is a railway receipt for 136 bags of wheat, it appears that the goods were not available for delivery until the 2nd of June, and there was a sum of Rs. 214-4-0 chargeable for freight. "

From Exhibit No. 2, which is a railway receipt for 135 bags of wheat, it appears that there was a sum of Rs. 189-14-0 to pay for freight, and the goods were under demurrage on and before the 31st of May. These are two out of the seven receipts tendered by Mr. Leslie under the contract for 100 tons of wheat.

The other receipts have not been put in evidence and there is no evidence of their contents before me. I think the tender made under the wheat contract was wholly insufficient, even assuming that a tender would be good if made of clear receipts for available goods not subject to demurrage.

I am of the same opinion with reference to the receipts tendered in respect of the linseed contract. These show that the linseed covered by them was available on the 31st, and was not subject to demurrage, but upon one receipt there was a sum of [156] Rs. 280-10-0 payable for freight, and upon the other a sum of Rs. 316-3-0. I do not think a tender of these receipts was a sufficient tender.

The defendant objects to the tender of the railway receipts generally upon the ground that there had been no attornment to him by the railway company. He contends that, at the very least, it lay upon the plaintiff to show that had the defendant taken the receipt tendered to him, the railway company would have been bound to have delivered the goods to him on production of the receipt. I think that is a sound contention. We know that the company would not have delivered the goods without prepayment of the freight, and it appears from Mr. Pugh's evidence that the Goods Superintendent told him that, if the railway receipts were only blank endorsed, he would not deliver the goods to the defendant in case a notice to detain the goods was given him by the consignee.

It is contended by the plaintiff that the evidence of Dumun Lall shows that they were prepared to deliver on the 31st of May the goods contracted for; but I do not so read his evidence. No doubt he said the goods covered by the railway receipts were at Howrah on the 31st of May, but in his cross-examination when Exhibit No. 1 was shown to him he admitted that he could not say whether on the 31st of May there were goods ready for delivery against any of the railway receipts. He never inquired whether the freight had been paid. He states expressly that his master Pursottom Lall had nothing to do with the goods covered by the railway receipts, and his investigation of the goods, even according to his own statement, amounted to this, that, with respect to the goods mentioned in one or two of them, he compared the marks on the goods and the receipts for the goods.

The truth seems to be that neither Pursottom Lall, nor those assisting him on the 31st of May, had their attention directed to the goods themselves to any extent. They were dealing with the railway receipts, and it is clear that it was upon the railway receipts they depended for putting the defendant in the wrong and making him liable for the differences under the contracts.

Then it was also pointed out, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that [157] on the 31st of May no objection was taken on behalf of the defendant, on the ground that the tender was not in accordance with the contract, or that the freight was not paid, or that the goods covered by some of the railway receipts were not then available for delivery, and that, if these objections had been then taken, they would have been dealt with, and the goods would have been delivered in strict accordance with the terms of the contract. Assuming those things would have been done, though the evidence does not seem to me to lend much support to those assertions, I do not think the defendant was under any duty whatever to point out to Pursottom Lall that his tender was defective, or to give him an opportunity to supplement it. His duty arose under the contracts, when a sufficient offer of performance was made to him, and not till then.

It was contended further that as the defendant, when the railway receipts were tendered to him, only required that they should be endorsed in the special manner, he was not entitled now to rely on anything but the refusal of Pursottom Lall to so endorse them, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover if he could show that the railway company would deliver the goods without this special endorsement. I do not think he has shown that; but apart from that, I do not think the contention is a sound one. If by virtue of the contracts the defendant was entitled to have certain things done in order that the offer of performance made to him should be binding on him, then I think he is now entitled to rely upon the position which his rights under the contract empowered him to take up on the 31st of May, no matter whether he took up that position then or not. It can only be on some ground of estoppel that he is disentitled to do so, and no estoppel could arise under the circumstances of this case. That a person who justifies an alleged breach of contract upon one ground only, which is found insufficient, is not for that reason disentitled to rely upon other grounds, which his rights under the contract entitle him to rely upon, has been recognised in many cases. See Cowan v. Milburn, (1867) L.R., 2 Exch., 230; Mothoormohun Roy v. Bank of Bengal, (1878) I.L.R., 3 Cal., 392.

[158] The plaintiff also sued to recover a sum of Rs. 85-5 as assignee of Pursottom Lall under the following circumstances:—

On the 23rd of October 1896 the defendant contracted to purchase 50 tons of wheat from Pursottom Lall at Rs. 4-4-10 per bazaar maund, delivery April and May 1897; and on the 23rd of November 1896, the defendants contracted to sell 50 tons of the same quality of wheat, delivery April and May 1897, at Rs. 4-3 per bazaar maund. This portion of the claim was disputed in the defendant's written statement, but was admitted at the hearing. There will, therefore, be a decree for the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 85-5.

I think the defendant is entitled to the general costs of the suit, but the costs incurred by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's not admitting the claim for Rs. 85-5 should be deducted from the general costs.*

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 2nd November, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Bajoo Singh.....Petitioner

Public Servant—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 21 and section 186— Surveyor employed by the Collector.

The Collector acting in the management of a khas mehal, the property of the Government, is as much the Government within the meaning of section 17 of the Penal Code, as when he is exercising any other of the duties of his official position. A surveyor employed by the Collector in the khas mehal department to make a survey of a certain portion of a water course is a "public servant" within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code.

[159] Reg. v. Ramajirav, (1875) 12 Bom., H. C., 1 ; and Chatter Lal v. Thacoor Pershad, (1891) I.L.R., 18 Cal., 518, referred to.

ON the application of certain ranyats of Kamalkhap, which is a khas mehal estate of the Government the Deputy Collector of Gya ordered the Office Surveyor to prepare a map of a water-course within the mehal, which order was confirmed by the Collector. The accused came to the spot with four or five other persons and obstructed the surveyor in his work, and the latter was compelled to retire without making any survey of the water-course. He submitted his report complaining against the accused, who was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Gya and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20, or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three weeks. The accused moved the High Court and obtained a rule.

Babu Dasrathi Sanyal appeared on behalf of the Accused.

No one appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Stevens and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows :—

The petitioner in this case was convicted under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. The officer obstructed in the present case was a surveyor employed by the Collector in the khas mehal department, and the functions in which he was obstructed were making a survey of a certain portion of a water-course which was in dispute. It has been contended before us that a distinction must be drawn between the Government in the exercise of its functions as a proprietor of an estate and in that of its duties of general administration, and that looking to the definition of the word "Government" in section 17 of the Indian Penal Code, the surveyor obstructed in the present case was not a servant of the Government. In support of this contention, two cases have been cited to us, Reg. v. Ramajirav, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C., 1; Chatter Lal v. Thacoor Pershad, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 518. Neither of these cases is in point. Neither of them deals with the question before us. In each case it was decided that the particular person in question in that case was not a public servant within the definition in section [160] 21 of the Indian Penal Code. We think that the contention is unfounded. We think that the Collector, acting in the management of a khas mehal, the property of the Government, is as much the Government within the meaning of section 17 of the Indian Penal Code as when he is exercising any other of the duties of his official position. It seems to us that the 9th clause of section 21, which contains the definition of the term 'public servant,' is intended to include officers whose business it is to care for the pecuniary interest of the Government. We think that the Surveyor in the present case was a public servant, and that the duty upon which he was engaged, when he was obstructed, was a public duty. We therefore discharge the rule.

* Criminal Revision No. 730 of 1898, made against the order passed by Babu Trailakya Nath Bhuttacharjee, Deputy Magistrate of Gya, dated the 3rd of August 1898.

Interest—Interest on arrears of rent—Waiver—Omission to claim rent for some years at the stipulated rate, whether amounts to a waiver—

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 92—Evidence of Conduct, whether admissible in evidence.

The mere omission to claim interest for some years from a tenant at the rate stipulated in the lease does not amount to a waiver of the landlord's right to claim interest at such rate Johoory Lall v. Bullab Lall, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 102, followed.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 828 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of 24 Pergunnahs, dated the 30th January 1897, modifying the decree of Babu Hari Nath Roy, Munsif of Baruipore, dated the 31st of July 1896.

Evidence of conduct, as for instance return of the lease, is admissible in evidence under section 92 of the Evidence Act to prove that such return was due to an intention to make the lease inoperative.

Premath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 603, followed.

[161] THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff to recover arrears of rent with interest and cesses. The claim for interest was in accordance with a kabuliat executed by the defendants. The defence was that, although the kabuliat was executed by the defendants, they were not liable to pay interest at more than 12 per cent. per annum, inasmuch as the kabuliat was not made over to them, and therefore it was not intended to be operative.

The Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit in full and allowed interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliat. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge varied the decision of the Munsif, holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to the interest at the rate stipulated in the kabuliat, inasmuch as it became inoperative on its having been returned to the executant immediately after registration, and that the stipulation for interest was rather hard and was never enforced. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, for the Respondents.

Banerjee, J.—In this appeal, which arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, the question for consideration is, whether the court of appeal below is right in disallowing the claim for interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliat, dated the 21st Bysack 1280. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant contends that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in not allowing interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliat, as the grounds upon which it has based its decision are wrong in law.

Now the grounds upon which the Lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliat are given in the following passage of the judgment : "The contention on the part of defendant-appellant is that this kabuliat became inoperative on its having been returned to the executant immediately after registration at his request by the zemindar's naib on the complaint of the [162] executant; that the stipulation of interest was rather hard; that this stipulation as to interest was never enforced; and that therefore the defendant is not bound to pay interest at the rate demanded. It appears to me that there is much force in this contention, regard being had to the fact that the original kabuliat has been produced in the case by the defendant, and to the absence of evidence on the side of the plaintiff as to interest having ever been realised at the rate specified in the kabuliat. There is no foundation for plaintiff's allegation that this kabuliat was conclusively made over by the defaulting putindar, Mohendra, to the present defendant, with a view of thwarting plaintiff's claim. Taking all things into consideration, I am of opinion I would not be justified in allowing the exorbitant rate of interest provided in the kabuliat, which is now sought to be enforced against the defendant."

It is argued that the two grounds upon which interest at the stipulated rate has been disallowed are, first, that there has been a waiver of the right created by the kabuliat by reason of the non-realization of the interest at the stipulated rate; and, second, that the kabuliat has become inoperative by reason of the return of the document to the defendants; and it is urged that both these reasons are bad in law, the first, bad in law, because mere omission to claim interest at the stipulated rate cannot amount to waiver, as has been held in the case of Johoorj Lall v. Bullab Lall, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 102, and the second, bad in law, because it is contrary to the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act, as has been held in the case of Umedmal Motiram v. Davu bin Dhondiba, (1878) I. L. R., 2 Bom., 547.

No doubt, the case of Johoorj Lall v. Bullab Lall, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 102, is authority for the contention that the mere omission to claim interest for past years from a tenant cannot amount to a waiver of the landlord's right to claim interest at the stipulated rate. The decision of the Lower Appellate Court is, however, based, not merely upon the omission of the plaintiff to claim interest at the stipulated rate, but is based upon another ground besides, viz., the [163] return of the kabuliat to the tenant-defendant, the validity of which will be considered presently.

It was further argued that, in the absence of anything to show that any occasion arose for claiming interest at the stipulated rate, the Court of Appeal below was wrong in attaching any weight to the mere absence of evidence on the side of the plaintiff as to interest having ever been realised at the rate specified in the kabuliat. But this objection is met by the finding of the first Court on point No. 1—a finding which has not been displaced by the Appellate Court, from which it would appear that occasions did arise for claiming interest.

This brings us to the consideration of the second branch of the appellant's contention. No doubt section 92 of the Evidence Act would exclude the evidence of any oral agreement or statement to rescind or to contradict the document in this case, having regard to the provisions of proviso 4 of that section. But as we understand the contention of the defendant and the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court, what has been given effect to as making inoperative the kabuliat relied upon by the plaintiff in this case is not any oral agreement or statement rescinding the kabuliat, but the evidence of conduct amounting to waiver of the right created in favour of the plaintiff by the kabuliat; and such evidence is not, in our opinion, excluded by the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act. The view we take is in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Phuiya, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 603, where it was held that oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, such as oral evidence that possession remained with the vendor, notwithstanding the execution of a deed of out and out sale, is admissible to prove that the deed was intended to operate only as a mortgage.

Last of all it is contended that the Lower Appellate Court has not distinctly found any waiver of the right created by the kabuliat, and that in fact it does not find that the stipulation relating to interest contained in the kabuliat has become inoperative, all that it says being that it would not be justified in allowing the exorbitant rate of interest provided for in the kabuliat.

[164] The language of the Subordinate Judge may not be very happy, but his meaning, taking his judgment as a whole, is, in our opinion, very clear. For he sets out the contention of the defendant that by reason of the return of the kabuliat the stipulation about interest became inoperative; he observes that the contention has much force; and he comes to the conclusion that the rate of interest provided for in the kabuliat was not one that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce. He also finds that the case set up by the plaintiff that the return of the kabuliat was a fraudulent act on the part of the defaulting putnidar was unfounded.

Taking all this into consideration, we think that the Lower Appellate Court has, in effect, come to the conclusion that the stipulation in the kabuliat regarding interest has become inoperative.

The result is that the contentions urged before us fail, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 99—Sale of mortgaged property—Zuripeshgi mortgage—Purchase by the mortgagee.

Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) applies to zuripeshgi mortgages, and a purchase of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee in execution of a decree for rent due by the mortgagor under a katkina lease of the property, was held to be not merely irregular, but absolutely void.

THE facts material to this report and the arguments on both sides appear from the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghose for the Appellant.

[165] Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Raghunandan Prasad for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case one Kunj Behari Singh executed a mortgage in favour of the predecessor of the plaintiffs. He nevertheless held under a katkina lease, which was granted on the same day, and which covered the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs brought a suit for arrears of rent on the katkina lease, sold a 2 annas share of the mortgaged property, and purchased it themselves. They now sue for possession of the property as auction-purchasers.

Among other defences that have been raised in the suit is one that under section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the plaintiffs are prohibited from buying the equity of redemption in respect of the property over which they hold a mortgage, and that the remedy, if any, must be the remedy given by that section. This contention has received the approbation of both the lower Courts, where the suit has been dismissed.

In second appeal it has been argued that section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is a section of procedure, and the property in this case having been sold by a Court of competent jurisdiction 'at the instance of the plaintiffs and bought by them, the sale is not void or voidable; and, secondly, it has been contended that as the mortgage in question is a purely usufructuary mortgage the mortgagees have no right to sell under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, and consequently it is unreasonable to suppose that the provisions of section 99 of the Act apply to such a mortgage.

Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows :—"Where a mortgagee in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under section 67, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, section 43."

[166] This section is to be found in Chapter IV of the Act, which, as may be seen from section 58, applies to all mortgages, a simple mortgage, a mortgage by conditional sale, an usufructuary mortgage, and an English mortgage. There are no words in the section limiting the word "mortgagee" to a mortgagee holding under a particular form of mortgage; and the ordinary meaning of the language of section 99 would be that it prohibits the sale of the property mortgaged in all cases save in a suit brought under section 67. Nor does there appear to us to be anything in the argument that section 99 does not apply if a suit to sell does not lie under section 67. The words of the section are general and uncontrolled. To accept the contention would be that we should be compelled to read into the section the words "that if under the terms of the mortgage no suit can be brought under section 67, the mortgagee can sell the equity of redemption." There are no such words in the section, and if we were to add them, instead of interpreting the law, we should be legislating. Nor do we think that the section contemplates merely a matter of procedure, and that a sale wrongly made would be merely irregular. The tenor of the decisions of the different High Courts is that the sale is void, and we are of the same opinion.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Lal Behary Singh and another.....Judgment-debtors
versus
 Habibur Rahman and others.....Decree-holders*.

Decree—Form of Decree Mortgage Decree—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), decree regarded as mortgage-decree under—Sale of mortgaged property in execution of decree.

In a suit for recovery of mortgage money by sale, brought after the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) had come into force, the decree of the Court was: "that a decree be passed in favor of the plaintiffs in respect [167] of Rs. 5,387-10-13, together with costs and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of realization, and that the mortgaged properties be made liable (pae band kea jae) for realization of the decretal money."

Held, that the decree was to be regarded as a mortgage-decree governed by the Transfer of Property Act, though not made in the form prescribed by that Act; and it followed that it was not open to the decree-holder to proceed against properties other than the mortgaged properties before exhausting the latter, and without obtaining an order under section 90 of the said Act.

Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473; and Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo Roy, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 580, referred to. Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoodury Ghose, (1896) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813, distinguished.

THE facts material to this report and the arguments on both sides appear sufficiently from the judgments of the High Court. The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Moulvie Syed Shamsul Huda for the Respondents.

The judgments of the High Court (GHOSE and RAMPINI, JJ.) were as follows:—

Ghose, J.—The question raised in this appeal is what may be the true effect of a decree passed between the parties on the 21th June 1896. The suit, in which this decree was passed, was a suit for a certain amount of money, as rent based upon a mortgage bond. In execution of the decree, the decree-holder asked that certain properties, other than those mentioned in the mortgage should be sold in satisfaction of his claim. The judgment-debtors opposed the application upon the ground that, as this was a mortgage-decree, it was not open to the decree-holder to sell these properties without exhausting the mortgaged properties.

The Court below has acceded to the prayer of the decree-holder, and the judgment-debtor has preferred this appeal impugning the correctness of that order.

It has been argued before us by the learned Vakil for the decree-holder that the decree should be construed to be a simple [168] money-decree, a lien being declared on the properties mortgaged. The contention on the other side is that it should be regarded as a mortgage-decree under the Transfer of Property Act though not in the form prescribed by that Act.

* Appeal from Original Order No. 127 of 1898, against the order of Babu Hemango Chunder Bose, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated the 13th of April 1898.

The suit was instituted upon the mortgage after the Transfer of Property Act came into force; and there can be no doubt that so far as the mortgagee, the plaintiff in the suit, was concerned, he asked for the reliefs indicated in that Act, one of the reliefs being "that the mortgaged properties be sold for satisfaction of his claim, if the mortgagor fails to pay up within the time which the Court may allow." But the Subordinate Judge, who made the decree, did not apparently follow the clear directions in the Act; and he worded the decree as follows: "It is ordered and decreed that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the sum of Rs. 5,387-10-13, together with costs and interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum up to the date of realization, and that the mortgaged properties be made liable (pae bund kea jae) for realization of the decretal money." It is to be regretted that the Subordinate Judge should, in spite of the clear directions in the Transfer of Property Act, not have taken care to draw up a decree as the law directs. But, however that may be, the question that we have to consider in this appeal is whether the decree, as made, can be regarded as a mortgage-decree governed by the Transfer of Property Act, or whether it is a simple money-decree, with a lien only being declared upon the mortgaged properties.

In the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473, which was decided by a Bench of three Judges of this Court, a question similar to that which arises in this appeal was discussed; and the learned Chief Justice in delivering judgment, referring to the terms of the decree which then came before the Court for consideration, expressed himself as follows: "In my opinion this was a mortgage-decree, though not in the form prescribed by the Transfer of Property Act, which came into force on the 1st July 1882, but in the form in which, as I understand, such decrees had been for many years, and were drawn up in the Mofussil Courts. [169] The decree provides for the payment of the mortgage debt, for the realization of the mortgaged property and payment thereof of the mortgage debt. The claim in this suit, it may be observed, asks that the claim, i.e., the money claim, should be realized out of the mortgaged property, and failing that, from any other property of the defendant. I think the decree of 1882 was a mortgage-decree, i.e., a decree made in a suit to enforce the mortgage in which the mortgagee asked, not merely for a personal judgment against his debtor, but for the realization of the mortgaged property to satisfy his claim." The terms of the decree which the learned Judges in that case were called upon to consider were as follows: "It is ordered that the suit be decreed, and that the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the amount claimed with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent. per month during the pendency of the suit and costs of this case: the whole to bear interest at the rate of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per month from this date to the date of realization, to be realized from the property mortgaged and other properties of the defendant." Mr. Justice MACPHERSON, who concurred with the Chief Justice in the view that he adopted, said as follows: "But it seems to me that the decree of 1882 is in substance a decree for the sale of the mortgaged properties. It sets out those properties, and directs that the sum decreed should be realized from them, which can only mean by the sale of them, and that was the relief asked for in the suit. Assuming that sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, which came into force while the suit was pending, applied to the suit, the decree was not, it is true, made in conformity with them, as, instead of making a decree nisi followed by a decree absolute, the Court at once made a decree absolute. But the decree has never been questioned, and is now a final decree as between the parties. The case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895)

I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813," (to which I shall have to refer presently), "is distinguishable, as the Court there in effect held that there was no decree for sale," and so on. In a subsequent case before the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice BANERJEE, Fazl Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo Roy, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 580, the learned Judges [170] had also to consider the effect of a decree in somewhat similar terms; and they agreed with the decision come to in the case of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, and held that the decree was a mortgage-decree. The terms of the decree ran as follows: "It is ordered that the suit be decreed ex parte, and the sum of Rs. 323 claimed (in the suit), and the costs of this suit Rs. 34-8, with interest at six per cent. per annum from this day till the date of realization, plaintiff do get from the hypothecated property. If insufficient, defendant to remain personally liable." And it was held, as I have already said, that this ought to be regarded as a mortgage-decree in terms of the Transfer of Property Act.

In the case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813, referred to in the judgment of MACPHERSON, J., in Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 473, and upon which reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the decree-holder, the terms of the decree which had to be considered by the Court were: "The suit is decreed ex parte. The plaintiff to obtain the amount of his claim and costs of the suit with interest at six per cent. per annum until the date of realization, and the mortgaged property to remain liable for the satisfaction of the debt, etc." And it was held that this was not a mortgage-decree, and that it was not, therefore, governed by the Transfer of Property Act.

It seems to me upon a consideration of the different rulings that the question for consideration in a case like this is, whether there is an order in the decree for sale of the mortgaged properties, or the decree simply declares a lien upon those properties. As already stated, the mortgagee in the present case unquestionably asked for a decree in terms of the Transfer of Property Act and for the sale of the properties mortgaged. The Court, however, did not make a decree in exact terms of that Act. But there can be no doubt that what the Court really meant to do, and did, was to make a decree ordering that the properties mortgaged be sold for the realization of the amount decreed to the mortgagee. The terms of the decree are more similar to those in the cases of [171] Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi and Fazl Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo Roy, to which I have already referred, than the terms which had to be considered in the case of Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose.

In this view of the matter, the decree in question should, in my opinion, be regarded as a mortgage-decree governed by the Transfer of Property Act, though not made in the form prescribed by that Act. It follows from this that it is not open to the decree-holder to ask in the first instance for the sale of properties other than the properties mortgaged before exhausting the mortgaged properties, and without obtaining an order such as is prescribed by section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree-holder being at liberty to proceed against the mortgaged properties in the first instance, and then to take such steps as he may be advised, to sell the other properties of the judgment-debtor.

Rampini, J.—I cannot think that the decree in this case can properly be said to be a decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The decree is to the effect that, "the mortgaged property shall be made liable (pa bandh) for the realization of the decretal amount." The vernacular expression pac bandh means "tied by the leg" or "fettered"—that is "incumbered." It does not seem to me to imply sale. No doubt the decree directs that the mortgaged property shall be "made" liable. But this is certainly not a clear direction that the property is to be sold. The mortgagee undoubtedly in para 3 of his plaint asked for a decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, but the Court, whether intentionally or through inadvertence, does not appear to me to have given him such a decree as he sought for. I am supported in this view by the case of Chundra Nath Deij v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813. The decree in that case was to the effect that the property was "to remain liable for the satisfaction of the debt." On the other hand the cases of Jogemaya Dassi v. Thackomoni Dassi, and Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo Roy, have been referred to on behalf of the appellant. These are no doubt authorities for holding that a [172] decree, such as the present one, though not in form a decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, may yet be regarded and given effect to as such.

Personally, I am most reluctant to put any obstacle in the way of decree-holders who seek to recover monies, which Courts after full enquiry have held them to be entitled to. But in the face of the two last mentioned rulings, I do not think I would be justified in dissenting from the conclusion at which my learned brother has arrived in this case. I, therefore, concur in decreeing this appeal.

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Rajbuns Sahai.....Defendant No. 2

Kameshar Prosad (Plaintiff) and anotherDefendants.*

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), section 8, clause (b) and section 12—Suit to set aside certificate and sale—Limitation.

A certificate was issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880) and notice under section 10 of the Act was served on the 12th December 1895. The debtor objected under section 12 on the ground that no arrears were due, but the objection was overruled on his failure to produce evidence, on the 7th August 1895, and the sale took place on the 10th August 1895. In a suit brought on the 8th August 1896 to set aside the certificate and the sale,

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 343 of 1897, against the order of H. Holmwood, Esq., District Judge of Gya, dated the 24th of August 1897, reversing the order of Moulvie Abdul Barri, Munsif of Gya, dated the 27th of February 1897.

Held, that the terms of section 8, clause (b), providing the limitation of one year from the date of service of notice are peremptory, and in no way controlled by the provisions of section 12, and the suit in respect of the certificate was, therefore, barred by limitation.

Held, also, that if the certificate cannot be cancelled, the sale held in execution of it also cannot be cancelled.

THE respondent Kameshar Prosad brought this action against the Secretary of State for India in Council and one Rajbuns Sahai, the appellant, to set aside a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), and the [173] sale in execution of the certificate, at which Rajbuns purchased the property sold. The facts material to this report appear from the judgment of the High Court. The question argued was whether the suit was barred by limitation.

The defendant Rajbuns Sahai appealed to the High Court.

Babu Durga Das Dutt for the Appellant.—The plaintiff's case was based on the objection that no arrears were due; but the District Judge overruled the plea of limitation on the ground of informalities in the certificate—a ground not taken by the plaintiff in the plaint and not relevant to the decision of the plea of limitation. The certificate, however, substantially complied with the requirements of law. The suit is barred whether it is governed by section 8, clause (b) of Act VII of 1880 or by section 15 of Act I of 1895.

Moulvie Mohomed Yusuf (Babu Unakali Mukerjee with him), on behalf of the respondent Kameshar Prosad, contended that the suit was not barred. Section 8, clause (b) should be read with section 12 of Act VII of 1880. The question of liability was not decided either in February or in August 1895, as required by section 12, and the provision of limitation in section 8, one year from service of notice, does not apply to the present case. The suit having been instituted within one year from the date of sale is within time. The case of Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh, (1896) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 775: L.R. 23 I. A., 45, was cited.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra and Babu Lal Mohan Das appeared for the Secretary of State for India.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit to set aside a certificate issued by the Collector under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), and the sale which took place in execution of that certificate. It appears that the certificate in question was issued on the 12th November 1894, and notice was served upon the plaintiff in terms of section 10 of the Act on the 12th December 1894. Subsequently, on [174] the 9th January 1895, the plaintiff applied to the Collector, apparently under the provisions of section 12 of the Act, to have the certificate cancelled upon the ground that no arrears were due from him. An order was recorded on this application on the 28th February 1895, which may be taken to imply that the Collector meant to hold that the plaintiff was liable to pay the arrears demanded. But, however that may be, the matter was again placed before the same authority on the 7th August 1895, when the order recorded was that, no evidence having been produced on behalf of the petitioner, the objection must be overruled. Thereupon the property, which had been attached in pursuance of the provisions of the Act, was ordered to be sold, and the sale took place on the 10th August 1895. The present suit, however, was not instituted until the 8th August 1896, that is to say, within a year from the date of sale, but after a year from the date when notice under section 10 of the Act was served upon the plaintiff.

The Munsif dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge on appeal has reversed the Munsif's decree, being of opinion that the certificate issued by the Collector was not in accordance with the form prescribed by the Act itself; that therefore it ought not to be treated as a decree under the provisions of the Act, and that necessarily the sale that took place in execution of it was a bad sale, and should therefore be set aside.

It appears to us, however, that the plaintiff is not entitled to the remedy he seeks in this case, and for this simple reason: Referring to section 8, clause (b), of Bengal Act VII of 1880, it will be found that a "judgment-debtor may at any time within one year after service upon him of such notice as is mentioned in section 10 bring a suit in the Civil Court to contest his liability to pay the amount stated in the said certificate, and to have such certificate cancelled, but no such suit shall be entertained unless such judgment-debtor has stated in a petition presented to the Collector under section 12 the ground upon which he claims to have such certificate cancelled, or unless, having omitted to state such ground in such petition as aforesaid, he can satisfy the Civil Court that there was good reason for [175] such omission. If no such suit is instituted within the said period of one year, or if any such suit having been instituted is decided against such judgment-debtor, such certificate shall become absolute, and shall have, to all intents and purposes, the same force and effect as a final decree of a Civil Court."

The law seems to us to be clear enough. It provides that if the judgment-debtor desires to contest the propriety of the certificate served upon him under section 10 of the Act, he must bring a suit for that purpose within a year from the date of the service of such certificate; but if he fails to do so, the certificate shall have the force and effect of a final decree of a Civil Court. In the present case the plaintiff did not bring his suit to have the certificate cancelled within a year as provided in clause (b), section 8, and therefore it seems to be obvious that it is not open to him to ask the Civil Court to determine any question as to the propriety or otherwise of the certificate.

The learned Vakil for the respondent, however, has contended that section 8, clause (b) should be read as controlled by section 12 of the same Act, and that unless there be a determination as prescribed by that section, it is not incumbent on the judgment-debtor to bring a suit within a year from the date of service upon him of the certificate.

There are, we think, two answers to this argument: first, there was a determination of the matter that was placed before the Collector by the plaintiff on the two dates that we have already mentioned, namely, the 28th February and 7th August 1895. It may be that the Collector did not fully give his reasons for thinking that the arrear demanded was due by the plaintiff, but that would not make his order in any way less a determination of the matter that was before him upon the petition made by the plaintiff. We think that there was a determination in accordance with the requirements of section 12. The second answer to the respondent's argument is this: Supposing that there was no determination in accordance with the provisions of section 12, still the terms of section 8, clause (b) are peremptory, when it prescribes that, unless a suit is brought within a year from the date of service upon the judgment-debtor of the notice issued under [176] section 10, the certificate shall have the force and effect of a final decree of a Civil Court.

It appears to us that section 8 is in no way controlled by the provisions of section 12 of the Act. That being so, it seems to us that the adjudication of the matter which the plaintiff has asked for in the present case is barred by the provisions of section 8, clause (b) of Bengal Act VII of 1880. So far as the sale is concerned, it depends upon the question of the propriety of the certificate issued by the Collector on the 12th November 1894. If that certificate cannot be cancelled, the sale which was held in execution of it cannot equally be cancelled.

We set aside the order of the Lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of First Instance dismissing the suit of the plaintiff.

We make no order as to costs.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Karuna Moyi Banerjee.....Decree-holder
versus

Surendra Nath Mockerjee and another.....Judgment-Debtors.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 148, clause (h)—Rent-decree—Decree for arrears of rent—Application for execution by the assignee of such a decree—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 316.

An application for execution, by the assignee of a decree which was obtained by a landlord against a defaulting tenant, for arrears of rent which accrued due, between the date of the sale of the tenure in execution of a previous decree for arrears of rent, and the date of the confirmation of such sale, is barred by clause (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as being one for the execution of a decree for arrears of rent.

THIS appeal arose out of an application for execution by the assignee of a decree. The decree was obtained by the landlord against a defaulting tenant for rent which accrued due between [177] the date of the sale of the tenure in execution of a previous decree for arrears of rent, and the date of the confirmation of such sale. The judgment-debtors objected to the execution on the ground that it was barred by clause (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, being an application for execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The Court of First Instance dismissed the application for execution as being barred. On appeal to the District Judge, he confirmed the decision of the Court below. Against this judgment the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Order No. 1 of 1898, against the order of F. F. Handley, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 13th of August 1897, affirming the order of Babu Bollaram Mullick, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 11th of May 1897.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Atul Krishna Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Uma Kali Mookerjee and Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the appellant contended that the decree was not one obtained by a landlord against a tenant, and as such it was not a decree for arrears of rent. The relationship of landlord and tenant ceased, after the sale of the tenure in execution of a previous decree for arrears of rent. It was simply a money-decree; and that being so, the execution of such decree by the assignee is not barred by clause (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He referred to clause (c) of section 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and also to the cases of Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo (2 C. W. N., 589); and Dagdu v. Pancham Singh Gangaram, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 375.

The respondents were not called upon.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) were as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.—All we have to determine is whether the decree in this case is or is not a decree for arrears of rent or a mere money-decree, and, if the former, what is the effect of sub-section (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion this is a decree for arrears of rent. Then what is the effect of the sub-section in question which says in effect, [178] that any application to execute a decree for arrears of rent cannot be made by an assignee of the decree unless the landlord's interest in the land has become vested in him. The latter event has not happened, and the decree-holder is the assignee from the landlord of the arrears of rent. This being so, I think the judgment of the Court below is right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only question raised in this appeal, which arises out of an application by the appellant, who is the assignee of a decree, to execute the same, is, whether the application is barred by clause (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Courts below have held that the application is barred, under the clause referred to; and the only way in which the learned Vakil for the appellant seeks to take this case out of the operation of that clause is by contending that the decree in this case was not one for arrears of rent obtained by a landlord within the meaning of the clause. The decree was on the face of it one for arrears of rent claimed by the landlord against a defaulting tenant, as having accrued due between the date of the sale of the tenure in execution of a previous decree for arrears of rent and the date of confirmation of such sale, and it is argued that what was claimed as due to the landlord for the period intervening between those two dates was not an arrear of rent within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is difficult to accept this contention as correct. What was decreed was decreed in favour of the landlord: of that there can be no question. The sum claimed was what was payable in respect of the tenure which was held by the defendant, and the only ground upon which it could possibly be said that the amount decreed was not an arrear of rent would be by maintaining that the defaulting tenant's connection with the tenure ceased with the sale and not with the confirmation of the sale. But section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which governs the case, is express on the point and as between the parties to the suit, that is, as between the landlord and the defaulting tenant, the title to the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate, that is the date of confirmation of sale, and not before.

[179] That being so, the defaulting tenant still continued to be the holder of the tenure, and what was claimed from him must be treated as an arrear of rent.

It was argued by Babu Sarada Charan Mitter that the language of clause (c) of section 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would go to show that the Legislature intended the landlord's claim against the defaulting tenant for rent accruing due subsequent to a previous suit for arrears of rent to extend up to the date of sale of the tenure in execution of his decree, not up to any later date. I do not think that the language of clause (c) of section 169 can afford any sufficient basis for such a contention.

Then we were referred to the cases of Adhur Chunder Banerjee v. Aghore Nath Aroo, (2 C. W. N., 589), and Dagdu v. Pancham Sing Gangaram, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 375, as showing that even before the date of confirmation of sale, an auction-purchaser acquires an inchoate right, which dates from the date of sale, the confirmation of sale relating back to such date. I think that the cases cited are quite distinguishable from the present, as there the question arose, not between the parties to the suit in execution of the decree in which the sale took place, but as between some of the parties to the suit and third parties.

REFERENCE UNDER STAMP ACT.

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Sambhu Chandra Bepari.....Plaintiff

Krishna Charan Bepari and others.....Defendants*

Stamp Act (I of 1879), section 23—Bond—Interest.

A bond for a loan of Rs. 100 stipulated that the obligor should "pay twice the amount, including Rs. 100 for interest, total Rs. 200, in eight years from 1801 to 1808, according to kists given in the schedule."

[180] Held, that the amount secured by the bond was Rs. 200 and the bond must be stamped accordingly. Section 23 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) did not apply to the instrument.

* Civil Reference under section 49 of Stamp Act (I of 1879) from Babu Sarat Chander Ghose, Officiating Munsif of Sudharam, dated the 18th of March 1898.

THIS was a reference to the High Court under section 49 of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879) by the Munsif of Sudharam in the district of Noakhali. The statement of the case and the opinion of the Munsif were as follow :—

"In suit No. 285 of 1898 (money) of this Court the plaintiff Sambhu Charan Bepari seeks to recover Rs. 220 on a registered instalment (simple) bond, dated the 25th Chaitra 1800 (7th April 1894). The suit was instituted on the 17th February 1898. In the plaint it is stated that the whole amount, including interest up to date of suit, is Rs. 271. But the plaintiff having given up his claim to Rs. 51, he sues to recover Rs. 220 only. The bond is written upon an impressed stamp paper for eight annas only. That part of the bond, which is necessary so far as this reference is concerned, runs as follows : ' We borrowed from you on the 29th day of Bhadra 1294 B. S., by a registered bond, the sum of Rs. 70 ; now in the account thereon we are indebted to you for interest and principal together the sum of Rs. 208-4 ; out of that deducting Rs. 108-4 for claim relinquished and Rs. 5 for payment in cash, total Rs. 108-4. We keep a loan of the balance Rs. 100 and execute this bond (and agree) to pay twice this amount including Rs. 100 for interest, total Rs. 200 in eight years from 1301 to 1308 according to the kists given in the schedule ; if we make default in payment of kist we shall pay interest at the rate of 4 per centum per month ; if instead of paying according to the kistbundi we make default in paying any one kist, instead of waiting for a future kist you shall be entitled to recover from us, and our heirs, either amicably or by suit, the whole amount due on all the kists with interest for default of kists.'

"I doubt if the bond has been 'duly stamped' as a bond. The question in this case principally is whether or not the sum of Rs. 100, the debt acknowledged to be subsisting at the date of the bond, or the sum of Rs. 200 agreed to be repaid in eight years for principal and interest, is to be considered the amount or value secured by the bond as stated in No. 13, schedule I, of the Indian Stamp Act, 1879.

"If the former view be taken the bond has been duly stamped, but if the latter view be taken it is not duly stamped, and the document cannot be admitted in evidence until the provisions of section 34 of the said Act are complied with.

"In this case the amount of interest is ascertained, and not to be ascertained as in ordinary bonds. The plaintiff could sue for the whole of Rs. 200 even if default was made in payment of the first instalment, which fell due in Ashwin [181] 1301 B. S. A case—In the matter of Gajraj Singh, (I. L. R. 9 All., 585)—of a somewhat similar nature came up before their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court, and it was decided by a Full Bench. Taking the view expressed therein by his Lordship Justice OLDFIELD, I am of opinion that the amount secured, or in other words the amount limited to be ultimately recovered, 'under this bond' is Rs. 200, and it requires to be stamped accordingly. * * *

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ.) was delivered by Maclean, C. J.—In this case we are of opinion that the view taken by the Munsif is correct, namely, that the amount secured by the bond is Rs. 200, and that the bond must be stamped accordingly. In arriving at this conclusion we are not unmindful of the provisions of section 23 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879. The case referred to in the reference decided by the High Court at Allahabad does not appear to us to have any bearing upon the matter.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 17th November, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Bachu Lal.....Complainant

Jagdam Sahai and three others.....Accused.*

Compensation—Sanction to prosecute and award of compensation—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), section 250 and section 476—Magistrate, Discretion of.

It is an improper exercise of his discretion by a Magistrate to award compensation to the accused under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code and also to direct or sanction the prosecution of the complainant under section 211 of the Penal Code for bringing a false charge. Shib Nath Chong v. Sarat Chunder Sarkar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 586, followed. Queen v. Rupan Rai, (1871) 6 B. L. R., 296 : 15 W. R. Cr., 9, referred to.

THIS was a reference under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge of Tirhoot.

[182] The facts of the case appear from the following portions of the letter of reference :—

"The complainant Bachu Lal prosecuted Jagdam Sahai and others for forcibly taking his children and Raghunandan's wife from them, when Bachu and Raghunandan were going to study the Bible. The Magistrate of Hajipur Sub-Division, who is admittedly a Magistrate of the 1st class, heard the evidence for the prosecution and acquitted the accused without calling on the accused for evidence. He then called on the complainant Bachu to pay Rs. 40 compensation under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code to each of the accused, and on his failing to show cause why he should not pay the compensation condemned him in default of payment to thirty days' simple imprisonment. The Magistrate then passed the following order : 'Bachu Lal will be prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code and his witness under section 198 of the Penal Code. Bail of Rs. 100 each. Draw up proceedings and send to Sudder.' This last order was made without an application by the accused to prosecute, and must apparently therefore have been made under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Bachu and Raghunandan have appealed against both orders, viz., those under section 476 and section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. As, however, there is no appeal against the latter order, it can only be interfered with by way of revision.

"With regard to the order under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code it has been held in the case of Shib Nath Chong v. Sarat Chunder Sarkar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 586, that if the Magistrate thought there was a case in which a prosecution under sections 211 and 198 of the Penal Code should be sanctioned, he ought not to take action under the provisions of section 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the same ruling applies to the provisions of section 250 of the new Criminal Procedure Code. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate has referred to rulings, inconsistent apparently with the ruling quoted, but they are of earlier date. It is, therefore, recommended that the order of the Magistrate under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code be set aside."

* Criminal Reference No. 257 of 1898, made by A. E. Staley, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 11th of October 1898.

The judgment of the High Court (Stevens and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows :—

In dismissing a case under section 363 of the Penal Code the Joint Magistrate of Hajipur directed the complainant Bachu Lal to pay each of the four accused persons Rs. 40 as compensation under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and further ordered his prosecution on a charge under section 211 of the Penal Code.

[183] The learned Sessions Judge of Tirhoot has reported the case to this Court with a recommendation that the order for payment of compensation be set aside, and he refers for authority to the case of Shib Nath Chong v. Sarat Chunder Sarkar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 586.

In the case of Queen v. Rupan Rai, (1871) 6 B. L. R., 296 : 15 W. R., Cr., 9, which is referred to by the Joint Magistrate in his explanation as supporting the legality of his proceedings, JACKSON, J., remarked : "It appears to me that in this case the Magistrate was competent to award compensation to the persons accused by Rupan, notwithstanding that he afterwards committed, and even if he had then made up his mind to commit, Rupan to take his trial on the charge of giving false evidence;" . . . but he added : "whether the Magistrate in making this order exercised a proper discretion is a different question, on which I think we need not give an opinion."

In the case of Shib Nath Chong v. Sarat Chunder Sarkar, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 586, the learned Judges observed : "We are of opinion that it was never intended that recourse should be had to the provisions of section 560 (now section 250) of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case in which the trying Magistrate is of opinion that the complaint was wilfully and maliciously false, and that the complainant should be prosecuted for an offence under section 211 of the Penal Code. If, therefore, the Joint Magistrate thought that this was a case in which a prosecution for an offence under section 211 of the Penal Code should be sanctioned, he ought not to have taken action under the provisions of section 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. To sanction or direct a prosecution, and also to proceed to award compensation under section 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was, we think, an improper exercise of his discretion. By such action the Joint Magistrate was, in point of fact, prejudging the issue of the charge which he was submitting for trial."

These authorities are not in conflict, but are quite reconcilable. While, on the one hand, there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure which makes it illegal for a Magistrate [184] both to award compensation to the accused and also to direct or sanction the prosecution of the complainant for bringing a false charge, yet a Magistrate who adopted this course would be exercising his discretion improperly.

The reason why the learned Judges who disposed of the case of Queen v. Rupan Rai confined themselves to dealing with the question of the strict legality of the orders before them was doubtless because they were proceeding under Act XXV of 1861, the Code of Criminal Procedure which was then in force. A reference for revision could under section 434 of that Act be made only where the referring Court was of opinion that a sentence or order was "contrary to law," and similarly under section 404 of the Act the general revisional powers of this Court were limited to "determining any point of law arising out of the case and thereupon passing such order as to the Court might seem right."

In the present case we understand that the direction to prosecute is in full force, and we therefore set aside the order awarding compensation to the accused persons. The compensation, if paid or levied, will be refunded.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 26th August, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Sariatullah Sarkar and others.....Defendants
versus
Pran Nath Nandi and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Right of Occupancy—Transfer of occupancy rights—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 178, 183—Usage or custom—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 48—Admissibility of opinion as to existence of custom or usage.

In this suit the plaintiffs by virtue of putni settlements sought to obtain khas possession of certain jote lands which purported to have been conveyed by the jotedars, the first set of defendants, to the second set of defendants, although there was no custom or usage in the village recognising the transferability of occupancy rights.

[185] Held, that in order to establish usage under sections 178, 183 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it was not necessary to require proof of its existence for any length of time.

Held, also, that the statements made by persons who were in a position to know of the existence of a custom or usage in their locality were admissible under section 48 of the Evidence Act. Dalglisk v. Guesser Hassan, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 427, followed.

THE facts of this case are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Dwarkanath Chuckeravarti and Babu Joygopal Ghose for the Appellants.

Babu Gyanendra Mohun Das for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances. The plaintiffs own a twelve-anna share of Mouzah Mobouli by virtue of putni settlements, some acquired in 1297 (1890) and some in the year 1300 (1893), and they seek in this action to obtain khas possession of certain jote lands, on the ground that the defendants Nos. 8 and 9, who were the holders of the jotes in question had conveyed, or rather purported to convey, the same to the defendants 1 to 7, although there was no custom or usage in the village recognising the transferability of occupancy rights, and that consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain khas possession of the said lands.

The principal defendants, who had obtained the transfer of the jotes, averred in their written statements the existence of a custom of transferability in that village and other villages in its vicinity, and contended that the plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed. It is unnecessary to refer to the other pleas taken in their answers.

The Munsif framed several issues and, in a careful and, as it seems to us, a well considered judgment, came to the conclusion that the defendants had successfully established the custom or usage alleged by them recognizing the transferability of occupancy jotes. In dealing with this question, he relied not only [186] upon the evidence adduced on the defendants' side, but also on certain kohalas executed in favour of the plaintiffs themselves by which they had obtained transfer of occupancy jotes, and in conclusion he added: "As the tenants do not pay rent at the rates demanded by the plaintiffs, the latter have betaken to themselves the contrivance of harassing the tenants and coercing them to submission by such suits like the present, which unfortunately have become too common in this part of the country."

The plaintiffs appealed to the Officiating Judge of Pubna who has, in an elaborate judgment, dealing with a variety of questions which do not seem to us to be really pertinent to the matter, come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover in this action. The grounds upon which he held against the defendants seem to be of a three-fold character: firstly, he is of opinion that the evidence given by the defendants regarding the custom or usage of transferability being limited to only ten or twelve years or even less is worthless; secondly, that the evidence, which the defendants purported to give under section 48 of the Evidence Act, was inadmissible; and, thirdly, regarding that portion of the case upon which the Munsif relied with some reason, namely, the transactions in favour of the plaintiffs themselves, he was of opinion that they could not support the allegation of custom or usage, inasmuch as the plaintiffs were themselves the proprietors, and might be supposed to have assented to the transfers in their own favour.

The question which the District Judge had to try was dealt with in the case of Dalglish v. Guzufer Hassain, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 427, by TREVELYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., and although he does not seem to approve of that decision, we consider ourselves bound to follow the principle enunciated by those learned Judges. In that case also the Munsif had held against the plaintiffs, who were seeking to recover khas possession. He had held that the defendants as ryots had sufficiently established that there was a usage in the neighbouring villages, recognizing the transferability of occupancy jotes. In that case also the Subordinate Judge had thought that the evidence regarding [187] usage, being limited to a very short period of time, was of no value. This Court in construing sections 183 and 178 of the Tenancy Act, held in effect that in order to establish "usage" at all events it was not necessary to require proof of its existence for any length of time. With that view we desire to express our entire concurrence. They say "the word 'usage,' at any rate, would include what the people are now or recently in the habit of doing in a particular place. It may be that this particular habit is only of a very recent origin, or it may be one which has existed for a long time. If it be one regularly and ordinarily practised by the inhabitants of the place where the tenure exists, there would be 'usage' within the meaning of the section. The evidence which the learned Subordinate Judge has excluded on the ground that it does not refer to ancient custom, is, we think, evidence which requires consideration, inasmuch as it may establish local usage."

The Judge, in the present case, has done exactly what the Subordinate Judge had done in the case before TREVELLYAN and BEVERLEY, JJ., and we think that the evidence which the District Judge thinks to be of little or no value, required consideration in connection with the other circumstances and facts appearing in the case.

In the second place the District Judge is of opinion that, in order to make a statement admissible under section 48 of the Evidence Act, it must relate to custom. The learned Judges in Dalglish v. Guzuffer Hassain, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 427, held that the evidence to which they were directing their minds, and which related to usage, was admissible under section 48 of the Evidence Act. We think in the present case also the statements made by persons who were in a position to know of the existence of a custom or usage in their locality were admissible. For example, a person, who had been in the habit of writing out deeds of sale, or one who had been seeing transfers frequently made, would certainly be in a position to give his opinion whether there was a custom or usage in that particular locality, and we think that the opinion of such persons [188] would be admissible, as pointed out by the learned Judges, under section 48 of the Evidence Act.

Then, again, it seems to us the District Judge is in error in putting aside from consideration the transfers made in favour of the plaintiffs on the ground that they may be supposed to have been assented to by the plaintiffs by virtue of their being proprietors. Admittedly one of the kobalas, namely, that of the year 1296, was executed prior to the putni settlement obtained by them in 1297. On the whole, therefore, we think that the judgment of the District Judge ought to be set aside, and the case sent back to him for a determination of the question at issue in the light of the observations we have made. Costs to abide the result.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 2nd December, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Hurbullubh Narain Singh.....2nd Party, Petitioners
 Luchmeswar Prosad Singh.....1st Party, Opposite Party.*

Superintendence of High Court—Charter Act (24 and 25 Vic. Cap. 104), section 15—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sections 145-1435—Dispute concerning a ferry including the land and water over which it plies—Order purporting to be made under section 145.

The local Legislature has power to overrule a statutory power conferred on the High Court; but this was not the object and result of the legislation expressed in section 1435 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1898. Empress v. Burah, (1878) 1. L. R., 4 Cal., 172; L. R., 5 I. A., 178, referred to.

The terms of section 1435 mean that orders under the exempted sections mentioned in clause (3) must have been passed with jurisdiction. If such orders are challenged as made without jurisdiction, the mere fact of their purporting to be passed under the exempted sections would not bring them within those sections so as to debar the exercise of powers by the High Court under section 15 of the Charter Act.

The right to a ferry, i.e., the right to carry passengers to and fro, cannot be treated apart from the possession of the lands used on either side of the stream for the purpose of landing them. It is a proper case to be dealt with under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) where the subject-matter of dispute is a ferry including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised.

THIS case related to a dispute regarding the possession of certain lands and water over which a ferry was plied. On a previous occasion proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) with regard to the disputed property had been taken by the Deputy Magistrate of Bhagulpur and an order was passed in favour of the first party, which was set aside on revision by the High Court on the ground that the Magistrate of Purneah had no jurisdiction. The High Court also expressed an opinion that disputes regarding a ferry came more properly within the scope of section 147 of the Code of 1882.

The subject-matter of the dispute was situated in the vicinity of the common boundary between the districts of Purneah and Bhagulpur. On the 6th of August 1898 the District Magistrate of Purneah again took proceedings and passed an order under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), also declaring the first party to be in possession. The second party moved the High Court and obtained a rule.

* Criminal Revision No. 647 of 1898, made against the order passed by P. H. O'Brien, Esq., District Magistrate of Purneah, dated the 6th of August 1898.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Mr. Jackson, and Babu Jogendro Chunder Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. Garth and Babu Ram Churn Mitter, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. Woodroffe.—The High Court has no longer any power to revise orders under clause [chapter ?] XII of the Code. The language used in clause (3) of section 435 makes it quite clear. The Magistrate's order in such cases is final, and the aggrieved party [190] must seek his remedy in the Civil Courts. [PRINSEP, J.—But may not cases of this kind come under section 530, and can we not interfere under the Charter Act ?] Section 530 deals only with irregularities which vitiate proceedings, such as want of local jurisdiction. As to the power of the High Court to interfere, the Privy Council have held in Queen v. Burah, (1878) 1 L. R., 4 Cal., 172; L. R., 5 I. A., 178, that the exercise of the power under the Charter Act by the High Court was meant to be subject to, and not exclusive of, the general legislative power of the Governor-General in Council. As to the facts the Magistrate has found that the subject-matter of dispute is a ferry including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised. This comes clearly within the scope of section 145 as it now stands. The section no longer relates to disputes concerning "tangible immoveable property," but to disputes concerning "any land or water or the boundaries thereof."

The Advocate-General.—The order passed in this case is without jurisdiction. The dispute is about the right to use a ferry. The owner of a ferry need not be the owner of the land and water over which it plies. The case does not fall under section 145; the proceedings should have been drawn up under section 147 of the new Code. If an order purports to be made under section 145 in a case where such order ought not to be made, then nothing contained in section 435 of the new Code can deprive the High Court of its power of interference under section 15 of the Charter Act. See Abayeswari Devi v. Sidheswari Devi, (1888) 1 L. R., 16 Cal., 80; Ananda Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Stephen, (1891) 1 L. R., 19 Cal., 127; Roop Lal Das v. Manook, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 572, and Queen-Empress v. Pratap Chunder Ghose, (1898) 1 L. R., 25 Cal., 852.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ.) was as follows:—

A rule was granted by a Bench of this Court requiring the [191] Maharaja of Durbhunga to show cause why an order passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should not be set aside—first, on the ground that that section was not applicable to the subject of the dispute between the contending parties, and, secondly, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order under section 145. Proceedings under that section were instituted by the District Magistrate of Purneah in consequence of a dispute between the Maharajas of Durbhunga and Sonbarsa which, he found, was likely to cause a breach of the peace, arising out of claims to use certain land for the purposes of a private ferry; and the objection taken, on which that rule was granted, may be shortly stated to be that a claim to a ferry is not cognizable under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate's action, therefore, being without jurisdiction, and that consequently the proceedings should be set aside under section 15 of the Charter Act, irrespective of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which, as expressed by section 435 of the Code of 1898, ordinarily bars the exercise of revisional powers by this Court. The subject-matter of dispute is said to be on the boundary of the districts of Bhagulpore and Purneah, and we find that, in the earlier part of this year, and before the Criminal Code of 1898 became law, proceedings under section 145 of the Code of 1882 were instituted by a Magistrate of the District of Bhaugulpore, and an order passed in favour of the Maharaja of Durbhunga was set aside by a Bench of this Court as a Court of Revision, on the ground that the dispute regarding possession of a ferry was not a dispute regarding tangible immoveable property within the terms of section 145 of the Code of 1882. The Court at the same time expressed an opinion that questions relating to disputes regarding ferries were intended to come within the scope of section 147. The Court also held that the order under section 145 was bad on the ground that on the affidavit of the Maharaja of Sonbarsa, which was not contradicted, the land on both banks was outside the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of Bhaugulpore, and that, therefore, he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. An application was subsequently made to this Court for a correction of this finding as erroneous as a statement of fact. It was then held by the Court that it had no power to reconsider the [192] order, even if erroneous, and that the point was immaterial, since the finding of the Magistrate was to the same effect, so that in either case the Magistrate had no jurisdiction. The present proceedings have been taken in Purneah under the Code of 1898, and section 145 of that Code has been amended, in so far that it has been differently expressed in some respects from the corresponding section of the former Code of 1882. It does not limit the action of the Magistrate to disputes relating to the possession of "tangible immoveable property," but it empowers him to take cognizance of disputes likely to cause a breach of the peace "concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof," and it gives an explanation of the meaning of the expression "land or water."

We have consequently now to consider whether this dispute falls within section 145 of the Code of 1898. But Mr. Woodroffe, who appears against the rule for the Maharaja of Durbhunga, contends that, by reason of the terms of section 435 of the Code of 1898 in amendment of the former law, this Court has no jurisdiction as a Court of Revision, or even under section 15 of the Charter Act, inasmuch as section 435 as amended removes any power that this Court may have had under the latter. Mr. Woodroffe relies on the well-known case of Queen v. Burah, (1878) L.R., 5 I. A., 178; I.L.R., 4 Cal., 172, in which it was held that the local Legislature had power to overrule a statutory power conferred on this Court, and he contends that this was the object and result of the legislation expressed in section 435 of the Code of 1898. Of the power of the local Legislature we have no doubt, but we do not agree that the power has been exercised as contended by Mr. Woodroffe, or that the terms of section 435 must be so understood. Matters under Chapter XII of the Code, that is, under section 145, such as the case now before us, are by section 435 placed in the same category as orders under section 143 and section 144, in respect of which section 435 of the Code of 1898 is expressed in the same terms as in the same section of the Code of 1882; and in regard to an order under section 143 or section 144, it has been held in many cases, so as to have become [193] settled law, that though powers as a Court of Revision under the Code cannot be exercised, still, if an order challenged be without jurisdiction, that is to say, if it be outside those sections, the mere fact of the order purporting to be so passed would not bring it within those sections, so as to debar the exercise of powers under section 15 of the Charter Act to set it aside as null and void and without jurisdiction. The terms of section 435 have, in this respect, been held to mean that an order must have been passed under the exempted sections with jurisdiction. As the most recent cases on this subject, we need only refer to Abayeswari Debi v. Sidheswari Debi, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 80; Ananda Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Stephen, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 127; Roop Lall Das v. Manook, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 572, and Queen-Empress v. Pratap Chunder Ghose, (1898) I.L.R., 25 Cal., 852. The matter for consideration then is--is the subject-matter of dispute within the terms of section 145 of the present Code? We may first of all observe that, with every respect to the learned Judges who decided the former case, we do not feel bound by the expression of the opinion that the matter properly comes within section 147, inasmuch as it relates to what may be shortly termed an easement, for that was not a matter properly coming under consideration in that case, and their finding was obiter. At the same time we are bound to give that opinion every consideration and respect in dealing with this case.

The proceedings taken show that the dispute has arisen, because the river has gradually altered its course, and the Magistrate has found as a fact that the two landing places are in the possession of the Maharaja of Durbhunga. The right to the ferry, that is, the right to carry passengers to and fro, cannot be treated apart from the possession of the lands used on either side of the stream for the purpose of landing them. No such question as has been attempted to be raised on the judgment of this Court in the previous proceedings, relating to section 147, therefore, arises in this case. As we understand the Magistrate's preliminary order, he meant to deal with the dispute in this manner; for he describes [194] the subject-matter as the ferry, "including the land and water upon which the right of ferry is exercised," &c. It is not described as a right to use the ferry, and it cannot, therefore, be so regarded.

We are of opinion that the rule should be discharged, inasmuch as the proceedings have been properly taken under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

S. C. B.

Rule discharged.

APPELLATE CIVIL

The 26th August, 1898.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI AND MR. JUSTICE PRATT.

Mahomed Nasim..... Defendant No. 8

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (Act I of 1886), section 65, section 68, section 70, sub-section (2), sub-section (3), and section 71—Act XI of 1859, section 37—"Estate"—"Property"—Shikmi haziram rights.

A purchaser of a part of a permanently settled estate is entitled to the benefit of section 71 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, inasmuch as in section 71 the words used are "property sold under section 70," and the property to which reference is made in section 70 includes both an estate as well as a share in respect of which revenue has been separately apportioned.

The object of section 37, Act XI of 1859, is the same as that of section 71, Regulation I of 1886. Those sections cannot be said to have different meanings, for if it were to be held that the incumbrance which could be set aside under section 71 of the Regulation I of 1886 must be an incumbrance actively created by the previous holder, it would amount to this, that any acquiescence or laches, either wilful or arising from pure negligence on the part of the holder, by which the taluk or estate becomes incapable in the hands of the purchaser of yielding the Government revenue, would be outside the scope of that section.

THIS suit was with respect to 16 plots of land, the area of which amounted to 2 hudas, 6 khadas and odd, said to be comprised in that portion of taluk No. 1, Rai Gour Hari Singh, which [195] subsisted after separate accounts had been opened. It was brought on the allegation that the plaintiffs had purchased that portion of the taluk sold for arrears of Government revenue and local rates due thereon on the 14th September 1892, and that they were consequently entitled to set aside the shikmi haziram taluk alleged by the defendants to be held by them under the said taluk Gour Hari Singh. The defendants contended that their shikmi haziram taluk had been in existence from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

The Munsif found that the defendants had succeeded in establishing their shikmi haziram rights in respect of 7 kanis odd of the lands in their possession, and passed a decree in respect of plots Nos. 1 to 13 in favour of the plaintiffs, dismissing the suit relative to plots Nos. 14 to 16 which came within 7 kanis odd.

The plaintiffs and the defendants both appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge dismissed both appeals. The defendant No. 8, Mahomed Nasim, alone appealed to the High Court from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry for the Respondents.

* * Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 791 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Shoshi Bhushan Sen, Additional Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, dated the 29th of January 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Nistaran Banerjee, Munsif of Moulavi Bazar, dated the 28th of February 1895.

The judgment of the Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Sylhet, affirming the judgment of the Munsif of Moulavi Bazar, by which the plaintiffs' suit has been in part dismissed and in part decreed. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs upon the allegation that they had purchased a taluk called Rai Gour Hari Singh at a revenue sale, and that they were consequently entitled to set aside the shikmi haziran taluk alleged by the defendants to be held by them under the said taluk Gour Hari Singh.

The defendants contended that their shikmi haziran taluk had been in existence from the time of the Permanent Settlement.

The area held by the defendants amounted to 2 hudas, 6 khadas odd. Without entering into a detailed statement of all the facts [196] of the case, we may mention that the Munsif found that the defendants had succeeded in establishing that they held a shikmi haziran taluk within taluk Gour Hari Singh from the time of the Permanent Settlement in respect of 7 kanis odd of the lands in their possession, but inasmuch as they failed to show that the remaining portions of the land included in plots Nos. 1 to 13 had been in their possession as part and parcel of their said shikmi haziran taluk from the time of the Permanent Settlement, he made a decree in respect of those plots in favour of the plaintiffs, dismissing their suit with respect to plots Nos. 14 to 16 which comprised 7 kanis odd.

The plaintiffs as well as the defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed both the appeals.

The defendant No. 8, Mahomed Nasim, has preferred a second appeal to this Court from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, and Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee has taken three points on his behalf. He contends, in the first place, that the plaintiffs, who were admittedly the purchasers, not of the entire estate but only of a part thereof, were not entitled to maintain this action in respect of the lands of the taluk which the defendants failed to show had been in their possession by virtue of shikmi haziran rights from the time of the Permanent Settlement; secondly, that, upon the words of section 71 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree in respect of the lands covered by plots Nos. 1 to 13, inasmuch as the right under which the defendants claim to hold them does not amount to an incumbrance created by any person other than the purchaser; and, thirdly, that the defendants had, at least, acquired an occupancy right in respect of these lands.

With reference to the first contention, it is to be observed that there is a great difference in the language of the Act in force in Bengal and the Assam Regulation. Chapter V of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886) declares the joint and several liability of all persons in possession of an estate or any part thereof for land revenue. Section 65 provides that when there are several recorded proprietors of a permanently-settled estate, any one of them, whether he is [197] entitled to a share of the estate or to particular lands comprised therein, may, by a written application to the Deputy Commissioner specifying his share of the estate or the particular lands therein to which he is entitled, get his revenue apportioned. Section 68 declares what is to be done when an arrear has accrued, and section 70 proceeds to provide that, when an arrear has accrued in respect of a permanently-settled estate or of an estate in which the settlement-holder has a permanent heritable right of use and occupancy, the Deputy Commissioner may sell the estate by auction. Sub-section 2 of that section runs as follows: "If the arrear has accrued on a separate account opened under section 65, only the shares or lands comprised in that account shall in the first place be put up to sale, and if the highest bid does not cover the arrear, the Deputy Commissioner shall stop the sale and direct that the entire estate shall be put up for sale at a future date, to be specified by him; and the entire estate shall be put up accordingly and sold." Sub-section (3) says: "No property shall be sold under this section for any arrear which may have become due in respect thereof while it was under the management of the Court of Wards." From sub-section (3) it would appear that the word 'property' was used intentionally to cover both the entire estate as well as the shares or lands in respect of which separate accounts had been assigned.

Section 71 provides that property sold under section 70 shall be sold free of all incumbrances previously created thereon by any person other than the purchaser. It will be noticed that, in Act XI of 1859, the word used is "estate." In section 71 of the Assam Regulation the words used are "property sold under section 70," and the property to which reference is made in section 70 includes both an estate as well as a share in respect of which revenue has been separately apportioned. In view, therefore, of the express term "property" used in section 71, we are unable to accede to the contention put forward by Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee that the purchaser of a part of a permanently-settled estate is not entitled to the benefit of section 71. In this particular case, what seems to have happened is that revenue in respect of certain lands had been separately apportioned, arrears fell due in respect of the remaining portion of taluk Gour Hari Singh, [198] and the taluk minus those lands was put up to sale and purchased by the plaintiffs. Having regard to the terms of section 71, it seems to us that the view taken by the lower Court is correct, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain this action.

We now come to the second contention, namely, that the right, under which the defendants hold the lands in respect of which their claim has been disallowed, does not come under the expression "incumbrances previously created thereon by any other person than the purchaser." This contention proceeds upon the difference in the language of section 37, Act XI of 1859, and of section 71, Regulation I of 1886. Section 37 of Act XI of 1859 says that "the purchaser of an entire estate, sold under this Act for the recovery of arrears due on account of the same, shall acquire the estate free from all incumbrances which may have been imposed upon it after the time of settlement." In section 71 of the Assam Regulation the words are "incumbrances previously created thereon." It is contended that as it has been found in this case the defendants had obtained possession of these extra lands over and above what they held from the time of the Permanent Settlement as their shikmi haziran taluk, by adverse possession against the owners of the taluk, it could not be said that it was an incumbrance created thereon. Now, in considering this matter, we have to keep in view the purpose of the provision that an auction-purchaser at a revenue sale shall get the estate free from incumbrances. The object as we understand it, is that he should get the estate in such a condition that he may be able to pay the Government revenue assessed thereon at the time of the settlement, and that no act on the part of the holders of the property or estate after the settlement by which the estate becomes deteriorated or rendered incapable of yielding the revenue fixed upon it at the time of the settlement, should be allowed to affect him. The words of Act XI of 1859 and of Regulation I of 1886 cannot be said to have different meanings. If we were to hold that the incumbrance which could be set aside under section 71 must be an incumbrance actively created by the previous holder, it would amount to this, that any acquiescence or laches, either wilful or arising from pure negligence on [199] the part of the holder, by which the taluk or estate becomes incapable, in the hands of the purchaser, of yielding the Government revenue, would be outside the scope of this section. As at present advised, it seems to us that we cannot acquiesce in that view. We think that the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge was right and we must accordingly overrule this contention.

As regards the occupancy right claimed by the defendants, it is to be observed that this claim was never put forward in their written statement, nor, so far as we can gather, at any previous stage of this suit. They claimed to hold the lands covered by plots Nos. 1 to 13 as part and parcel of their shikmi haziran taluk, and not as cultivating raiyyats. It seems to us therefore that it would not be right to allow them to change their ground in this Court. Such a contention requires to be dealt with upon evidence, and it does not seem that there is any fact shown in the case which would enable us to come to the conclusion that the defendants hold or cultivate these lands as raiyyats. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

† Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 508 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Srinath Pal, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge dated the 14th December 1896, modifying the decree of Babu Pankaja Kumar Chatterjee, Munsif of that District, dated the 2nd March 1896.

[200] Where a suit is brought before the expiry of the Bengali year in respect of the arrears of rent for that year, the landlord is not entitled to eject the tenant under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

THE facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Moulvie Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for arrears of rent for the years 1299-1302, and the facts upon which he bases his claim are shortly these: On the 20th Kartick 1291, the plaintiff acquired by purchase a raiya holding bearing the [201] annual rent of Rs. 14-1. On the same date, the plaintiff leased out the holding he had purchased to defendant No. 1 who executed in his favour a kabuliat which is on the record of this suit. Some four or five years after the execution of the kabuliat, the defendant No. 1 sold his under-raiya holding to defendant No. 2, and the plaintiff states that he has accepted the defendant No. 2 as his tenant, but he sues both the defendants for the rent of the years 1299-1302.

Tenancy Act was passed, but before it became law or came into operation. The Munsif held that section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had a retrospective effect, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge held that section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had not a retrospective effect, and decreed the appeal. From this judgment the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Moulvie Zahadur Rahim Zahid for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ.) was as follows:—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent claimed by the plaintiff as a raiya against the defendant who is a dar-raiyat or under-raiya under the terms of a written lease, and the only question that arises for consideration is, whether section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act limits the claim in this suit.

The first Court held that the section applied to the case, and it accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for an amount less than that stipulated for in the lease, and being within the limits prescribed by section 48. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree and given the plaintiff a decree in full, on the ground that section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to this lease, the lease having been granted previous to the date on which the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, though subsequent to the date on which the Act was passed.

In second appeal it is contended, for the defendant, that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that section 48 does not govern the case; and in our opinion this contention is correct. Section 48 says: "The landlord of an under-raiya holding at a money rent shall not be entitled to recover rent exceeding the rent which he himself pays by more than the following percentage: of the same, namely, when the rent payable by the under-raiya is payable under a registered lease or agreement, fifty per cent."

The suit was brought after the Bengal Tenancy Act had come into operation, and the plaintiff seeks to recover rent from his under-raiya. Can he do so, except within the limits prescribed by section 48? We think that the question must be answered in the negative. The objection urged on behalf of the defendant, appellant, does not seek to give to the section any retrospective operation beyond what its language expressly provides for. It only seeks to confine the plaintiff's right to recover rent by suit within the limits within which alone the same can be recovered under section 48 in a suit brought after that section came into operation. We may add that the language of section 178, sub-section 3, clause (e), gives support to the view we take.

As for the cases cited by the Lower Appellate Court in support of its decision, namely, Profullah Chunder Bose v. Samiruddin Mondul, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 337, and Tejendra Narain Singh v. Bakai Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 658, they relate to provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the language of which is very different from that of section 48.

For these reasons we think that the decree of the Court of Appeal below is wrong, and it must be set aside, and that of the first Court restored, with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

The defendants took several objections to the plaintiff's suit and the Munsif framed issues covering those objections. The third issue practically involves the question which has been argued in this appeal, namely, whether the rent payable to [202] the plaintiff by the defendants or either of them is liable to be reduced under section 48, clause (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Munsif found that the defendant No. 1 was not liable, but that defendant No. 2, having been accepted by the plaintiff as his tenant, was liable for the rent of the under-raiyati holding. He also found that the plaintiff was a raiyat and defendant No. 2 an ausut-raiyat, in other words an under-raiyat under the plaintiff, and that the entire raiyati of the plaintiff was covered by the defendants' ausut-raiyati. It was admitted before the Munsif that the rent of the plaintiff's raiyati was only Rs. 14-1. And that officer being of opinion that under section 48, clause (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendants' rent could not exceed 50 per cent. of the plaintiff's rent, he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff at Rs. 21-1-6 per year.

The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge, and the four points raised before him are thus stated in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge: First, whether plaintiff is entitled to get rent for the period claimed at the rate of Rs. 37-1 per year; second, whether the lower Court is wrong in awarding damages instead of the interest claimed; third, whether the defendants can be ejected from the holding in arrears; fourth, whether the lower Court is wrong in not decreeing the suit against both defendants Nos. 1 and 2?

In this appeal we are only concerned with points one and three. Before the learned Subordinate Judge it was admitted that the plaintiff's was a raiyati holding, and that defendant No. 2 held under him as an under-raiyat. The learned Subordinate Judge states that in express terms, and he was of opinion that section 48, clause (a) was retrospective in its effect, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover more than 50 per cent. in excess of the rent payable by himself to the zemindar. He also held that section 66 of the Tenancy Act requires for the purpose of ejectment that the arrears of rent should remain due at the end of the Bengali year, and as in the present case the plaintiff did not wait till the end of the year 1302 to institute his suit for the arrears of that year, the defendant could not be ejected from his holding for those arrears. He accordingly [203] upheld the decree of the first Court, giving to the plaintiff what had been found by the Munsif to be properly recoverable by him.

In second appeal to this Court two points have been raised by the learned pleader for the plaintiff-appellant. In the first place it is contended that section 48 (a) is not retrospective in its effect. This question came up before this Court in another case—Ram Kumar Jugi v Jafar Ali Patwari—decided by BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ., on the 14th July 1898, (ante, p. 199 note). There the learned Judges held that section 48, clause (a) was retrospective and operated as a bar to a raiyat recovering from his under-raiyat rent more than 50 per cent. in excess of the rent payable by him to his own landlord. Suffice it to say that we are entirely in accord with that judgment, and we, therefore, overrule this objection taken by the appellant to the judgment of the Court below.

It was next contended that this was a permanent mokurari lease coming under section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion this contention is wholly untenable. In the first place, the plaintiff is not the holder of a permanent tenure. He never alleged himself to be such. His suit is founded upon the allegation that he was only a raiyat, and his holding was a raiyati holding. Nor is the defendant the holder of a permanent mokurari lease, for throughout the proceedings he has been mentioned as being only an under-raiyat.

It was also argued that under section 66 of the Tenancy Act, the plaintiff was entitled to eject the defendant, inasmuch as the rent of the previous years had not been paid. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that as the suit was brought before the expiry of the year 1302 in respect of the arrears for that year, the plaintiff is not entitled to eject the defendant from his holding under the provisions of section 66. On these grounds we think that the careful and well-considered judgment of the Lower Appellate Court should be upheld, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Nature of Tenancy—Lease for construction of permanent works—Permanent Tenure—Conduct of lessor—Suit for rent—Alternative claim for compensation for use and occupation of land—Suit for land—Jurisdiction of High Court—Limitation—Acknowledgment of debt—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 19, and Schedule II, Art. 110.

The defendants and their predecessors in title held of the plaintiffs and their predecessors certain land under a pottah, which, though not expressly stated to grant a permanent lease, was granted for the purpose of constructing "a brick-built dock, buildings, &c., and workshops." The works were constructed; and during a period of 42 years the interest of the lessees was from time to time transferred, without any conduct on the part of the lessors or their successors indicating that they regarded the interest of the lessees as not permanent. Some years after the construction of the dock it ceased to be used as such.

Held, that the tenure created by the pottah was of a permanent nature.

A suit by a landlord against a tenant for rent at a rate agreed upon for one period, and for rent on the basis of use and occupation for a subsequent period is not a suit for land; and therefore the High Court may have jurisdiction to try such a suit even when the land is situate outside the local limits of its jurisdiction.

* The plaintiffs sued the defendants for arrears of rent from the 4th December 1899 to the 31st July 1894, relying upon the following letter as an acknowledgment sufficient to take their demand out of the Limitation Act: "As we have informed your client, we are quite willing to pay him the rent due under our mourasi pottah if he can show a title to give us a good receipt for it that will satisfy our lawyers. If he is in the same position that his father was up to the time of his death, unable to produce a perfect title, we are still willing to pay him the rent on his giving us a substantial indemnity similar to that which we had from his father."

* Original Civil Suit No. 531 of 1894.

Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment within section 19 of the Limitation Act.

Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 223: L. R., 16 I. A., 6, distinguished.

[205] THE following are the main facts of this case:—

The defendants, Messrs. Anderson, Wright and Co. (represented by the defendant Wilson) and their predecessors were for many years tenants to the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title of certain premises known as No. 7, Haripore Lane, Sulkea, in the suburbs of Howrah, at a monthly rent of Rs. 60-10-9 until the end of December 1889. The plaintiffs in this suit alleged that they duly determined the tenancy by a notice in writing on the 4th December 1889; but those defendants, claiming that they held a permanent lease, and that their rent could not be enhanced, continued in occupation of the said premises. The defendants had constructed a dock and other permanent works on the land in their occupation, under the terms of the pottah granted to them.

On the 31st July 1894 the plaintiffs brought this suit, claiming rent for the month of December 1889 at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9, and for the subsequent period to the end of June 1894 at the rate of Rs. 150 a month as a reasonable rent for the defendants' use and occupation of the said premises. A portion of the claim would, therefore, be barred by limitation unless the Court should hold that a sufficient acknowledgment of liability was contained in a letter, dated 5th November 1891, written by the defendants to the plaintiffs' solicitor, containing the following terms:—

"As we have informed your client, we are quite willing to pay him the rent under our mourasi pottah, if he can show a title to give us a good receipt for it that will satisfy our lawyers. If he is in the same position that his father was up to the time of his death, unable to produce a perfect title, we are still willing to pay him the rent on his giving us a substantial indemnity similar to that which we had from his father."

In June 1893 the defendants' attorney satisfied himself that there was no flaw in the plaintiffs' title, and offered to pay the rent from December 1889 if the plaintiffs would sign a receipt admitting that the defendants held a mourasi pottah; but this the plaintiffs refused to do. The defendants on their part refused to give the plaintiffs inspection of their pottah.

[206] On the 24th January 1898, Rajah Sew Bux Bogla was added as a defendant on the allegation that he had purchased the premises from the plaintiffs at a Registrar's sale held on the 7th August 1897.

When the case came on for hearing, the plaintiffs applied for and obtained leave to amend the prayer of the plaint by claiming in the alternative a decree for the rent from the beginning of 1890 to the end of June 1894 at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 per month. The facts will be found stated at length in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Sinha (with him Mr. R. N. Mittra) for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Hill and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Defendants, Messrs. Anderson, Wright and Co.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. Chuckerbutty for the Defendant Rajah Sew Bux Bogla.

Mr. Sinha having opened the case,—

Mr. Hall objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, inasmuch as it was, in effect, a suit for land situated beyond the territorial limits of the Court's jurisdiction. He argued as follows:—

If the plaintiff sues for damages for the use and occupation of the land, the question of the title arises; because one can only claim compensation for use and occupation on the basis of a claim that the land is his. This, therefore, is a suit for land; and, if so, the Court has no jurisdiction, and the plaintiff gets nothing. [O'KINEALY, J.—At least he gets Rs. 60-10-9 for which he sues.] That is doubtful. Can he, on a suit for compensation for use and occupation, get a decree for rent? A suit for rent is a suit on a contract; whereas a suit for compensation for use and occupation is a suit in tort, on the ground that the landlord has been deprived of the land to which he is entitled. A claim for rent of land cannot be changed into one for compensation for use and occupation; and we submit that a claim based on use and occupation cannot be changed into one for rent.

Next, the claim is barred by limitation, unless the plaintiff can prove an acknowledgment within section 19 of the [207] Limitation Act. True, the defendants offered to pay the rent; but on the condition that the plaintiff showed a good title to give a sufficient receipt. That was merely a statement that they would pay the rent upon the happening of an uncertain event, and was not an acknowledgment of a debt, but a mere allegation of an incident out of which a debt may arise, Young v. Mangalapilly Ramaiya, (1865) 3 Mad., H. C., 308. It was not an acknowledgment that the rent was due. It does not come within section 19 of the Limitation Act, for it is not in any sense an acknowledgment of any such liability as is set forth in the plaint. It was simply a promise to make a payment in a certain contingency, not an admission such as is contemplated by section 19. The claim is, therefore, barred as to a large part of it.

As regards the nature of the holding, these defendants claim to have a permanent lease. There are numerous decisions of this Court showing from what data a permanent tenure may be inferred. Where land is leased for the construction of permanent works, it is a fair inference that the lease was intended to be a permanent one.

Mr. Sinha for the plaintiffs.—A conditional promise to pay does not prevent the promise from being an acknowledgment within section 19 of the Limitation Act. An acknowledgment need not specify the amount of the debt acknowledged; indeed it need not specify anything at all, and need not be made to the person to whom liability is acknowledged, and therein it differs from a promise to pay. The defendants' letter is clearly an admission of their liability to pay rent, or compensation for use and occupation, to the person entitled to it. They say: "We are quite willing to pay the rent due under our mourasi pottah"; but that is their statement of how the liability arises, the admission of liability is there just the same. The admission is clear; the only question is, to whom are they to pay the rent? And it may reasonably be held that there is an admission of liability to pay compensation for use and occupation. The case of Young v. Mangalapilly Ramaiya, (1865) 3 Mad. H. C., 308, does not apply; because there the plaintiffs had to do something to create a liability, whereas, in the present case, the existence of the [208] liability is admitted; but the defendants want proof of the plaintiffs' title. In former legislation as to limitation the word "promise" was used; in the present Act the word "acknowledgment,"—a much wider term—is substituted. The English doctrine that an acknowledgment, in order to be effectual, must amount to a fresh promise to pay has never been adopted by the Indian Legislature. And if the debtor accompanies his acknowledgment with a promise to pay upon a condition, it is not necessary to prove fulfilment of that condition—Mohesh Lal v. Busunt Kumaree, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 340 (353).

As to the notice to quit, we rely upon section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. This is not a lease for agricultural or manufacturing purposes, and a lease for any other purpose is deemed to be a lease from month to month; this tenancy was, therefore, terminable on fifteen days' notice. And the words of the notice were sufficient for the purpose—Ahearn v. Bellman, (1879) L. R., 4 Ex. D., 201.

The defendants, therefore, by holding over, impliedly agreed to pay the enhanced rent—Janoo Mundur v. Brij Singh, (1874) 22 W. R., 548.

[Mr. Sinha on a subsequent day abandoned his position as regards the sufficiency of the notice.]

Mr. Pugh, on behalf of the defendant Raja Sew Bux Bogla, contended that this suit was a suit for land, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to try it. The suit is for rent up to a certain date; the plaintiff says that as he gave due notice to quit, he is entitled to compensation for use and occupation of the land. Now, however, the contention as to the sufficiency of the notice has been abandoned. There is therefore an end to the suit. [O'KINEALY, J.—There is no need to go into the question of notice if I find for the other defendants on the title.] But if upon the question of title the Court has no jurisdiction, the parties would not be bound by its decision. [O'KINEALY, J.—That is, if this is a suit for land.] Yes, and undoubtedly the claim for Rs. 60-10-9 is a claim for rent. Apart from the question of notice, I submit the Court cannot dispose of the question of title between the plaintiffs and the [209] defendants, Anderson, Wright & Co. It cannot, under colour of decreeing damages, decide the question of title to land outside the local limits of its jurisdiction. The question of title is purely an issue between the co-defendants; and this defendant is here simply to see that no decree is passed which would confirm as against him a permanent tenure in favour of the other defendants. [Mr. Sinha: If Mr. Pugh now goes into his case as to this, the plaintiffs ought not to be kept here; or, if so, I shall ask for the costs subsequent to this day. O'KINEALY, J.—I cannot decide anything on that point yet; nor can I decide whether I have jurisdiction until I have heard Mr. Pugh.] A purchaser would no doubt have notice of the ordinary incidents of the tenure. But in this case it is not an incident; because a permanent lease would be more in the nature of an alienation, and this defendant could hardly be affected with notice of that. He is not bound by any equities that may have arisen between the other defendants and the plaintiffs; that is all that he is concerned about.

Further, the pottah does not cover the whole of the premises in suit; but only two annas of it. The other defendants claim through Newaz Bibee, the widow of Sheik Imam Bux. According to the lady's own statement, what she took on the death of her husband was only a two-annas share of the land,—which, indeed, was all that she could take according to Mahomedan law. So that, as regards the other 14 annas of the land, the defendants were, at best, but monthly tenants. Moreover, the lease was granted to them only for the purpose of constructing a dock and works connected with it. Many years ago, the defendants ceased to use the dock as such, and filled up a part of it. Therefore the lease has determined—Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 223 · L. R., 16 I. A., 6.

Mr. Hill.—The plaintiffs could easily have ascertained that the defendants Anderson, Wright & Co. held this land as building land, and that it had passed from hand to hand under a number of recent transactions. They have not made any such inquiries and are [210] not entitled to the costs. This was a suit for rent to which they are not entitled. It might have been different if they had claimed the original rent and not an enhanced one. They denied our mokurari title; and now that we have proved it as against them, we ought to have our costs. [O'KINEALY, J.—They may succeed on their amendment, and it would be hard to give costs against them.] That was not the case we came to meet.

Mr. Sinha.—The defendants are not entitled to the costs. The issues they raised were (1) as to the jurisdiction; (2) as to whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the sums claimed or any portion thereof. The written statement was filed three years after their attorney had satisfied himself of the plaintiffs' right to receive the rent; and yet in it they denied the plaintiffs' right to any portion of the rent claimed. Further they say they will only pay Rs. 728 per annum subject to the law of limitation, and if this Court shall hold that the plaintiffs are entitled thereto. They have all along refused to give inspection of their pottah and have driven the plaintiffs into Court. They have never paid any sum into Court, and the offer they made was no offer at all. In England, a tender without payment into Court is no defence,—Order XXII, rule 3.

C. A. V.

The judgment of the Court was as follows:—

O'Kinealy, J.—In this case the plaintiffs claim to have been the owners of the premises No. 7, Haripore Lane, in Sulkea, in the suburbs of Howrah. They alleged that the defendants Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co. had been tenants under them in occupation of those premises at a monthly rent of Rs. 60-10-9 down to the end of the month of December 1889; that the plaintiffs by a notice to quit, dated the 4th of December 1889, determined the tenancy then existing between them and the defendants at the end of that month; but that the defendants nevertheless continued in the occupation of the premises down to the time of the institution of this suit, that is to say, the 31st of July 1894. The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 150 per month for use and occupation of the premises from the end of December 1889 to the filing of the plaint.

The plaintiff Rungo Lall Lohea is one of four brothers, the [211] others being Nahrnull, Sew Bux and Bhaniram, who constituted a joint Hindu family, and it appears that they carried on business in Calcutta under the style of Nahrnull Bhaniram, and while carrying on business under that name they purchased the premises No. 7, Haripore Lane. The other plaintiffs are the representatives of the three brothers of Rungo Lall Lohea.

The plaintiffs state that the defendants had paid the rent of the premises for the period ending with the month of November 1889 only, and they claim to recover the rent for the month of December 1889 at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 per month and the rent for the subsequent months down to the end of June 1894 at the rate of Rs. 150 a month, which rent was claimed by them as a fair and reasonable rent for the defendants' use and occupation of the premises during that period.

It is apparent from the above statement that a portion of the plaintiffs' claim would under ordinary circumstances be barred by the law of limitation, as the suit was not instituted till the 31st of July 1894. The plaintiffs, to obviate this difficulty, relied upon a letter written by the defendants to the plaintiffs' attorney on the 5th of November 1891, to the terms of which I shall hereafter refer.

With regard to the claim put forward by the defendants the plaintiffs say, in the fifth paragraph of the plaint, that the defendants objected to the notice claiming,—to use the words of the plaint,—“that the rent payable in respect of the said lands could not be enhanced by reason of some rights which they,” the defendants, “said they possessed under an alleged deed which they stated to be a perpetual pottah, but though endeavours have been made by and on behalf of the plaintiffs to ascertain from the defendants the nature of the said rights claimed, and to obtain an inspection of the said document, the defendants have persistently refused to give any such information or any such inspection.

The defendants in their written statement took a variety of objections: firstly, they said this Court had no jurisdiction to try this suit; secondly, they did not admit the title upon which the plaintiffs relied to maintain this suit; thirdly, they claim to hold [212] the premises under a mourasi potta or permanent lease granted in the year 1847 to their predecessor in title, and they allege in the fifth paragraph of their written statement that they had paid the rent under this pottah down to the end of November 1889, but that from the month of September 1881 they had paid the rent “to a person as they believe named Nahrnull Bhaniram, but they state that they did so without admitting the title of the said Nahrnull Bhaniram to the said premises and only upon an indemnity granted to them by one Sew Bux, a broker in their employ, inasmuch as the said Nahrnull Bhaniram was unable or unwilling to satisfy them that he had a complete or valid title to the said premises.”

In the 6th paragraph of their written statement the defendants say “that they had no personal knowledge as to whether the said Nahrnull Bhaniram was in fact a person as they believe or a firm as alleged in the 2nd paragraph of the plaint, but in any case they do not admit that if a firm it was composed of the members therein mentioned, or that the persons on whose behalf the plaintiffs purport to sue are the legal representatives of the members of the said firm,” that is to say, the defendants in this paragraph again raise the question of the plaintiffs’ title to maintain the suit which they had previously done in the 3rd paragraph of their written statement.

The defendants admitted the receipt of the notice to quit relied upon by the plaintiffs, but they did not admit that it emanated from the plaintiffs. They say they have always been ready and willing to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 per month, but they do not say to whom; they allege that this rent, though tendered, was refused, they do not say by whom; and they also say in the 9th paragraph of the written statement that “they are willing to pay the said rent at the rate of Rs. 728-2-10 per annum (subject to the law of limitation) if this Hon’ble Court should hold that the plaintiffs are entitled thereto;” that is to say, the defendants avow themselves willing to satisfy the decree of this Court in case they are not successful in preventing the plaintiffs from obtaining a decree against them.

In the 10th paragraph of their written statement the [213] defendants say this: “The defendants deny that they have refused to disclose to the plaintiffs the nature of the rights claimed by the defendants under the pottah above mentioned or that they have declined to allow inspection of the said pottah as alleged.” It will be seen from the evidence, which I shall deal with hereafter, that the defendants made no attempt to support this paragraph of their written statement. Indeed, that evidence shows that the statements in this paragraph are not correct.

This written statement was filed on the 13th of June 1896, nearly two years after the filing of the plaint, and the suit remained as then constituted.

until the 24th of January 1898, when by an order of this Court Rajah Sew Bux Bogla was added as a defendant, he alleging himself to be the purchaser of the premises in question from the plaintiffs at a sale held by the Registrar of this Court on the 7th of August 1897.

Hitherto in stating the questions, which have arisen between the parties, I have treated the case as if Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co. were the sole defendants, and I shall continue to do so until I come to deal specifically with the claim put forward by Rajah Sew Bux Bogla. It is convenient in this case that I should in the first instance determine the questions which arise between the plaintiffs and the original defendants in the suit.

When the case came on for hearing I gave the plaintiffs leave to amend the prayer of the plaint by claiming in the alternative a decree for the rent from the beginning of the year 1880 to the end of June 1894 at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 per month. In this position of matters the questions, which arise between the plaintiffs and the defendants, [leaving aside for the moment the question of jurisdiction which I shall deal with in considering the case of Rajah Sew Bux Bogla] are these:—

1st.—Did the relation of landlord and tenant exist between the plaintiffs and the defendants?

2nd.—If so, what was the nature of the tenants' interest in the land. That is to say, was it a monthly tenancy as contended for by the plaintiffs, or a perpetual lease as contended for by the defendants?

[214] 3rd.—If the tenancy were a monthly tenancy was that tenancy put an end to by the notice to quit, dated the 4th of December 1889?

4th.—Is the plaintiffs' claim under the plaint, as amended, or any portion thereof, barred by the law of limitation?

Upon the first question Byjnath Lohea, one of the plaintiffs, was called. He is the adopted son of Nahrnull, and from his evidence it appears that Nahrnull and his three brothers Rungo Lall, Bhaniram, and Sew Bux formed a joint Mitakshara family. They carried on business in Calcutta under the name of Nahrnull Bhaniram.

[His Lordship proceeded to discuss the evidence bearing on the first issue, and stated his reasons for coming to the conclusion on the facts that the relation of landlord and tenant did exist between the parties in 1889. He then went on to say:—]

I am of opinion therefore that the plaintiffs have shown that the relation of landlord and tenant did exist between them and the plaintiffs in 1889, or at least they have shown sufficient to entitle them to call upon the defendants to prove that such a relation did not exist between them, and this the defendants have not done.

The next question which I have to consider is what was the nature of the tenancy between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and upon this question I have come to the conclusion that it was a permanent tenure not subject to be determined by the notice of the 4th of December 1889, assuming that to be a valid notice in other respects.

The defendants have produced a document, dated 27th of Assin 1254, corresponding with the 12th of October 1847. This purports to be a pottah of ten bighas of land in Sulkea granted by Mussamut Newaz Bibee to James Cockrell, Thomas Gladstone, Alexander Robert, and Pitamber Banerjee. The defendants show by a series of title deeds that the premises covered by the pottah were mortgaged and conveyed from time to time by the lessees for the time being, and these deeds show that about the year 1861 those premises were known by the name of the Albion Docks and conveyed as such. The defendants also show that the premises [215] covered by the pottah were conveyed to the West's Patent Press Company by a conveyance of the 22nd of July 1876. The defendants were the managers of that Company, and Mr. Anderson proves that under that conveyance he got possession of the premises in question in this suit, and he also swears that these same premises were known in former days as the Albion Docks. There is, therefore, no doubt whatever that the lands covered by the pottah are the lands in question in this suit, and the next question I have to determine is, what interest does the pottah purport to convey from the lessor to the lessees. The pottah is expressed to be granted for the purpose of the lessees constructing "a brick-built dock, buildings, &c., and workshops," and after stating the boundaries of the land goes on to say: "You shall, without excuse, pay the rent hereof into my sarkar year by year at the rate of Rs. 90 (ninety rupees) per bigha per annum (amounting to) the sum of company's 900 (nine hundred rupees) for 10 bighas by instalments according to the details of instalments. If there be default in (payment of) kist, you shall pay interest according to law. Further if there be (any) alluvial accretion of land over and above the land aforesaid in future, you will duly make (arrangement) with regard to the same separately. To this effect, I grant this lease in writing after taking (a) kabuliat." The details of instalments show that the rent was payable yearly in six instalments of Rs. 150 each.

The conveyances and mortgages, which were put in evidence by the plaintiffs, show that the dock and other permanent buildings were erected on the land, and that the land was dealt with by the original lessees and their successors as if their interest therein were a permanent one. Mr. Anderson states the value of the pucca buildings on the land when he took possession of the premises in 1873 to be about a lakh of rupees. There is no direct evidence of the cost of building the dock, but there is no doubt it must have been very large. In the year 1870 there was a suit for rent instituted by the heirs of Newaz Bibee against the then holders of the pottah, and the occupiers of the premises. In this suit the original kabuliat was filed by the plaintiffs, and from the record it appears that after the pottah had been granted a decree was obtained, apparently by the owner of some land adjacent [216] to the premises covered by the pottah for possession of a portion of those premises, and in consequence of that decree and by an arrangement between the lessor and the lessees the yearly rent of Rs. 900 payable under the pottah was reduced to Rs. 728-10-9, and this reduced rent continued to be paid to Newaz Bibee and after her death to her son-in-law and her grandsons Sadut Ally and Futteh Hossain, and subsequently to these grandsons alone down to the year 1880 by the lessees for the time being. During the whole of this time there is no trace of any conduct or any assertion on the part of the lessors for the time being inconsistent with the fact of the pottah being a permanent one, which the lessees show from their dealings with it they considered it to be. In fact, the arrangement came to between the lessors and the lessees in 1861 for the reduction of the rent owing to the loss of a portion of the land would rather show that the lessors at that time did not consider they could eject the lessees by means of a notice to quit. If such an idea had entered their minds, it is extremely unlikely that they would agree to any reduction. We have therefore a lease of this land for the purpose of erecting structures of a permanent and costly character thereon. This of itself would, according to the decisions of this Court, be sufficient to stamp this lease as a permanent lease. But we have more than that here: we have a uniform payment of rent based on the pottah for a period of over forty-two years, and transfers of the lessees' interest to various persons within that period, while no conduct or assertion of the lessors during that period can be pointed to as indicating that they looked upon the lease as not a permanent one. I do not think the form of the receipts can be taken as such an indication. It is true that in the receipts of 1874, 1875, 1876, the names of the original tenants appear, and there is nothing to indicate that the tenancy is permanent, but there is a distinct admission in each of them of the transfer by purchase to West's Patent Press Co., or to the defendants Anderson, Wright and Co. The receipts given by Nahrmull Bhaniram seem to me to carry the matter no further. I have no doubt, therefore, that the tenancy from its inception was and was intended to be a permanent one, and that the plaintiffs could not determine it by a notice to quit.

[217] I am also of opinion that even if the tenancy were only a monthly tenancy, the notice given by the letter of the 4th of December 1889 was not sufficient to determine such a tenancy. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for anything except the rent from the month of November 1889 down to the filing of the plaint at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 per month, and I think they are entitled to that, as the defendant's letter of the 5th of November 1891 is sufficient to prevent any portion of this claim being barred by the law of limitation.

The next question is as to the costs of this suit. The defendants did not admit the plaintiffs' title to the rent from November 1889. They did not agree to pay the rent to the plaintiffs unless the latter would admit their pottah to be a mourasi mokurari pottah at a time when the plaintiffs had not had inspection of that pottah. It is true that the plaintiffs made no claim for the rent from the beginning of the year 1890 at the rate of Rs. 60-10-9 until this case came on for hearing, but this part of the claim stands in the same position as the claim for the rent of December 1889, to which the defendants, in their written statement, do not admit the plaintiffs are entitled. That written statement is not a very candid document, and I do not think the defendants were justified in taking up the position which they did. I shall therefore give the plaintiffs a decree for the costs of this suit up to and including the first day's hearing from the defendants Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Company. I make no order as regards the costs of the remaining days of the hearing, except the costs of the last day, which I shall deal with hereafter.

I have now to consider the case with reference to the claim of Rajah Sew Bux Bogla. He claims to be the owner of the premises, and he makes out his title in this way.

He has produced a certificate of sale, dated the 17th of March 1893, which shows that Rungo Lall Lohea on the 17th of April 1887, purchased at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against Sadut Ally and Futtch Hossain (passed in Original Suit No. 59 of 1880 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly) for a sum of Rs. 850, a 2 annas share in [218] five parcels of land, one of which is stated to be the premises in question.

He has also produced a certificate of sale, dated the 10th of June 1880, which shows that Jogeeram Agurwalla purchased at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by Annoda Prosad Chowdhry and others against Sadut Ally and Futtch Hossain (passed in Original Suit No. 59 of 1880 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly) for a sum of Rs. 31,800, a 14 annas share in three parcels of land, one of which is alleged to be the premises in question. This 14 annas share was afterwards purchased by Nahrmull Bhaniram in 1881.

It is in this way, according to Rajah Sew Bux Bogla, that the premises in question came into the possession of the plaintiff family.

He has also produced a certificate of sale, dated the 20th September 1897, which shows that Rajah Sew Bux Bogla purchased at a sale held by the Registrar of this Court under a decree obtained by Pokur Mull and others against the plaintiffs (passed in Suit No. 414 of 1894) for a sum of Rs. 24,000 two parcels of land one of which is alleged to be the premises in question.

He thus claims to be the owner of these premises, and he was made a party defendant in this suit at his own instance in order to see that his interest should not be prejudiced by any collusive proceeding on the part of the original parties to the suit.

He contended, as did the original defendants, that this was a suit for land, and that I had no jurisdiction to entertain it on that ground. But it seems to me that where, in a suit by a landlord against his tenant for rent at a rate agreed upon for one period and for rent on the basis of use and occupation for a subsequent period, it becomes necessary to determine what the nature of the tenancy was, I think that that fact does not make the suit a suit for land. There is no relief claimed in respect of the land, nor is it sought to deal with it in any way whatever, and I think the contention of the defendants involves what appears to me to be an undue extension of the phrase "a suit for land" as used in [219] clause 12 of the Letters Patent, see Juggernaut Doss v. Brynath Doss, (1878) I.L.R., 4 Cal., 322, and Land Mortgage Bank v. Sudurudeen Ahmed, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 358.

It was also contended on behalf of Rajah Sew Bux Bogla that the lease was granted for the purpose of building a dock only, and that the evidence shows that the defendants filled up the greater portion of the dock and have been using the unfilled portion merely as a water tank. Under these circumstances he urged that the lease had determined, and he cited in support of this contention the case of the Secretary of State for India v. Luchmeswar Singh, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 223 : L. R., 16 I. A., 6. In that case the Maharajah of Durbhanga brought a suit against the Government to recover possession of lands which had been in their possession from the year 1798. The defendants were admittedly tenants of the plaintiff, and it therefore lay upon them to show that their tenancy was still existing at the institution of the suit, or in other words that it was a permanent tenancy. There was no written lease, nor any evidence as to what were the terms which were agreed upon at the beginning of the tenancy, and all that the Government could rely upon to support their claim to a permanent tenancy was the fact that the rent was uniform throughout the whole period of their possession. The Privy Council held that that fact was of no weight under the circumstances of that case and dismissed the appeal. In the course of their judgment their Lordships say this: "But even if the onus probandi did not lie so clearly on the defendants, their Lordships think that the reasonable explanation has been given by the Courts below, and that there probably was some understanding, which might have amounted to an agreement, that the Government should have this land for the purposes of a stud, not that they should have it for ordinary agricultural or commercial purposes, to make what money they could of it. Thus the moment it ceased to be occupied for the purposes of a stud, the rights of the landlord would revert, and it was he, and not the Government, who would have the benefit of the increased value the land."

[220] Now, in the pottah of 1847, there is nothing to indicate that the duration of the lease is to be commensurate with the use of the proposed dock.

It appears to me the land was given to the lessees for commercial purposes "to make what money they could out of it," to use the words of the Privy Council, and I therefore think the case cited does not govern the present one.

It was stated on behalf of Rajah Sew Bux Bogla that the land belonged to Newaz Bibee's husband: that he died leaving her and one daughter surviving; and that this daughter married Hossain Ali, and by him had two sons, Sadut Ally and Futteh Hossain. Upon this state of facts Mr. Pugh contended that Newaz Bibee could only grant a 2 annas share in the land, and that therefore the pottah of the defendants only covered a 2 annas share of the premises in question, and that therefore the defendants were at most only temporary tenants of the other 14 annas share. No proof has been given of the facts stated, but assuming them to be correct I do not think the conclusions sought to be drawn from them are sound. The pottah purports to be a pottah of the whole 16 annas interest in the land. The agreement for the reduction of the rent consequent on a loss of a portion of the land was come to on that basis, and the rent suit, which I have before mentioned, was a suit for the rent of the whole land and not a fractional share of it, and was instituted by the persons entitled to the whole 16 annas of the reversion on the lease. Furthermore the rent receipts given by Sadut Ally and Futteh Hossain are receipts for the rent of the whole of the land and not of a fractional share of it. The rent was paid on this footing for a period of forty-two years, and it seems to me that the only natural conclusion to be drawn from these circumstances is either that Newaz Bibee had full power to deal with the entire interest in this piece of land, or if she had not originally that power, that her action was confirmed by her and her husband's heirs.

It was also stated that the title to the 2 annas share has been kept distinct from the title to the 14 annas share from the year 1864, but that mode of dealing with the reversion of the pottah of 1847, even if it were proved, which it has not been, is no evidence whatever as against the holders of this pottah, and I therefore think there is nothing in this contention [221] which has been put forward, not by the plaintiffs, but by Rajah Sew Bux Bogla on the plaintiffs' behalf.

I do not propose to decide any questions which arise between Rajah Sew Bux Bogla and the other defendants, save in so far as they are questions which also arise between the plaintiffs and Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co. Any ground of attack and defence not available both to the plaintiffs and himself, as against the claim of Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co. to have a permanent lease of these lands, remains untouched by me, and for that reason I decline to enter into the question as to the effect of Rajah Sew Bux Bogla's claim to be a bona fide purchaser for value of the premises in question without notice of any claim on the part of Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co. to a permanent lease.

The whole of the last day of the hearing and a portion of the previous day were taken up in placing the case of the defendant Rajah Sew Bux Bogla before the Court. The plaintiffs protested against receiving any assistance from Rajah Sew Bux Bogla and against the prolongation of the trial, which would be caused by hearing him. The other defendants also protested against his being heard, but I did not see my way to yield to those objections. He must, however, pay the costs of the last day's hearing to the plaintiffs, and to Messrs. Anderson, Wright & Co., and he must also pay them their costs of the application which he made to become a party to this suit, those costs having been reserved.*

[222] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd August, 1898.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Sonatun Shaha and others.....Decree-holders

versus

Dino Nath Shaha.....Objector.!

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 108 and 253—Ex parte decree—Surety—Liability of a surety, after a decree passed in the original suit—Surety bond purporting to hypothecate immoveable property—

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), section 59—

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 68.

An ex parte decree was set aside on condition that the defendant should find a surety, who would be responsible for any amount that might be found due from the defendant by any decree to be subsequently made in the suit.

Held, that under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a Court has jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree on these terms.

On an application to execute the decree, which was subsequently made against the defendant by the decree-holder, both against the defendant and the surety, objection was taken by the surety to the execution and was allowed by the Court below.

Held, that under section 253 of the Code of Civil Procedure the decree-holder was entitled to take out execution against the surety.

Held, also, that where a surety bond purported to hypothecate immoveable property, though it was not registered and attested by two witnesses, a personal decree could be passed on it against the surety inasmuch as the document was evidence of a money debt.

Madras Deposit and Benefit Society v. Oonnamalai Ammal, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 29 dissented from.

* An appeal was brought in this case but was struck off for default in appearance.

† Appeal from order No. 116 of 1898, against the order of Babu Shyam Chand Dhur, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 15th of January 1898, reversing the order of Babu Shyama Charan Ukil, Munsif of Barisal, dated the 24th of November 1897.

THIS appeal arose out of an application for execution of a decree. The facts were briefly these: One Govind Chundra Shaha and others obtained an ex parte decree against one Bhugwan Chunder Shaha. An application to set aside the ex parte decree was made by the judgment-debtor under section 108 of the [223] Code of Civil Procedure, and the said decree was set aside on the petitioner giving security for the satisfaction of any decree that might eventually be passed in the case. One Dino Nath Shaha stood surety for the said petitioner, and pledged some immoveable property as security. The case was heard de novo and a decree was ultimately made against the aforesaid Bhugwan Chunder Shaha. The decree-holder transferred his decree to one Sonatun Shaha, who applied to execute the decree both against the judgment-debtor and the surety. Objection was taken by the surety to the execution, inter alia, on the grounds, first, that the Court had no jurisdiction to take security under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that proceeding was illegal; second, that the Court ought not to have set aside the ex parte decree simply on taking security and without enquiring whether there was any good legal ground for setting aside the decree; and, third, that the security bond, being for more than Rs. 100, and creating a right to immoveable property and not being registered, was not admissible in evidence, and was invalid. The Court of First Instance disallowed the objections, and granted the decree-holder's petition. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he reversed the decision of the first Court and decreed the appeal. Against that judgment the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sri Nath Das and Babu Nund Lall Sarkar for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh and Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—In this case the plaintiffs obtained an ex parte decree against the defendant. The decree was set aside at the instance of the defendant, and it was set aside on terms, one of the terms being that the defendant should find a surety, who would be responsible for any amount that might be found due from the defendant by any decree to be subsequently made in the suit. The plaintiffs did not object, and the surety gave a bond to be so responsible.

I think the Court had ample jurisdiction under section 108 [224] of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside an ex parte decree on those terms. A decree was subsequently made against the defendant at the hearing of the suit, and the decree-holders sued out execution both against the defendant and the surety, relying on section 253 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Court below has refused execution against the surety, hence the present appeal by the present decree-holders.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh for the objector argues that section 253 does not apply to the case, because the surety here did not become liable before the passing of a decree in the original suit, but became surety only after the ex parte decree was pronounced. I think this contention is not well founded, for the words, in my judgment, mean "before the decree in the original suit" which had not been made but which would be made if the litigation proceeded, and for the performance of which the surety became liable. He became liable for a decree in an original suit which had not been passed when he became surety. I think then that the decree-holders were entitled to take out execution against the surety.

A further point is taken that the surety-bond was a mortgage of immovable property, and that, having regard to the terms of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, such a mortgage could only be enforced if it had been registered and attested by at least two witnesses. I understand this document has not been either registered or attested by two witnesses. The decree-holders answer this argument by saying that they do not rely on the document as a mortgage; they are not setting up any right to a charge on the property mentioned in the mortgage, but they say it is evidence of a money debt for which the surety made himself personally liable. The surety then contends that section 68 of the Evidence Act is a conclusive answer to this argument, and relies on a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Madras Deposit and Benefit Society v. Oonnamalai Ammal, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 29. Section 68 says: "If a document is required by law to be attested it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has [225] been called for the purpose of proving its execution," and so forth.

But the document in this case, as far as it creates a mere money or personal liability, does not, so far as I am aware, require to be attested, and, if so, section 68 does not apply. It is not set up as a mortgage. In this view, speaking with every deference, I am not disposed to agree with the case which has been cited.

Upon these grounds the order of the Lower Appellate Court must be reversed, and execution must be proceeded with against the surety.

The appellants will get costs in this and in the Lower Appellate Court.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Lower Appellate Court has set aside the order of the first Court allowing execution to proceed under section 253 of the Code of Civil Procedure against the person who became liable as surety for the performance of the decree, on the ground that the surety-bond was taken by the Court under circumstances under which it had no authority to take the bond.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that this view of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong, and that the Court, which took the surety-bond, had ample authority to do so under section 108 of the Code.

The only objection to the taking of the bond that the Lower Appellate Court points out is that the bond was taken by the Court without satisfying itself that the summons was not duly served, or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause to appear, when the case was called on for hearing. It is said that the "terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise," can be imposed under section 108 of the Code, only if the Court is satisfied that the summons was not duly served, or that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. Granting that this is so, there is nothing to show that the Court was not satisfied on these points before the surety-bond was taken. It is true that the ex parte decree was set aside by consent, but if [226] the petitioner's adversary consented to the decree being set aside on the ground either that the summons was not duly served or that the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, that would be the best method of satisfying the Court that the ground alleged was well founded.

I am clearly of opinion, therefore, that the ground upon which the Lower Appellate Court has held the surety-bond to have been irregularly taken is wholly untenable.

The learned Vakil for the respondent does not seek to support the judgment on that ground, but he contends, first, that under section 253 of the Code there is nothing to warrant the decree being executed in this case against the surety ; and, secondly, that the bond is altogether bad being in contravention of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act read with section 68 of the Evidence Act.

As to the first point, what is urged in support of it is, that the respondent did not become liable as surety " before the passing of a decree " in the original suit within the meaning of section 253 of the Code, an ex parte decree having been made in that suit, and having been in force at the time when he became surety.

I do not think this contention is sound.* Though an ex parte decree had been made, it was set aside, and we must take it that it was set aside simultaneously with the order for taking security, so that it could not be said that the respondent became liable as surety after the passing of a decree in the original suit which was then in force, or which has remained in force. The setting aside of that decree must have the same effect as if no such decree had been made at all.

As to the second point urged in support of the order of the Lower Appellate Court I have nothing to say in addition to what has been said by the learned Chief Justice.

Benami Transaction—Benami purchase -- Whether property was held benami for the claimant or was a gift to the holder—Evidence of ownership—Source of purchase-money.

The claimant, having supplied the purchase-money on the sale of the village in suit, took the transfer by sale deed in the name of the first defendant who remained in possession of it, receiving rents. The claim was for proprietary possession by the purchaser, on the ground that the property was held benami for him. The first Court decreed the claim. The Appellate Court reversed this decision.

The first Court had attributed too much to the fact that the plaintiff had supplied the purchase-money ; an important fact in most of the cases raising the question of benami, or not benami, but not the only test of ownership.

Here the source of that money was consistent with the claimant's having, as the defence alleged, intended to make a gift of the property to the holder of it; and the right inference from the facts was that it was not held benami for the claimant, but belonged to the defendant.

APPEAL from a decree (14th January 1890) of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, reversing a decree (28th September 1889) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

This suit was brought on the 21st December 1886 for the proprietary possession, valued at Rs. 6,382, with mesne profits Rs. 4,042, of mauza Habibpur in the Lucknow District, held by the defendant, and subject to certain interests, either with or under him, of ten other persons, co-defendants with him. The claim arose out of the sale of this mauza, which at the time, by registered sale deed, was transferred from a third party, one Haro Nath, into the name of the first defendant, Maulvi Muhammad Hadi; and afterwards dakhil kharij to him was effected. The plaintiff, the late Pandit Raj Narain, supplied the purchase-money, Rs. 2,220. He died in 1890, and his brother, the appellant Ram Narain, succeeded him on the record, obtaining leave to appeal.

[228] The plaint alleged that the possession by Muhammad Hadi was benami for Raj Narain, in whose employment Hadi then was. The written answer of the latter was that the transfer, taken in his name, was not benami for Raj Narain, but was really to him, the purchase having been designed for his benefit as a gift from his employer Raj Narain, "in consideration of his, the defendant's, faithful and important service extending over some forty years."

The principal issue questioned this defence, and the Courts having differed upon it, the question was again raised by the present appeal, on which Muhammad Hadi alone appeared as respondent.

The District Judge, on the conflict of testimony, was of opinion that the fact of the plaintiff's having provided the purchase-money was the criterion of ownership: and that the only direct evidence as to the alleged gift having come from the defendant, the Court could not rely upon it; so that the weight of the evidence was in favour of the plaintiff. The judgment referred to Agnew on the Law of Trusts (1882), Tagore Law Lecture, 1881, IV, on the subject of how far there was a presumptive character in a benamidar's holding, and to Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, para. 367.

That decision was reversed by the Judicial Commissioner, whose judgment was that the evidence led him to conclude for the defence.

Although Habibpur had yielded a profit of over Rs. 400 a year, yet for nine years and a half from the date of the purchase to the institution of the suit the plaintiff had without question or objection allowed the retention of the rents without requiring any account. The defendant had been in possession, and held the document of title, the sale deed of 1877, and the receipts for fees paid at the mutation of names. The judgment referred to an expression in Imbandi Begum v. Kamleswari Pershad, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 1005: L. R., 21 I. A., 118, that "where there are benami transactions, and the question is who is the real owner, the actual possession, or receipt of the rents, is most important. There were other dicta tending to show that [229] the person impugning the character of a transfer should show something to establish that it was a benami transaction. Lastly, there was the probability that the defendant would have been reasonably rewarded for his long and arduous services to Raj Narain.

On this appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, contended that it having been admitted that the plaintiff paid the purchase-money it was for the defendant to show that he had been made the beneficial owner. Due weight should be given to the plaintiff's statement that the purchase had been made ism farzi on account of the quarrels of persons who were entitled to maintenance out of the estate, Khalispur, of which this village was part.

Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondent Muhammad Hadi, argued that the Appellate Court below had rightly held that the plaintiff had failed to prove enough to get rid of the presumption of ownership attending this particular deed. The allegation that it was benami merely grounded on the fact, admitted throughout, that the purchaser had produced the purchase-money, was insufficient to displace the case, which was a reasonable and provable one, that the village had been bought for the purpose of making a gift to reward a servant for valuable services extending over many years.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon replied.

Afterwards, on the 26th November 1898, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The suit which is the subject of this appeal was brought by Pandit Raj Narain against the respondents for possession of a village called Habibpur in pargana Malihabad, district Lucknow. He having died after the admission of the appeal is now represented in it by his heir and successor the present appellant. The plaint stated that Raj Narain was the absolute owner of the village and had purchased it under a sale deed, dated 27th July 1887, for Rs. 2,225 ism farzi (fictitiously) in the name of his agent and steward, the first defendant. This defendant (first respondent) in his written statement denied that the deed of sale was executed fictitiously in his name. The [230] other defendants, except the 7th and 8th, claimed under a deed of gift by him, and the latter two under a mortgage alleged in the plaint to be collusive, which was denied. In the view which their Lordships take of the principal question it is not necessary to go into this matter, and it will be convenient hereafter to call the first defendant the defendant. The District Judge made a decree in the plaintiff's favour, which was reversed by the Additional Judicial Commissioner on appeal.

It was proved that the consideration-money for the sale was paid by Raj Narain. Two of the three witnesses who attested the execution by the seller were examined. One deposed that Raj Narain said he should get the document executed in another man's name, the other said that for five or six days there was discussion. Raj Narain said he was having the deed executed farzi in the name of an agent; he did not name him. Also Raj Narain was called by the defendant as his first witness, the plaintiff having previously called the first defendant as his first witness—a proceeding of which there appears to be no explanation. Raj Narain said: "I forget if defendant No. 1 was here when I purchased Habibpur. My papers show that he was. The purchase was ism farzi. The reason is clear; it was because of the quarrels of the maintenance holders. I have purchased other Khalispur villages at auctions in my own name. There are the same maintenance holders in them." On this statement there was apparently no reason for this village being bought ism farzi. It is difficult to learn from the judgment of the District Judge what is the ground of his decision in the plaintiff's favour. He says: "The true criterion is to ascertain from whose funds the purchase-money proceeded. In the present case it is allowed that the funds for the purchase of Habibpur were supplied by the plaintiff." In many,—it may be said in most,—cases of alleged benami this is a very important fact. But it is not the only criterion. Here it is consistent with the defendant's case, which is that the plaintiff purchased the village for him and intended it to be a gift in return for his services. In such a case a much more important fact is the actual possession or receipt of the rents of the property. The plaintiff himself said that the defendant was "in possession of the [231] collections" and had not accounted for them for nine and a half years. His statement that he said to the defendants five or seven times "give me the accounts of Habibpur," and the defendant said that money was due to him, is not, if true, a sufficient reason for not requiring accounts.* It is rather the reverse. The defendant in his evidence had said that the plaintiff never asked him for accounts. The plaintiff's father died in 1867. The defendant had been in his service for some years, and after his death continued in the plaintiff's service till 1886, receiving for his pay only 10 rupees per month. After making full allowance for exaggeration by the defendant of the value of his services their Lordships do not doubt that he performed some valuable services for the father and for the plaintiff during the ten years previous to the purchase of Habibpur, especially in managing an estate in the Sunderbunds which had been bought by the father for between Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 5,000, and was sold by the plaintiff for Rs. 39,000 or Rs. 40,000. The defendant had clearly some claim upon the plaintiff's generosity. It is true that benami transactions are very common in India, but this deed of sale appears to their Lordships not to be of that character, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal and to affirm the decree of the Assistant Judicial Commissioner dismissing the suit. The appellant will pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 486—Selling books with counterfeit property mark—Goods—Indian Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889).

Books are the subject of trade and are goods within the meaning of section 2, clause (4) of the Indian Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889) ; therefore when a person sells books with a counterfeit property mark, he commits an offence under section 486† of the Indian Penal Code.

THE facts of 'this rule and the arguments, for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. E. P. Ghose and Mr. J. R. Percival for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. P. Hill, Mr. P. J. Roy, and Mr. Grimley for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentences in this case should not be set aside on the ground that the facts found do not amount to the offences of which the petitioners have been convicted, or why the sentences passed should not be reduced or otherwise altered.

It appears that there is a well known Bengali Primer by one Ram Sundar Basack, and it has been found that this book has a property mark. The applicants are found to have sold large numbers of this book with a perfect knowledge that the book they sold was not the real book, but a book purporting to be the real one, and they were convicted of offences under sections 482 and 486 of the Penal Code, and also of abetment of those offences under section 109.

It has been argued in this Court that books are not goods under Act IV of 1889. "Goods" is defined in that Act to be [233] anything which is the subject of trade or manufacture ; and although it was not argued that in ordinary language books are not the subject of trade, yet it was said that they were not the subject of trade within the meaning of that Act. "Trade" is not defined, and we must, therefore, take the ordinary dictionary meaning of public or private, affixed to or impressed upon the same or upon any case, wrapper, or receptacle in which such goods are packed or contained, knowing that such mark is forged or counterfeit, or that the same has been affixed to, or impressed upon, any goods or merchandize not manufactured or made by the person or at the time or place indicated by such mark, or that they are not of the quality indicated by such mark, with intent to deceive, injure, or damage any person, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one year, or with fine, or with both.]

that word. That being so, there can hardly be any doubt that books are the subject of trade and of a very large trade in Bengal, therefore books are covered by the word "goods."

The convictions entered up against the accused are of three kinds: One for using a counterfeit property mark, the second for selling the book with a counterfeit property mark, and the third for abetment of those offences. But we think that the conviction in this case ought simply to be a conviction under section 486, and we accordingly set aside the convictions under sections 482 and 109.

The result, therefore, is that the applicants will remain convicted under section 486 and will suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months; and they will have to be taken into custody and serve out the remainder of the sentence.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 29—Enhancement of rent by registered contract—Increase in the amount of rent by reason of increase of area—Applicability of section 29 in such cases.

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to an increase in the rate of rent, and not to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of an increase of the area.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for arrears of rent due to the plaintiff for the years 1299 to 1302 B.S. The allegation of [234] the plaintiff was that the rent was payable at a certain amount; and in support of his claim he produced evidence to show that the rent was increased once in the year 1288 B. S., and again in the year 1295 B.S., there having been an increase in the area of the holding of the defendants. The defence was that the amount was not what was claimed by the plaintiff but less. The Court of First Instance decreed the suit of the plaintiff in part in accordance with the admission of the defendant. An appeal by the plaintiff to the Subordinate Judge was dismissed, the Judge holding that inasmuch as an enhancement could only be made by a contract in writing and registered, and as in this case there was no such contract, the plaintiff was not entitled to any enhancement at all. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1146 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Kali Prasanna Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 31st of March 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Kali Prasanna Roy, dated the 28th of September 1896.

Babu Saroda Charan Mitter and Babu. Satis Chandra Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Gyanendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

Babu Saroda Charan Mitter for the Appellant.—Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to a case where there has been an increase of rent on account of an increase in the area of the holding. Here, there is not an enhancement of rent, but only an alteration of the rent on account of the alteration in the area; therefore section 29 has no application. There is a finding of the Court of First Instance that upon a measurement there was an alteration in area.

Babu Gyanendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.—Section 29 applies to this case. There is no finding by the Court below that there was an alteration of rent on account of any alteration in area.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent.

The plaintiff's allegation was that the rent was payable at a certain amount. The defence was that the amount was less; and the plaintiff in support of his allegation, that the rent was what was claimed, sought to show that the rent was increased in 1288, and once again in 1295.

[235] The first Court found for the defendants, and gave the plaintiff a decree at the admitted rate. Certain other objections were urged by the defendants, which it is not necessary to consider. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has held that the alleged increase in the rent in 1288 was not proved, and that the increase in the rent said to have been effected in 1295 could not be given effect to, because it was not by a contract registered as required by section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In second appeal it is contended that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the increase in the rent that is said to have been effected in 1295 came within the scope of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is argued that section 29 applies only to an increase in the rate of rent, and not to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of increase of the area, and that the increase of 1295 was an increase of this latter description, as would appear from the judgment of the first Court.

We are of opinion that this contention is correct. Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to cases of increase in the rate of rent, which is ordinarily designated "enhancement of rent"; whereas increase in the rent by reason of increase in area is not called "enhancement of rent" but is styled "alteration of rent" in the Act; and there is reason to think that the increase in the rent in 1295 was due, partly at any rate, to increase in the area. Whether that is so or not it would be for the Lower Appellate Court to determine, it being a question of fact which we cannot enter into in second appeal.

The decree of the Lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside, and the case sent back to that Court in order that it may dispose of the appeal after determining the question whether there was any increase in the rent in 1295 by reason of increase in the area; and if there was any such increase what was the extent thereof. The costs will abide the final result.

It is admitted that this judgment will govern second appeals Nos. 1238 and 1239 of 1897.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 32, clause (5)—Statement relating to the existence of any relationship contained in a document signed by several persons, some only of whom are dead.

A statement relating to the existence of any relationship contained in a document signed by several persons, some only of whom are dead, is admissible in evidence under clause 5 of section 32 † of the Evidence Act.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of certain immoveable property by establishment of their title by inheritance. The plaintiffs' allegation was that they were the great grandsons of the maternal grandfather of one Raj Narayan Roy, and therefore they were the preferential heirs. The defendant denied the relationship of the plaintiffs to Raj Narayan Roy, and he claimed the property in dispute as being the heir. The plaintiffs, in support of their claim, put in a copy of a potta containing certain statements of the daughters of Raj Narayan to prove the existence of their relationship with Raj Narayan. Some only of the several executants of the potta were dead. The Munsif, having admitted this document in evidence, and considering other evidence in the case, decreed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, he affirmed the decision of the first Court. Against this judgment the defendant appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the statement made in the potta was not admissible in evidence.

Babu Promotha Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh and Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhry for the Respondents.

Babu Promotha Nath Sen for the appellant.—The recitals in the potta are not admissible in evidence, as they are not statements of a person who is dead. In this case all the executants are not dead, [237] and as "person" includes "persons," section 32 of the Evidence Act does not apply.

The respondents were not called upon.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) were as follow :—

Maclean, C.J.—In this case the statements in the potta—statements by way of recital—were properly admitted, in my opinion, as relevant facts under section 32, sub-section 5 of the Indian Evidence Act. The statements were recitals as to pedigree, and they supported the plaintiffs' case. The potta was executed by three sisters, two of whom are dead, and one of whom is still living. It was urged for the appellant that these recitals were not admissible, because they were not statements made by a person who was dead, but the joint statements of three persons, two of whom only were dead, and consequently that section 32 did not apply. This argument was based entirely upon that provision of the General Clauses Act which says that "person" shall include "persons," and it was contended that "person" in section 32 must be read "persons." I do not think this ingenious argument is entitled to succeed. Each of the sisters executed the potta and each of the sisters made the statement in that potta, and that statement was as much the statement of each sister who is dead as the statement of the sister who is now living. I do not see why, because there is one sister still living, and who might be called as a witness, the recitals become, on that account, any the less a statement, in the case of the other sisters, made by a person who is dead. It may be matter for legitimate comment in arguing the case that those statements must be received with caution, as the plaintiffs had not called the surviving sister to depose to their accuracy, but I do not think the matter could be placed higher than that. My view is consistent with the ordinary meaning of the language used in the section: and it would, in my opinion, be narrowing seriously the useful operation of that section if we were to place upon it the construction urged by the appellant.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised in this case is whether a statement relating to the existence [238] of any relationship contained in a document signed by several persons, some only of whom are dead, is admissible in evidence under clause 5 of section 32 of the Evidence Act. The contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is, that it is not admissible, because all the persons who joined in making that statement are not dead, and therefore the preliminary condition required by the section to be fulfilled is not satisfied. I am of opinion that this contention is not sound. The contention proceeds upon the assumption that the statement is but one statement, whereas the correct view is, that each of the executants must be taken to have made the statement for himself or herself, and if any of the executants of the document is dead, the statement made by that person would be admissible under section 32, if it comes under one or other of its clauses, as being the statement of a person who is dead.

The 2nd December, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Shama Charan Misser and others.....Defendants

versus

Chuni Lal Marwari..... ..Plaintiff.*

Interest—Compound Interest—The Santhal Parganas Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), section 6—The Santhal Parganas Justice Regulation (V of 1893), section 24—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sections 23 and 24—

“ Unlawful ” consideration, Meaning of.

There is no law or regulation laying down that an agreement between any two persons living in the Santhal Parganas to pay compound interest upon the amount borrowed is “ unlawful ” within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act. All that the law provides is that compound interest will not be decreed by any Court.

Referring to the Santhal Regulations, section 6 of Regulation III of 1872, and section 24 of Regulation V of 1893, it was held in respect of an agreement to pay interest on an amount composed partly of the principal and interest due on a former debt, that such agreement is not void under section 24 of the Contract Act, and that the obligee may recover such sums of money as he is entitled in law to recover, notwithstanding that part of the consideration is compound interest.

[239] THIS was an action on two mortgage bonds executed in favour of the plaintiff by the defendant Shama Charan Misser against him and his sons on the ground that they belonged to a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, of which Shama Charan, the father, was the karta or master. As regards one of the bonds (dated 17th Asar 1302 F. S., corresponding to 24th June 1895), one of the pleas taken in defence was that the amount of the bond having been made up partly of principal and interest due on account of a previous debt, the stipulation for payment of interest was really for payment of compound interest, which was not allowed by law in the Santhal Parganas, and that therefore under the general law (Contract Act, sections 23 and 24) the stipulation was unlawful and the contract void. The Deputy Commissioner held:—

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 599 of 1897, against the decree of R. Carstairs, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Dumka in the Santhal Parganas, dated the 12th of January 1897, modifying the decree of H. Heard, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, dated the 5th of October 1896.

"I do not, however, consider that compound interest is forbidden as illegal in section 6 of Regulation III of 1872. It may be taken and given without the breaking of any law, but it cannot be decreed by the Court, an entirely different matter."

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sris Chandra Chaudhuri and Babu Joygopal Ghosh for the Appellants.

Babu Karuna Sindh Mukerjee and Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was based upon two bonds; but there is no question raised before us as regards the first of them. The learned Vakil for the appellant has confined his remarks to the second bond. It appears that this bond was for a certain sum of money, a part of which was interest upon the amount covered by the first bond, and it was agreed between the parties that the whole amount of the consideration as mentioned in the bond should bear interest, the result being that the obligor promised to pay interest upon the interest which was due upon the first bond. The Courts below have given a modified decree to the plaintiff.

[240] It has been contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that, inasmuch as a part of the consideration for this bond was unlawful according to section 23 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff obligee is not entitled to recover, having regard to the provisions of section 24 of that Act, any portion of the money covered thereby.

Reference has been made to section 6 of the Santhal Regulation III of 1872, as also to section 24 of Regulation V of 1893, which modified to some extent the former Regulation. Section 6 provided that "all Courts having jurisdiction in the Santhal Parganas shall observe the following rules relating to usury, namely, interest on any debt or liability for a period exceeding one year shall not be decreed at a higher rate than two per cent. per mensem, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, and no compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of account shall be decreed," and so forth. Section 24 of the other Regulation provides that to "section 6 of the Santhal Parganas Settlement Regulation the following shall be added, namely: Explanation.—The expression 'intermediate adjustment' of account in clause (a) of this section means any adjustment of account which is not final, and includes the renewal of an existing claim by bond, decree or otherwise when without the passing of fresh consideration the original claim is increased by such renewal. Illustration.—A bond is given for Rs. 75, of which Rs. 25 are interest. Unless the obligee can prove to the satisfaction of the Court that he gave such consideration for the bond as rendered the transaction fair and equitable, of the Rs. 75, Rs. 50 only will bear interest, and the limit of the claim on the bond will be Rs. 100." There is no law or regulation laying down that an agreement between any two persons living in the Santhal Parganas to pay compound interest upon the amount borrowed is unlawful within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act. All that the law provides is that compound interest will not be decreed by any Court. And it appears to us that the illustration to section 24 of Regulation V of 1893, which we have just adverted to, shows clearly that a contract of this character may be so treated as to allow the obligee such sums of money as in law he is entitled to recover, notwithstanding that part of the consideration is [241] compound interest. We are of opinion that the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant on this head cannot be sustained, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sums of money for which the Court below has given him a decree, barring compound interest.

Another point has been raised before us, and it is this: No decree ought to have been given in this case binding the minor son of the obligor at any rate charging the mortgaged property. It appears to us that the Judicial Commissioner has found that the bond was given by the father of the family in his representative capacity, and in that view of the matter the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he asks for, it not being shown by the defendant that the debt was contracted for any immoral purpose.

For these reasons we think that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Kumar Nath Bhattacharjee and others.....Defendants

Nobo Kumar Bhattacharjee and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 120—Contribution, Suit for—Liability created by ekrarnama—Suit upon a covenant in the ekrarnama for money paid—Cause of action.

A suit upon a covenant in an ekrarnama (executed by some of the defendants who were adults, and by the guardian of the others who were minors at the time when the ekrarnama was executed) was brought by the plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining from the defendants contribution in respect of a debt which had been realized by the sale of the property mortgaged by the father of the plaintiffs. The defence mainly was that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within six years from the date when the ekrarnama was executed, or from the date when the mortgage debt became repayable upon the mortgage bond.

Held, that the cause of action in the case arose when the plaintiffs were damnified, i.e., when they paid the mortgage debt, and as the suit was brought within six years from that date it was not barred by limitation.

[242] THE material facts of this case, as stated in the plaint, were as follows: The plaintiffs' father and the defendants were members of a joint Hindu family.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 146 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Kali Prosunno Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated 12th of March 1897.

A dispute having arisen between the members of the family it was amicably settled by two agreements, one executed by the father of the plaintiffs in favour of the defendants and the other by the defendants in favour of the plaintiffs. By one of these agreements, the plaintiffs' father relinquished a certain share of the joint family property in favour of the defendants, and by the other the defendants agreed to pay one-half of the amount which the plaintiffs' father borrowed by a mortgage^d deed from one Raja Srinath Roy, for the necessity of the joint family. At the time of the execution of the agreement by the defendants some of them were adults and some were minors, and the mother of the minors signed^d the agreement on their behalf. Raja Srinath Roy, after the death of the father of the plaintiffs, instituted a suit against them, obtained a decree, and in execution thereof caused the mortgaged property to be sold on the 2nd September 1893, and appropriated the money realized by the sale in liquidation of the debt due to him. The plaintiffs, thereupon, brought this suit upon the terms of the agreement executed by the defendants for recovery of half the money so realized, and also claimed compensation at the rate of 12 per cent. from the date of the sale till the institution of the suit. The defendants, inter alia, pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to compensation. The Court below holding that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest as claimed by them, decreed the suit. From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Hara Kumar Mitter for the Appellants.

Babu Boidya Nath Dutt for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ameer Ali and Pratt, JJ.) (so far as it was material for the purpose of this report) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly under the following circumstances.

[243] The plaintiffs' father Upendra Nath Bhuttacharjee formed at one time with the defendants a joint Hindu family, but he appears to have separated from them in or about the year 1291, for we find that on the 31st of Assar of that year, corresponding with the 14th of July 1884, an ekrarnama was executed in his favour by some of the defendants, who were adults at the time, and by the guardian of the others who were minors, by which practically a partition was made of the joint estate and liabilities. It would appear from that document that, whilst the family was joint, Upendra Nath had the management of the entire property. It also appears that he had borrowed upon a mortgage executed by him in his own name from one Srinath Roy a sum of over Rs. 11,000. After the division in 1884 Upendra died, leaving the plaintiffs as his heirs. The exact date of his death is not disclosed upon the evidence; but it is said that it took place about six or seven years before the present action. After his death Srinath brought a suit against the plaintiffs, the heirs and representatives of Upendra, upon the mortgage executed by him, which ended in a decree; and in execution of that decree the mortgagee, decree-holder, sold a Calcutta property belonging to him. The plaintiffs bring this suit upon a covenant in the ekrarnama for the purpose of obtaining from the defendants' contribution in respect of the debt paid off by them as aforesaid. The covenant upon which they base their action is contained in clause 4 of the ekrarnama. It runs thus: "We shall be liable for one-half of the debts due by the joint estate and you shall be liable for the other half; and we shall respectively pay off the debts in proportion to our half shares. Let it be further declared that we shall pay off one-half of the amount borrowed in your own name under a mortgage from Srinath Roy and of the interest due thereon up to date, and you shall pay off the other half." They allege that the defendants are liable to pay them a half share of the amount paid by them to Srinath Roy, together with interest up to the date of payment. The defendants Probhu Gopal and Dwarkanath did not appear in the suit. The other defendants filed written statements, and among other objections contended that Upendra Nath had realized various sums of money from different parties indebted to the joint family, [244] and that they were entitled to have those sums credited against the amounts now claimed by the plaintiffs. They also allege that he was also liable to them under the ekranama for a share of the consideration paid by the joint family for the purchase of mouzah Soudra, and that in any event the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest as claimed by them. They also pleaded limitation.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs' suit was not barred by limitation; that the defendants had failed to establish that Upendra had realized the sums of money alleged by them; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to interest as claimed. He accordingly made a decree for Rs. 11,374, with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 2nd of September 1893 to the date of suit, with costs in proportion and interest at 6 per cent. per annum until realization.

The defendants have appealed to this Court, and a number of objections have been taken to the decree of the Subordinate Judge: First, that the suit is not maintainable on the ground that the cause of action accrued either on the date when the ekranama was executed, that is some time in the year 1884, or when the debt became repayable upon the mortgage bond; and the suit not having been brought within six years from those dates, assuming that article 120 was applicable to such an action, the suit was barred. It was also contended that the defendants, who were minors at the time of the ekranama, were not bound by the acts of their guardian. Besides these legal questions it was urged that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in disallowing the different items in respect of which credit was claimed by the defendants, and that in any event the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest allowed by the Subordinate Judge.

As regards the question whether the suit was maintainable or not, reference was made to Mayne on Damages, p. 405; Loosemore v. Radford, (1842) 9 M. & W., 657; Lethbridge v. Mytton, (1831) 2 B. & Ad., 772, and Rutnessur Biswas v. Hurrish Chunder Bose, (1884) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 221. All these cases point substantially to [245] the conclusion that when a person contracts to indemnify another in respect of any liability which the latter may have undertaken on his behalf such other person may compel the contracting party, before actual damage is done, to place him in a position to meet the liability that may hereafter be cast upon him. For instance, in Loosemore v. Radford, (1842) 9 M. & W., 657, the plaintiff and defendant were joint makers of a promissory note, the plaintiff being surety and the defendant as principal; the latter had covenanted with the former to pay the money to the holder of the note on a given day, but made default. Upon an action brought upon the covenant by the plaintiff who was the surety, it was held that the defendant was liable by way of damages for the full amount of the money that he ought to have paid according to the covenant. Lethbridge v. Mytton, (1831) 2 B. & Ad., 772, is to the same effect, and the same principle has been enunciated in the case of Rutnessur Biswas v. Hurrish Chunder Bose, (1884) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 221. In that case B had obtained from A a lease of lands, agreeing thereunder to pay a certain rental and a further sum of Rs. 183 odd yearly to A's superior landlord, and to obtain a receipt therefor. A sued B for the rent due to himself and for the sum due to his superior landlord; it was held that A was entitled to recover the sum due to his superior landlord as damages for breach of the contract, and that the amount of such damages ought not to be taken as nominal, but should be assessed on the footing of the sum for which A might become liable to the landlord. These cases, therefore, show that in a certain class of cases, even before an injury is done or damage takes place, the plaintiff may bring an action in order that the person making the covenant may place him in a position to meet the liability he has undertaken on the latter's behalf. No authority has been shown to the effect that such a suit may not be brought for damages subsequent to injury sustained. The causes of action in the two classes of cases are different. In the one there is a right to bring an action to have the plaintiff put in a position to meet the liability cast upon him; in the latter to be indemnified after the plaintiff has met the liability. We think, therefore, that the [246] plaintiffs were not bound to bring their action within six years from the date of the mortgage; that their cause of action arose when they were damaged, that is, when they paid the mortgage debt to Srinath Roy in 1893, and calculating from that time the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the suit was within time.

[The remainder of the judgment was on the merits of the case, and is unnecessary for this report. The case was eventually remanded.]

Upon this decision, the following remarks appear in Starling's Limitation Act, 1908, (1911, V. Edn.), p. 250:—"The cause of action arises when the plaintiff is damaged by payment of more than his share:—26 Cal., 241. If the judgment means that Art. 120 is inapplicable to such a case, it must be inaccurately reported or wrongly decided. It is difficult to make out what time elapsed between the overpayment and the bringing of the suit, but the former appears to have been in 1893, and the latter early in 1897."

In (1912) 34 All., 429, it was observed "with great respect to the learned Judges (who decided 26 Cal., 241) the rule laid down by them cannot be defended on principle. One breach of a contract can only furnish one cause of action and no more. Actual loss when it occurs is only one of the results of the breach and is not an act of the party who breaks a contract and can, therefore, create no second cause of action. It is a pity that the case of Battley v. Falkner 3 B. & Ad. 288, was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges. That case is a clear authority for the proposition that consequential damage arising from the breach gives no new cause of action. The claim in that case was for compensation for a breach of a contract brought within six years from the date on which the damages occurred but beyond six years from the breach. The suit was held to be barred by time."]

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Girindra Nath Mukerjee.....Judgment-debtor

Bejoy Gopal Mukerjee and others.....Decree-holders.*

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 58, 59—Security bond whether attested by only one witness—Signatures of the Sub-Registrar and the identifier on the back of the bond whether sufficient to render mortgage valid—Security for the costs of the respondent to Her Majesty in Council—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 603 and 616.

A security bond, by which an interest in specific immoveable property has been transferred to another person for the purpose of securing a future debt, is a mortgage bond within the meaning of section 58 † of the Transfer of Property Act; and in order to create a valid mortgage it must be signed by the executant, and attested by at least two witnesses. Therefore, in a case where the mortgage bond by which the liability of a surety was created was signed by the mortgagor only on the front page, and not attested by two witnesses, but on the back of the bond it contained the signatures of the Sub-Registrar and of the identifier, a suit is not maintainable inasmuch as the bond is not a valid one under section 59 ‡ of the Transfer of Property Act.

Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 429, distinguished.

Notwithstanding the admission of an appeal to Her Majesty in Council under section 603 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a surety is not precluded from questioning the validity of the security bond in execution proceedings, inasmuch as he was not a party to the order of the High Court.

THIS appeal arose out of an application to execute the order of Her Majesty in Council which awarded costs to the respon-[247]dents against the surety. The facts were shortly these: An appeal to Her Majesty in Council having been

* Appeal from Order No. 285 of 1897 against the order of Babu Aunant Ram Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 31st of July 1897.

†[Sec. 58 :—(a) A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability.

“Mortgage”, “mortgagor” and “mortgagee” defined.

‡[Sec. 59 :—Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses.

Mortgage when to be by assurance.

Where the principal money secured is less than one hundred rupees, a mortgage may be effected either by an instrument signed and attested as aforesaid, or (except in the case of a simple mortgage) by delivery of the property.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi and Rangoon, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon.]

admitted, one Girindra Nath Mukerjee furnished security to the extent of Rs. 4,000 for the costs of the respondents in the Privy Council appeal, and he executed a bond in favour of the Registrar of the High Court, by which he gave certain immoveable properties as security. The security bond was signed by the executant on the front page, and at the foot it was signed by the scribe. But on the back of the deed, under the recorded admission of the execution by the executant and his signature, there were the signatures of the scribe and of the Sub-Registrar. After the disposal of the appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the decree-holders applied for execution of the decree for costs against the surety judgment-debtors, who, inter alia, objected to the execution on the grounds that, inasmuch as the security bond was not properly attested, it was invalid under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act; that the security bond was not admissible in evidence; and that the application for execution should have been made by the Registrar of the High Court. The Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, relying upon the case of Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 429, held that the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act were complied with, and that the security bond was properly attested by two witnesses, inasmuch as the identifier and the Sub-Registrar signed under the signature of the executant admitting execution, and allowed execution to proceed. Against this decision the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Babu Lal Mohun Das and Babu Horendro Nath Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Srinath Das and Babu Hem Chunder Mitter for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C.J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows:—

The question raised in this appeal, which arises out of a proceeding in execution of a decree, is whether the order of Her Majesty in Council, which awards costs to the respondents, can be [248] executed against the surety, the appellant before us, notwithstanding that the mortgage bond which creates the liability of the surety is not attested by witnesses as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court below, applying the principle laid down in Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 429, has held that the requirement of the law as to the attestation of mortgages above a certain value is satisfied by the signatures of the Sub-Registrar and the identifiers of the executant below the registration, endorsement recording the admission of execution, and it has accordingly allowed execution of the order for costs to proceed against the surety.

Against this decision the surety has appealed; and it is contended on his behalf that the Court below is wrong in holding that the signatures below the registration endorsement supply the place of attestation by witnesses.

We are of opinion that this contention is valid. The attestation required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act is attestation by witnesses of the execution of the document, and not of the admission of execution. That is the ordinary sense of the expression "attestation by witnesses"—see Sharpe v. Birch, (1881) L. R., 8 Q. B. D., 111. If we look at the document itself the signature of the mortgagor does not purport to be attested. The signatures of the Sub-Registrar and of identifier are on the back of the mortgage bond, not on the same side as the signature of the mortgagor on the face of the bond. Having regard then to the provisions of section 59, in the absence of attestation, no mortgage has been effected. As regards the case of Nitye Gopal Sircar v. Nagendra Nath Mitter, (1885) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 429, that was the case of a will as to which the third clause of section 50 of the Indian Succession Act provides that it "shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will or have seen some other person sign the will in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person." So that attestation, either of [249] the execution or of the admission of execution by the testator, is expressly made sufficient for the purpose. That, however, does not hold good in the case of a mortgage deed—see Kumari Bibi v. Srinath Roy, (1896) 1 C. W. N., 81, and Tofaluddi Peada v. Mahar Ali Shaha, (1898) Ante, p. 78.

It was argued for the respondents that even if that was so it did not render the security bond invalid, as it is not a mortgage within the meaning of s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. This argument is not sound. The document was clearly intended to transfer to the Registrar of this Court for the benefit of the respondents an interest in the properties specified in the document for the purpose of securing to the extent of Rs. 4,000 a future debt, namely, a judgment-debt that might be created by the order of Her Majesty in Council; and thus the document became a mortgage as defined by section 58 of the Act.

It was next contended for the respondents that even if the bond was a mortgage bond, as the Court by admitting the appeal to Her Majesty in Council under section 603 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be taken to have held that the security given was valid, it was not open to the appellant to question the validity of the mortgage bond in these proceedings. We do not consider this contention to be well founded. The surety was not a party to the appeal nor to the proceeding by which the appeal was admitted. It was the appellant to Her Majesty in Council and not the surety, who put forward the security bond, and the surety cannot be held to be bound by the order admitting the appeal so as to be precluded from showing that the mortgage bond is invalid in law. In other words, as he was not a party to the order of this Court, he ought not to be taken to be bound by it.

It was lastly contended by the learned Vakil for the respondents that, as by section 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure the order of Her Majesty in Council regarding the respondents' costs can be executed against the surety to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable, in the same manner as it may be executed against the appellant to the Privy Council, the execution can proceed against the surety even if the mortgage bond be [250] invalid. We are unable to accept this contention as correct. The section provides that execution of the order for costs may proceed against a surety to the extent to which he has made himself liable. Now what is the extent to which the surety in this case has made himself liable? He has not made himself personally liable at all; for the mortgage deed contains no covenant to pay. The only extent to which he intended to make himself liable was by way of a mortgage on certain property which turns out not to have been effected owing to the mortgage deed not being attested as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. He undertook no other liability. We feel constrained, therefore, to hold that the security bond was invalid and did not create any liability in the surety which can be enforced. The order of the Court below allowing execution to proceed against the surety must consequently be discharged. We give no costs of the appeal.

S. C. G.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

. Dwar Buksh Sirkar.....Third Party

versus

Fatik Jali and another.....Judgment-debtor and Decree-holder.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—Parties to suit—

"Representative" of party—Purchaser of the decree from the Decree-holder—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 2, 232—Decree-holder—Application by transferee of decree—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (VII of 1888)—Second Appeal.

The word "representative," as used in section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when used with reference to a decree-holder, includes the purchaser of the decree from the decree-holder by an assignment in writing.

Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 62, and Badri Narain v. Jai Kishen Das. (1834) I. L. R., 16 All., 493, referred to.

The Court executing a decree which has been so transferred can go into the disputed question of the transfer of the decree under the provisions of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code as amended by Act VII of 1888.

[251] Where there has been an assignment pending proceedings in execution taken by the decree-holder, there is nothing in the Code which debars the Court from recognising the transferee as the person to go on with the execution even if he has omitted to make a formal application for execution, such omission being merely an error of procedure, and not an error affecting the merits of the case.

THE facts are set out sufficiently in the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Prio Sunker Mozumdar for the Appellant.

Babu Promotho Nath Sen for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows :—

In this case the property of the judgment-debtor was attached and proclaimed for sale. Two days before the date fixed for the sale the decree-holder represented to the Court that the judgment-debtor had satisfied the decree by payment, and asked that the execution case might be disposed of accordingly. No order was passed on this application. On the 1st November, the day fixed for sale, Dewar Bux Sirkar, the appellant in this Court, intervened, and objected to satisfaction being recorded on the ground that he had purchased the decree from the decree-holder by means of a kobala some time before the payment in satisfaction was alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtor, and that the decree-holder could not under such circumstances certify satisfaction. He also said that no payment had, in fact, been made, and that the decree-holder and judgment-debtor were colluding to defeat his right. The Subordinate Judge after taking evidence found that there had been a valid transfer of the decree previous to the alleged payment, and he allowed the objection and rejected the decree-holder's application to have the execution case disposed of as settled. He did not, however, find whether the judgment-debtor had or had not notice of the transfer, or whether he had or had not made the payment alleged by the decree-holder.

The judgment-debtor appealed, and the District Judge, without coming to any decision on the disputed question of transfer, reversed the order of the first Court on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make any such order under section 244 of the Procedure Code at the instance of the objector. He entertained the [252] appeal merely because he considered that the Judge had acted, although erroneously, under section 244. It is clear, however, that the appeal did lie, as the Subordinate Judge had in substance held against the judgment-debtor that the decree had not been satisfied.

The contention before us is that the Subordinate Judge had full power under section 244 to make the order which he did make. It appears that the appellant's pleader in the lower Court conceded that the case did not come under section 244, apparently with a view to defeat the judgment-debtor's right of appeal; but an erroneous admission of the pleader on a point of law cannot bind the appellant. The respondent's pleader, moreover, appears to have made the same admission, and the Judge said that it was obviously a correct admission.

A Full Bench of this Court held in Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 62, that a purchaser of the mortgaged property after a decree for sale was the "representative" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244, and that the word "representative" used with reference to a judgment-debtor was not confined to his legal representative, but included also his representative in interest, when the representative was, as regards that interest, bound by the decree. I think the word, when used with reference to a decree-holder, must in the same way include the purchaser of the decree from the decree-holder by an assignment in writing; and it has been expressly held by the Allahabad High Court in Badri Narain v. Jai Kishen Das, (1894) I. L. R., 16 All., 483, that the purchaser of the decree is the "representative" of the decree-holder within the meaning of section 244. A decree-holder as defined in the Procedure Code includes any person to whom the decree is transferred. As pointed out in the Allahabad case the expression "decree-holder" is not used in section 244. That section speaks of "the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives." The decree-holder who sold the decree was a party to the suit, and the person who purchased the decree from [253] him must, it seems, if he is anything at all, be his representative quod the decree within the meaning of the section.

The District Judge was also, I think, wrong in holding that the Subordinate Judge could not under the provisions of section 244 go into the disputed question of the transfer of the decree. That section, as amended by Act VII of 1888, provides that, if a question arises as to who is the representative of a party for the purpose of the section, the Court may either stay execution of the decree until the question has been determined by a separate suit, or itself determine the question by an order under the section. The only provision in the Code referring expressly to the assignment of a decree is contained in section 232, and that no doubt contemplates a case in which the assignee applies for execution. In such a case the Court may, if it thinks fit, after notice to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, allow the decree to be executed by the assignee. If, however, there is an assignment pending proceedings in execution taken by the decree-holder, I see nothing in the Code which debars the Court from recognising the transferee as the person to go on with the execution. The recognition of the Court is no doubt necessary before he can execute the decree, but it is the written assignment and not the recognition which makes him the transferee in law. The omission of the transferee, if it was an omission, to make a formal application for execution, was merely an error of procedure and does not affect the merits of the case. The Subordinate Judge had, I consider, power to determine, if he chose to do so, whether there had been a valid transfer of the decree. He did determine that the decree had been transferred by the kobala, and he decided also a question relating to the satisfaction of the decree as between the judgment-debtor and the person whom he found to be the representative of the decree-holder. The appeal of the judgment-debtor was properly before the District Judge, and he was bound to determine all the questions raised in it including the question of representation, if raised. A second appeal lies to this Court as the appellant is the person who was found by the first Court to be the representative of the decree-holder, and the District Judge has not found that he is not the representative.

[254] It is argued for the respondent that the transferee's title was not complete as express notice of the transfer had not been given to the judgment-debtor. As already observed, the transfer, as between transferor and the transferee, is effected by the written assignment. If the judgment-debtor had no notice of the transfer and being otherwise unaware of it paid the money to the decree-holder, the payment was, of course, a good payment, and he cannot again be held liable to the transferor [sic] Those are matters, however, which must be determined, and the order of the Subordinate Judge was defective inasmuch as it did not determine them.

The order of the District Judge is set aside, and the case remanded to him in order that he may determine all questions arising on the appeal. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Contribution, Suit for—Partnership business—Money borrowed by agreement by one partner and paid into partnership business—Decree against one partner—Suit for contribution by him against other partners—Adjustment of account whether necessary.

In a partnership business entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, it was agreed that each member, together with the gomastas of the business, should be at liberty to borrow money upon his individual credit and to pay into the firm the money so borrowed to carry on the business. The plaintiff conjointly with defendants 4 and 6, in accordance with that agreement, borrowed several sums of money upon promissory notes, and paid the amounts so borrowed into the business. After the loan the partnership business came to an end, but no account was settled. Afterwards decrees were obtained upon those promissory notes, and the plaintiff was obliged to pay up the decretal amounts. To a suit for contribution by the plaintiff, for money so paid, against the members of the firm, the defence, inter alia, was that the suit was not maintainable, in the absence of adjustment of the accounts relating to the firm.

[255] Held, that the suit was maintainable, inasmuch as the money secured by the promissory notes did not become an item of the partnership account.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, were as follows :—

The plaintiff in his plaint stated that he and the defendants carried on in partnership the business of commission agents in respect of country produce such as jute, etc., as also a money-lending business, and after giving the shares of the different persons interested he stated that by an agreement between the parties each member, together with the gomastas of the business, was authorised to borrow money upon his individual credit and to pay into the firm the money so borrowed to carry on the business. In accordance with this agreement the plaintiff stated he borrowed on his own credit, by two separate bills, two sums of money, aggregating Rs. 2,000, from the defendant No. 1 and a person of the name of Rup Lal Dass. Apparently the defendant No. 1 carried on a separate money-lending business in conjunction with Rup Lal Dass. The plaintiff paid the money so raised into the business. One of the notes was paid but the other did not appear to have been paid. The plaintiff went on to state that on the 28th of Bysack 1293, conjointly with the defendants 4 and 6, he borrowed from one Trilochan Nag, who was really acting on behalf of defendant No. 5, upon a bond executed by the three, a further sum of Rs. 3,000, which also was brought into the business. The plaintiff further stated that the karbar came to an end some time in 1294 ; that thereafter there was some talk between the parties about the taking of the accounts which went so far that the parties executed an achalnamah appointing certain arbitrators, but in consequence of the laches of the defendants, the attempt to take the accounts proved infructuous; that whilst these negotiations were going on he was induced by the defendants to renew the outstanding promissory note in favour of the defendant No. 1 and Rup Lal Dass; that subsequently the defendant No. 1 and Rup Lal Dass brought a suit against him upon that promissory note and obtained a decree which he paid up, and that similarly Trilochan Nag brought a suit upon his bond against the three executants, obtained a decree and got it satisfied from the plaintiff alone. He therefore brought this suit to recover the [256] amounts so over-paid by him in respect of the said promissory note and bond.

In paragraph 12 of the plaint he says as follows: "That because the amounts of money mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4 were borrowed and spent on account of business of the joint firm and for the interest of the joint firm, and as at the request and desire and with the consent of the partners, defendants, the promissory note mentioned in paragraph 3 was renewed in the manner stated in paragraph 8, the amounts of money mentioned in paragraphs 10 and 11 are the just debts of the plaintiff, and all the partners, defendants, etc."; and the prayer of the plaint was that the Court might be pleased to (ka) "confirm that the money paid off by the plaintiff, as stated in paragraphs 10 and 11 of the plaint, was payable by all the partners of the joint firm and to declare that the same was paid off by the plaintiff (kha), pass a decree against the partners, defendants, either jointly or severally, for Rs. 2,800 left after deduction of the 2-13th share of the total amount, including costs and damages due by the plaintiff as stated in schedule (ka), below, and of Rs. 23-9 whereof remission has been given from the amount in claim together with interest during the pendency of the suit, as well as future interest, damages and the costs in Court according to the respective shares of the business, as stated in the schedule (kha) etc."

A number of pleas were raised by the defendants which practically reduced themselves into two. They denied in the first place the agreement, in other words, the authority which the plaintiff alleged he had from the members of the partnership business to borrow upon his own individual credit; and, secondly, they denied that the money so borrowed was in fact applied for the benefit of the partnership business; and by way of demurrer they alleged that, inasmuch as a suit for the adjustment of the partnership accounts was barred, the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief in the present action.

The Subordinate Judge did not frame any issue in the case; but he considered that the defendants were entitled to succeed upon their demurrer, in other words that the plaintiff was not [257] entitled to maintain the action. He proceeded upon the case of Knox v. Gye, (1872) L. R., 5 E. & Ir., App. 656, in holding that as the suit for the partnership account was barred, any relief which the plaintiff might have been entitled to in this action was barred also, as according to the plaintiff's statement the money had been applied to the partnership business. The Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed the suit, and on appeal to the District Judge his decree was upheld. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Basant Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Lal Mohun Das, Babu Boidya Nath Dutt, and Babu Horendra Narayan Mitter, for the Respondents.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose for the appellant.—A suit for contribution by one partner against another does lie: see Lindley on Partnership, pp. 382 and 566. The case of Knox v. Gye, (1872) L. R., 5 E. & Ir. App., 656, does not apply to the facts of the present case. The present suit is one for contribution and not for adjustment of accounts. The cases of Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C., 97, and Merwanji Hormusji v. Rustomy Burjorji, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 628 (635), were referred to.

Babu Lal Mohun Das for the respondents.—The suit is not maintainable, inasmuch as there cannot be any suit for contribution without going into the accounts. The case of Knox v. Gye applies. Let an account be taken. Lindley on Partnership, 6th Edn., p. 551; Byle's Bills of Exchange, p. 43 (12th Edn), and also the decision in Appeal from Order No. 7 of 1896, (Post, p. 262 note) were referred to.

Babu Basant Kumar Bose in reply.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who has, in his judgment set forth at some length the arguments on both sides. He holds, and we think properly, that art. 99, Sch. II of the [258] Limitation Act of 1877 was applicable to this suit, the period running from the time when the plaintiff was compelled to make the payments; and applying strictly the decision in the case of Dayal Jairaj v. Khatav Ladha, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C., 97 (106), he was of opinion that the two defendants who joined with the plaintiff in executing the bond in favour of Trilochan Nag were liable for contribution to the plaintiff, but again reading strictly the case to which we have just referred, he thought that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain his action as against the defendant No. 1.

Now, it is necessary to bear in mind the frame of the suit. Strictly speaking, this is a suit for contribution, an action in equity well known to any one at all familiar with the practice and procedure which prevailed on the Equity Side of the old Supreme Court, and unless there is anything which would justify a demurrer on the part of the defendants, there can be no question that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover in this suit; provided, of course, that his allegations of fact are well founded. The Subordinate Judge thinks that, because the money which the plaintiff borrowed upon his own credit was applied for the purposes of the partnership business, it therefore became an item in the partnership account; and that consequently, in view of the remarks made by Lord WESTBURY in Knox v. Gye, (1872) L.R., 5 E. & Ir. App., 656, the plaintiff could not maintain the action for contribution apart from the account. It seems to us that the Subordinate Judge has taken a somewhat narrow view of the object and scope of the action even upon the rules which were prevalent in the English Courts prior to the passing of the Judicature Act in 1873. Knox v. Gye, (1872) L. R., 5 E. & Ir. App., 656, was a case in which the accounts of the business of which the parties were members were actually asked for; and the subject-matter of the action and the relief that was prayed for in that suit were intimately connected with the taking of the accounts. One of the noble and learned Lords held that, although the action was brought to recover a portion of the assets that had been realized by one of the partners after the dissolution of the partnership, it could not be recovered because the accounts could not be taken. The [259]' three other Judges were of opinion that an action for the recovery of a portion of the assets realized by one of the partners might be maintained. That view has been adopted by Mr. Justice GREEN in the case to which we have already referred, and by LATHAM, J., in the case of Merwanji Hormusji v. Rustomji Burjorji, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 628. The case of Knox v. Gye, (1872) L. R., 5 E. & Ir. App., 656, occurred long before the Judicature Act came into force. Mr. Justice LINDLEY in his work on Partnership summarises the effect of the new rules in words, which to our minds are absolutely expressive of the way in which Courts of Equity, so far as we are aware, now deal with such matters. In Lindley on Partnership, 5th Edition, page 560, will be found the following passage: "The Judicature Acts and rules have materially altered the law relating to actions between partners. Formerly no action at law could be maintained by one partner against another if it in any way involved 'taking a partnership account: for, although the right to an account was a legal right, the old action of account, at least between partners, had long become obsolete, and Courts of law had no machinery enabling them to do justice in matters of account. Hence it became settled that actions involving accounts between partners could not be sustained. The Judicature Acts and rules have, however, abolished this rule; and the present state of the law on this subject appears to be as follows: First, as regards real property; secondly, as regards personal property; thirdly, as regards actions for money demands or damages. The three following rules may be taken as guides: (1) An action for damages may be maintained by one partner against another in all those cases in which such an action might have been maintained before the Judicature Acts, provided the action would not have been restrained by a Court of Equity. (2) Any action which would have been so restrained cannot be supported. (3) An action may be maintained by one partner against another for any money demand which before the Judicature Acts could have been made the subject of a suit for an account." And with reference to this he says: "Practically the important questions which will arise under the new procedure are reduced to the [260] following. 1. When can an action be maintained between partners without taking a general account of all the partnership dealings and transactions? 2. When will such an account be ordered without a dissolution of the firm? The second of those questions has been already considered. The first, which has also been alluded to, can only be answered generally by saying that each case must depend upon its own circumstances and upon whether justice can really be done without taking such an account." Even under the old rules there were numerous exceptions in the practice generally followed in the common law Courts, and Mr. Justice LINDLEY in p. 562 gives for purposes of reference a summary of the circumstances under which an action could have been maintained, as also the circumstances under which it could not. In p. 564 will be found an abstract of a case where "A and B agreed to become partners and each agreed to furnish a certain amount of capital, and A lent B the amount B was to contribute. This loan constituted a debt for which an action by A against B would lie, although they may have actually become partners. And it also followed that if partners agreed to contribute capital from time to time to meet expenses as occasion might require, and one of them was compelled to pay the whole of the expenses for which all were liable, he could sue his co-partners for what they ought to have contributed according to their agreement." Another case of a similar character is given in p. 566, and in p. 567 some instances are given in which an action was held not to be maintainable. The case of Dayal Jairaj v. Khataw Ladha, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C., 97, arose out of a suit brought in 1878; whilst that of Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, was undoubtedly under the old rules. There four persons, shareholders in a certain company, borrowed on their own credit a certain sum of money which was applied for the business of the company. The plaintiff in that action had to pay in the entire amount, and brought a suit for contribution against his co-partners. The learned Judges held that the action was maintainable. They said that, inasmuch as some of the [261] shareholders had entered into a separate obligation, the suit was maintainable by the plaintiff as against the persons who joined in incurring the obligation with him. We think the learned District Judge in this case has regarded as a principle what was stated, as we understand it, merely as a test. To our minds the learned Judges in Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, considered the fact that four persons out of the company had entered into a transaction as an indication that that transaction had nothing to do with the partnership business. In our opinion they simply used that circumstance as a test for determining whether the transaction in respect of which the action was brought was so intimately connected with the partnership business as to make it an item in the partnership account. We are inclined to think that if the District Judge had not taken that limited view of Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, his conclusion would have been different. In the case of Dayal Jairaj v. Khataw Ladhia, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C. Rep., 97, Mr. Justice GREEN, on appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice SARGENT, pointed out what he thought was the principle properly deducible from the enunciations contained in Knox v. Gye, (1872) L. R., 5 E. & Ir. App., 656, and applying the test pointed out in Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, which was strictly applicable to the facts of the case before him, he upheld the decision of the Court below. The facts of the Bombay case were shortly these, and they indicate exactly how matters stood before Mr. Justice GREEN: Six persons were members of a partnership business. Two retired before dissolution, two became insolvents, and the plaintiff had to pay all the amounts recoverable from the different parties. He then brought a suit against the only defendant who could be sued. Upon objections raised by the defendant he subsequently added the other persons who had joined with him in contracting the debt for which he had been sued and held liable. There is nothing in the facts of the present case which would, in our opinion, bar a suit for contribution, unless of course the money secured by the promissory note became an item of the partnership account. The most important allegation which affords an indication to the question [262] whether the money was borrowed upon an understanding totally apart from the partnership business, or whether it became an item of the partnership business, is contained in paragraph 2 of the plaint. The plaintiff states that there was an agreement between the parties that one or more of them might upon his individual credit borrow money from outsiders which money he might pay into the business; and he alleges further that not only were the members so authorised, but also the gomastas were placed on the same footing, i.e., that under and by virtue of that agreement the gomastas had equal authority to pledge their credit. Apart from that agreement it cannot be said that the position of the gomastas was the same as that of the partners in the firm. To our mind this is a clear indication of the fact that the contract was wholly distinct from the partnership business. In considering also the question whether this suit is maintainable or not, we must bear in mind the allegations contained in paragraph 12 of the plaint relating to the renewal of one of the notes at the request of the defendants.

We have reserved for this stage this last case relied upon by the respondents in support of their contention. It is an unreported judgment delivered by two learned Judges of this Court on the 5th of January 1897 in appeal from Order No. 7 of 1896.* The facts out of which that appeal arose are Contribution, Suit for—Partnership business—Whether a suit for contribution by a partner against a co-partner would lie and in what cases—Adjustment of account whether necessary.

A suit for contribution by a partner against some of his co-partners, on account of money paid by him for the satisfaction of a debt contracted by him jointly with the said co-partners, is maintainable in cases where the liability satisfied by the plaintiff is not a joint liability of the entire partnership, or where the said partners were some only of several persons comprising the partnership, and the bond was executed not in the usual course of business of partnership; it is also maintainable in a case where the co-partners expressly promised to contribute their share of debt after a decree has been passed upon the bond.

THE facts of the case as stated in the plaint were shortly these: The plaintiff and the two defendants executed a joint bond in favour of one Deb Hari Gossami, and borrowed from him a certain sum of money. Deb Hari brought a suit upon that bond, obtained a decree and in execution of that decree realized the whole amount due under it from the plaintiff. It was admitted that the money that was borrowed by the plaintiff and the defendants was applied to the partnership business carried on by the plaintiff, the defendants and a third party, who was no party to the bond in favour of Deb Hari or a defendant in the suit brought by him. Plaintiff further stated that the decree-holder Deb Hari, after having taken out execution of his decree, threatened to put him in jail, and the defendants at this time when asked to contribute their share of the debt promised to do so, but avoided payment under some excuse or other. Thereupon the plaintiff brought this suit for contribution. The defence, inter alia, was that the suit was not maintainable, unless a suit for settlement of account of the partnership business was brought. The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit, holding that it was not maintainable. On appeal to the Judge of the Assam Valley District, he, holding that the suit was maintainable, remanded the case under section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Court below, to be tried on the merits. Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Jasoda Nundun Poramanick for the Appellants.

Babu Hem Chundra Miller for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an appeal from an order of the Judge of the Assam Valley District remanding, under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the first Court for trial on the merits the plaintiff respondent's suit which had been dismissed by that Court on the ground that the suit was not maintainable; and the question for determination in this appeal is whether the view taken by the Lower Appellate Court that the suit is maintainable is right.

The learned Vakil for the defendants-appellants contends that the question should be answered in the negative, and the ground of his contention is that the suit in this case is one that is brought by one partner against some of his co-partners for contribution on account of money paid by him for the satisfaction of a debt of the firm.

Now the facts of the case as stated in the plaint are shortly these: The plaintiff and the two defendants executed a joint bond in favour of one Deb Hari Gossami and borrowed from him Rs. 500. Deb Hari Gossami brought a suit against the plaintiff and the defendants upon that bond, obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree realized the whole amount due under it from the plaintiff. It was not disputed in the course of the argument that the money that was borrowed by the plaintiff and the defendants was applied to the not suffi-^[263]ciently stated in the judgment, nor do we understand the learned Judges in the sense in which the judgment was attempted to be construed. If the facts had been identical with the facts of this case, and if the learned Judges had gone so far as the learned pleader for the respondents attempted to make out, we would have felt it our duty to make a reference to a Full Bench. Having regard to the opinion expressed by the learned Judges, almost in the language of Mr. Justice LINDLEY as given at ^[264]p. 566 of his book, namely, that "if it was a liability of the partnership, then the mere fact of one partner having been compelled to pay the whole of the partnership debt would not entitle him to sue his co-partners, or any of them, for contribution in the absence of any special circumstances," we think they had distinctly in view the fact that even under the old rules there might be special circumstances which would make the action main-^[265]tainable. The case of Sadler v. Nixon, (1834) 5 B. & Ad., 936, referred to in that judgment, as Mr.

partnership business carried on by the plaintiff the defendants and the third party, a person named Sandhyaram, who was no party to the bond in favour of Deb Hari Gossami, nor a defendant in the suit brought by him. And the question is whether, upon this state of facts, the liability that was satisfied by the plaintiff was a liability of the partnership, or whether it should be treated as a separate liability. If it was a liability of the partnership, then the mere fact of the one partner having been compelled to pay the whole of the partnership debt would not entitle him to sue his co-partners or any of them for contribution in the absence of any special circumstances, though, of course, he would be entitled to charge the sum paid in the partnership account. In support of this view we need only refer to the case of Sadler v. Nixon, (1834) 5 B. and Ad., 936, and other cases referred to in Lindley on Partnership, 5th Edition, p. 566. On the other hand, if it be treated as a separate liability distinct from the partnership business, that is, in other words, if the liability which was satisfied by the plaintiff alone was not a joint liability of the whole partnership but a joint liability only of himself and the two defendants, in that case a separate suit would clearly lie; see the cases of Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, and Dayal Jai Raj v. Khataw Ladha, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C. Rep., 97. The determination of the preliminary objection raised to the tenability of the suit will, therefore, depend upon the determination of the question whether the liability satisfied by the plaintiff alone was a joint liability of the entire partnership or a liability of the plaintiff and defendants only. It was on the one hand argued for the appellants that the liability should be treated as a liability of the entire firm because the money borrowed from Deb Hari Gossami constituted the entire capital of the firm, and it had been borrowed in the usual course of business of the partnership and with the consent of the remaining partner Sandhyaram, and section 249 of the Contract Act was relied upon in support of this view. It was further contended that, upon the statements made by the plaintiff in his deposition, the firm should be treated as having consisted on the date of the loan only of the plaintiff and the defendants. On the other hand, it was contended by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff-respondent that the very fact of the bond having been executed by the plaintiff and the two defendants should be taken as sufficient for the present purpose to show that the liability created thereby was not the liability of the whole firm. Upon the material placed before us, we are not in a position to accept either of these two extreme contentions as correct. We think the question ought to be determined upon the evidence. Of course if it is found that at the date when the bond in favour of Deb Hari Gossami was executed, the plaintiff and the defendants were the only members that constituted the partnership, then the plaintiff's case should fail. So also should the suit fail if it is found that the money was borrowed in the usual course of business of the partnership on behalf of all the members, though the bond was executed only by three of them. But if it is found that the plaintiff and defendants were some only of several persons composing the partnership, and that the bond was executed not in the usual course of business of the partnership, in that case the suit will lie and should be tried on the merits. We should further add that if the express promise to pay that is referred to in the fourth paragraph of the plaint is made out, in that case, quite apart from all other circumstances, the suit will lie, and the Court should, therefore, in the first instance, determine whether this allegation in the plaint is true. The remand order of the Lower Appellate Court will, therefore, stand, but the questions for determination by the first Court in the first instance will be those indicated above. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

S. C. G.

Appeal dismissed.

Justice GREEN points out, has been doubted in the English Courts; and a reference to it will show that that case can hardly be regarded as an authority for the contention now advanced. Sadler v. Nixon was disposed of without any reasons being given. In this view of the law, and having regard to the case made by the plaintiff in this action, it appears to us that if there was a contract, either express or implied, between the plaintiff and the defendants that he should, like the gomastas as he alleges, pledge his [266] individual credit and borrow money from outsiders, and apply the same to the benefit of the business, the mere fact that the money was applied to the partnership business does not render it an item in the partnership account so as to preclude the plaintiff from maintaining the present action. The plaintiff did not actually seek for an adjustment of account, although he stated in one of his prayers that if it was necessary that accounts should be taken he was not unwilling to that course being adopted. The test in all these actions, as pointed out in Sedgwick v. Daniell, (1857) 2 H. & N., 319, is whether the money which was borrowed and sued for became by the mere fact of borrowing an item in the partnership account; but we think that is clearly not so here. We are of opinion therefore that with respect to defendants 4 and 5 the District Judge's decision proceeding on a strict and somewhat literal interpretation of the case of Dayal Jai Raj v. Khatai Ladha, (1875) 12 Bom. H. C., 97, is correct so far as it goes; and we accordingly affirm his decree as against defendants 4 and 5; but we think that the dismissal of the suit against the other defendants is erroneous. We accordingly set aside the order of dismissal and remand the case to the District Judge either to try it himself or, in the event of the parties desiring that evidence should be gone into regarding the [267] allegations in the plaint to which we have referred, to remit it to the Court of First Instance. In that case proper issues should be framed and the evidence directed to the points requiring determination. The plaintiff has throughout expressed his willingness to have the accounts adjusted; and as between him and the defendants 4 and 5, as also the other defendants, if his allegations are established, it will be a mere question whether he has been overpaid or not.

We think that under the circumstances of the case the plaintiff is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Parties—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 108, 109—Whether an auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application to set aside an ex parte decree—Partnership business—Service of summons upon minors whether good, by affixing summonses on the house in which the business is carried on—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 74, 76, and 443.

An auction-purchaser of property sold in execution of an ex parte decree, is not a necessary party to an application made by the judgment-debtor to set aside the said decree, inasmuch as the auction-purchaser does not come under the description of "opposite party" in section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In a suit for the enforcement of an equitable mortgage of certain property belonging to a partnership business, brought against certain minors and other persons who constituted a firm carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought, but the minors resided outside its jurisdiction, the summonses were neither served upon the minors, nor upon their guardian personally, but were affixed on the house in which the business was carried on.

Held, that there was no service of summons either personal or substituted upon the minors either under section 74 or under 76 of the Code of Civil [263] Procedure, even assuming that those sections can apply to a case in which some of the defendants who were interested in the partnership business are minors.

Held, also, that sections 74 and 76 of the Code of Civil Procedure are controlled by section 443 of the said Code.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, were shortly as follows :—

Raja Srinath Roy and others instituted a suit upon an equitable mortgage against a number of persons, including the present appellants, represented by their mother as their certificated guardian ; the defendants were all members of a partnership firm carrying on business under the name and style of Bungshi Badan and Giridhar Poddar. The plaint was filed on the 12th February 1895 and an ex parte decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs on the 13th February 1896. The present appellant made an application on the 2nd August 1897 to set aside the decree under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground that no summons had been served upon the minors or their certificated guardian. The Court below found that, although the firm was alleged to have stopped payment in August 1894, it continued as a matter of fact till April 1895, and was not formally dissolved by an order of the Court till the 11th May 1896. The Court further found that in the present suit, summons was served on the 9th March 1895 upon the defendants 3 to 8 at the office of the firm at Baliaghata, and held that such service was good service upon the minor defendants according to section 76 of the Code of Civil Procedure, although they were then residing in the District of Faridpore. The Court, also holding that as one of the partners, Srinath Poddar, appeared and defended the suit, there was sufficient appearance on behalf of the minors under section 36 of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 251 of the Indian Contract Act, dismissed the application under section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code. The petitioners appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Order No. 430 of 1897, against the order of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 7th of September 1897.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, and Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Pugh, Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Busunt Kumar Rose and Babu Jogendra Chunder Ghose for the Respondents.

[269] Mr. Pugh, for the respondents, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that the auction purchasers at the sale in execution of the original decree, which was sought to be set aside, had not been made parties to the appeal.

— The Advocate-General for the appellant.—The objection comes too late, as it was not taken in the Court below; moreover the auction-purchasers are not necessary parties. As to the merits, no summons was served upon the infants, and at the time when the summons had been served upon the other defendant the business had ceased to exist. The case of Gocul Das Dwarkadas v. Ganeshlal, (1880) I. L. R., 4 Bom., 416, referred to by the Subordinate Judge has no application to this case.

Mr. Pugh for the respondents.—The auction-purchasers are necessary parties, as the decree under which the sale took place is sought to be set aside. As to the merits, there was a valid service under section 74 or section 76 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Moreover appearance by the managing partner was a good appearance on behalf of the minors. See Indian Contract Act, section 251, Lindley on Partnership, 6th Edition, p. 280, and the case of Tomlinson v. Broadsmith, L. R., (1896) 1 Q. B., 386.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee in reply.—The auction-purchasers are not "opposite parties" within the meaning of sections 108 and 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as they would not be affected by the decree being set aside. See Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Chowdhry, (1868) 1 B. L. R., A. C., 56, and Zainulabdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 166; L. R., 15 I. A., 12. There was no valid service under section 74 or 76 of the Civil Procedure Code, as, in the case of infant defendants, these sections must be taken to be controlled by section 443; moreover, the firm was not sued as such and no attempt was made to serve the managing member as representing the firm. See Daniell's Chancery Practice, pp. 334, 335; and Lovell v. Beauchamp, L. R., (1894) A. C., 607.

This appeal arises out of an application by the appellants, under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the ex parte decree obtained by the respondents against the appellants, and certain other persons. The Court below has rejected the application, holding that summonses had been duly served on the petitioners under section 76 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the appearance entered by the defendant Srinath Poddar was an appearance entered by all the defendants; that the petitioners were aware of the institution of this suit; and that the application was not a bona fide one. *

Against this order of the Court below the petitioners have preferred this appeal, and it is contended, on their behalf—first that the Court below is wrong in holding that summonses had been duly served on the petitioners under s. 76 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that it ought to have held that no effective service of the summonses had been made on them; and, secondly, that the Court below is wrong in holding that the appearance entered by the defendant, Srinath Poddar, was an appearance entered on behalf of all the defendants as their recognized agent, and that it ought to have held that, so far as the petitioners being minors are concerned, appearance on their behalf could only have been entered by their guardian ad litem, duly constituted.

The respondents raised a preliminary objection that the present application could not be entertained in the absence of the auction-purchasers of the property sold in execution of the ex parte decree.

We are of opinion that the preliminary objection cannot prevail.

The parties entitled to notice of an application under section 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure are those that come under the description of "opposite party" in section 109, and they are in our opinion such of the parties to the suit as are interested in opposing the application. An auction-purchaser does not come within this description. It was urged that the auction-purchasers [271] are interested in opposing an application of this nature, as their position may be affected by the ex parte decree being set aside. The answer, however, to this argument is that, as the sale has been confirmed, their rights, whatever they may be, cannot be affected in any way by the present proceeding to which they are not parties and which is instituted with the object of setting aside the ex parte decree, and not of setting aside the sale held in execution of it. The preliminary objection must be over-ruled.

The following are the facts material to be stated. The two petitioners who are minors represented by their mother and guardian appointed by the Civil Court were, as such, represented by her as their guardian; and no order appointing her as guardian ad litem for the purposes of the suit was made under section 443 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This fact is undisputed. The suit was brought in 1895 against the minors, and certain other persons, who constituted a firm carrying on business at Baliaghata within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought, but the minors resided outside its jurisdiction; and the suit was for the enforcement of an equitable mortgage of certain property belonging to the partnership. The firm fell into financial difficulties about the year 1894, but the partnership was not dissolved until May 1896; and though it was contended by the present appellants that the partnership had ceased to exist since July 1894, we consider, though in the view we take the point is not very material, that the balance of evidence supports the contention that the firm continued to carry on business down to the 20th of March 1895. It is not disputed that the summonses in suit were neither served upon the minors nor upon their mother personally. The summonses on the defendants were taken to their place of business at Baliaghata, and sought to be served personally on some of them who were at that place, and on their refusal to sign the acknowledgment of service, they were affixed, on the 9th of March 1895, on the house in which the business of the firm was carried on.

These being the facts of the case, the first question is whether the summonses were duly served on the petitioners. If that question is answered in the negative the mere fact of the certi-[272] ficated guardian of the petitioners being aware of the institution of the suit is a matter of no importance, and cannot affect the rights of the minors. It must be borne in mind that section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code is imperative, and enacts that, if the applicant for setting aside an ex parte decree "satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall pass an order to set aside the decree, etc."

As we have pointed out, there was no personal service of the summons on the minors or upon their guardian, nor was the summons affixed to the house in which the minors or their guardian actually resided, but the Court below has held that the summons was duly served on the petitioners under section 76 of the Code. It is contended for the appellants that this view is wrong, because there could be no service of summons, actual or constructive, on the petitioners before any guardian was appointed for them under section 443, and the suit was not properly instituted against them, and further because the partnership business at Baliaghata had stopped payment before the institution of this suit. As in point of fact there was no service on the certificated guardian, the mother, this point is not very material, but as the person by whom the minors were said to be represented was their guardian appointed by the Civil Court, and there is no suggestion that she was not the proper person to represent them, the Court was under section 443 bound to appoint her as the guardian for the suit, and under such circumstances, it may well be, having regard to the view expressed in the Full Bench case of Suresh Chunder Wum Chowdhory v. Jugut Chunder Deb, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 204, that the absence of a formal order would not vitiate the proceedings.

As for the second branch of the contention, the evidence, as we have said above, indicates that the business of the firm was being carried on when the summonses were served.

The question then is whether there was due service of the summons under either section 76, or section 74 of the Code, [273] and whether either of those sections applies to a case in which a minor is sued along with other persons, or whether sections 74 and 76 are not controlled by section 443.

It is, we think, abundantly clear from the evidence that the service of the summons in this case was not made, and was not intended to be made, on any of the defendants for himself and for the other defendants as their partner, or as manager of their joint business, or as agent under section 74 or section 76. There having been no personal service on any guardian ad litem of the minors, the suggestion that the service such as it was, was one under section 74 or 76, savours somewhat of an after-thought. The service sought to be effected, and the judgment of the Court below supports this view, was personal service on certain of the defendants (other than the petitioners) in their personal and not in any representative character, and upon their refusal to sign the acknowledgment of service, the summonses were, apparently under section 80 of the Code, affixed to the place of business at Baliaghata.

In our opinion there was no service of the summons under either section 74 or section 76, even assuming that those sections can apply to a case in which some of the defendants who were interested in the partnership or business are minors. Though it is unnecessary for us to decide the point, it is by no means clear that those sections apply to a case like the present. Section 443 of the Code requires that a minor defendant shall be represented by a guardian appointed for the suit, in other words, by a guardian ad litem, and although that section does not expressly say anything about the service of summonses, it speaks of the person so appointed as being appointed to "put in the defence for such minor and generally to act on his behalf in the conduct of the case;" and it would be anomalous to hold that though the case requires the appointment of a proper person as guardian to act for a minor generally in the conduct of the case, service of the summons on a person other than such person may be sufficient service on the minor. In our opinion there has been neither personal nor substituted service of the summons upon the minor defendants, and, if so, they are entitled to have the decree set aside under section 108. It follows from the above that the [274] appearance which Srinath Poddar purported to enter on behalf of the minors is quite ineffectual. He had no power or authority to enter any appearance on their behalf.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, the order of the Court below must be reversed, and the ex parte decree made in this case must be set aside, and the Court below directed to proceed with the hearing of the suit. We cannot, however, part with the case without impressing upon plaintiff litigants the absolute necessity of proceeding with strictness in accordance with the Code in cases where minors are defendants. The inconvenience, difficulties, loss of time and money by not so proceeding are aptly illustrated by the present case, but all this difficulty might have been avoided if the plaintiff had complied with the Code and had seen that a proper guardian ad litem had been appointed in the first instance. His present position is attributable to his lack of due diligence and care at the outset of the suit. The Court ought to be jealous in seeing that in the case of minor defendants the provisions made for their protection are strictly complied with.

We should have been better satisfied if we could have taken a different view of the law applicable to this case, as there is ground at least for suspecting the sincerity of the application in the true interests of the minors, and we may add that it will be for the advisers of the minors to consider, and most carefully, whether any real benefit is likely to accrue from a rehearing of the suit, especially having regard to the question of subsequent costs. The respondents must pay the appellants their costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal—Appeal from Order— Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 57, 582, 588, 589—Returning plaint to be presented to the proper Court—Order under Civil Procedure Code, section 552.

* Appeal from Order No. 32 of 1898, against the order of J. Knox-Wight, Esq., District Judge of Patna, dated the 4th of February 1898, directing the return to the plaintiff for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court, the plaint which had been filed in the Court of Babu Hamengoo Chundra Bose, Subordinate Judge of that district.

appeal lies to the High Court under section 589. Section 588 does not prohibit such appeal. Bindeshri Chaubey v. Nandu (1981) I. L. R., 3 All., 456, distinguished.

THE facts and arguments on this appeal, so far as they are material to this report, appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Patna under section 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure, directing that a plaint which had been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of that District, be returned to the plaintiff for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court.

The suit was one for the recovery of damages by reason of breach of a contract on the part of the defendant in the matter of the sale of certain goods which had been consigned by the plaintiff, and despatched by him from his place of business in the [276] district of Patna to the defendant at Calcutta. The plaint mentioned in the first place what the nature of the contract was, and that the defendant had committed a breach of such contract in connection with the sale of the goods that had been consigned to him ; and it then stated that the cause of action had accrued at Sadikpore, Nawada, and Mokama, the places from which the goods were despatched to the defendant. The plaint, however, omitted to state where the contract was entered into between the parties, and also where it was to be fulfilled.

The defendant entered appearance on the 22nd December 1896, and presented a petition stating that the suit should have been instituted in Calcutta, and praying at the same time, under section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for stay of proceedings. The Subordinate Judge fixed, in the first instance, the 6th of January 1897, and ultimately the 22nd of January of the same year, for the purpose of determining the question raised by the defendant. On that date, the plaintiff was examined, and also cross-examined by the defendant, and he put in a petition for the amendment of his plaint. In that petition the plaintiff alleged that the contract between the parties was entered into at Mokama in the district of Patna ; and that the stipulation was that the price of the grains to be sold by the defendant should be paid at Barh in the same district ; and that, therefore, the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna. The Subordinate Judge allowed this amendment. Subsequently the defendant put in his written statement ; issues were fixed for trial upon the merits of the case, and ultimately the Subordinate Judge found upon the evidence adduced on both sides that the agreement was entered into within the jurisdiction of his Court ; that the proceeds of the sale of the goods transmitted by the plaintiff were payable in the district of Patna ; and that, therefore, the cause of action arose within his jurisdiction. He further found that the plaintiff had suffered damage by reason of the conduct of the defendant in connection with the sale of the goods in question, and accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree as claimed by him.

Against this decree an appeal was preferred by the defendant. [277] In dealing with this appeal, the District Judge has not gone into the merits of the case, but he is of opinion that the amendment of the plaint that was prayed for by the petition presented by the plaintiff on the 22nd January 1897 should not have been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, because the cause of action, as alleged in that petition, was totally different from that stated in the plaint, and that it created a " different jurisdiction ; " and he has accordingly directed that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff with a view to its being presented to the proper Court. Certain other minor points are dealt with by the District Judge in his judgment; but we do not think it necessary to notice them.

We observe that the learned Judge, though asked to do so, did not enter into the question whether the contract upon which the plaintiff sued was effected in the district of Patna or not.

The present appeal is by the plaintiff; and upon its being called on for hearing, a preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Vakil for the respondent upon the ground that no appeal lies to this Court under section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure from the order of the District Judge directing that the plaint be returned for the purpose of its being presented to the proper Court. In support of his argument the learned Vakil has called our attention to the case of Bindeshri Chaubey v. Nandu, (1881) I. L. R., 3 All., 456. In that case, which was instituted in the Court of the Munsif, the defendant raised the objection that the value of the subject-matter of the suit exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, and that, therefore, the suit was not cognizable by the Munsif. The Munsif, however, found that the value of the property was within his pecuniary jurisdiction, and on the merits gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal by the defendant, the Lower Appellate Court, upon investigation, held that the value of the subject-matter of dispute did exceed one thousand rupees, and that, therefore, the suit was not cognizable in the Court of the Munsif, and accordingly directed that the appeal be decreed, and the record of the case sent back to the Munsif for the purpose of the plaint being returned to the plaintiff for being presented to the proper Court. On second appeal, the learned Judges [278] of the High Court at Allahabad held that article 6 of section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure referred to an order passed by the Court of First Instance, and not to a decision of an Appellate Court on general grounds; that the proper course for the plaintiff appellant was to file a second appeal on proper Court-fees against the decision of the Appellate Court; and that the special appeal to the High Court could not be entertained. In the present case, it will be observed, that the learned District Judge of Patna did not go into the merits of the question, whether the cause of action to the plaintiff really arose within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna; but, as already stated, being of opinion that the amendment as prayed for by the plaintiff ought not to have been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, and confining, as we understand it, his attention to the plaint, has held that the plaint should be returned to the plaintiff for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court, being apparently of opinion that, upon the recitals in the plaint, the suit was not cognizable in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna, but in some other Court.

Section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that an appeal shall lie from certain orders mentioned therein, one of those orders being an order returning a plaint for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court as mentioned in article 6 of that section; and it is provided that the orders passed in appeals under that section shall be final; that is to say, that there should be only one appeal against an order of the kinds mentioned in section 588. No doubt, the order contemplated in article 6 of the section is one which it is ordinarily within the province of the Court of First Instance, where the plaint is presented, to make; but the like order may also be made by the Appellate Court under the powers conferred upon it by section 582. That section provides that "the Appellate Court shall have, in appeals under this chapter, the same powers, and shall perform as nearly as may be the same duties, as are conferred and imposed by this Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted under Chapter V ; and in Chapter XXI, so far as may be, the word 'plaintiff' shall be held to include a plaintiff-appellant or defendant-appellant," and so on. Then we find that [279] in section 589 of the Code it is provided that, "when an appeal from an order is allowed by this Chapter, it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in relation to which such order was made or, when such order is made by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court ;" so that, when an order is made by an Appellate Court under section 57 of the Code, by virtue of the powers conferred on it by section 582, and where an appeal has to be preferred against such an order, it must be preferred to the High Court, as provided by section 589.

We think, upon a consideration of the sections to which we have referred, that it was in no way the intention of the Legislature to prohibit an appeal such as has been preferred in this case against an order of the Appellate Court under section 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It seems to us to be clear that what section 588 prohibits is a second appeal against any of the orders mentioned therein ; but when a Court of Appeal makes the order by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by section 582, there is no reason to hold, having regard to the provisions of section 589, that an appeal does not lie against it.

Turning now to the merits of the matter before us, we are of opinion that the learned District Judge has not taken a right view of the question raised before him. As already pointed out, he has not investigated the question, whether or not the cause of action arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Patna ; but he is of opinion that the amendment allowed by the Subordinate Judge ought not to have been allowed, because the petition for amendment introduced a cause of action very different from that which was alleged in the original plaint, and a different jurisdiction. We have already mentioned what the plaint was, and also indicated the defect in it. It seems to us that the cause of action stated in the petition of amendment is in no way inconsistent with that alleged in the plaint. The plaintiff in his plaint omitted to mention, as we take it, the place where the contract was entered into, or where it was agreed that it should be fulfilled ; and the circumstances under which the cause of action arose in Patna were not accurately [280] stated, and all that was supplied and put right by the petition of the 22nd January 1897. It did not, as we understand, introduce a new cause of action, nor a different jurisdiction. No doubt, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, there was considerable delay in the presentation of the petition. But if the cause of action as mentioned in that petition did not raise, before the Court of the Subordinate Judge, a case altogether different from that set up in the plaint, there is no reason why the Subordinate Judge should not have allowed the amendment prayed for. It was discretionary with him to allow it ; and we do not think that the discretion was badly exercised. At any rate, he allowed the amendment, and tried out the case on the merits. That being so, we think that it was the duty of the Judge to investigate whether the contract between the parties was entered into in the district of Patna, and whether it was agreed that it should be fulfilled there.

We accordingly direct that the order of the District Judge be set aside, and the case sent back to him with a direction that he do determine the question whether the contract was entered into in the district of Patna, and whether the parties agreed that it should be fulfilled there. If he finds this question against the plaintiff, it will be his duty to return the plaint for the purpose of being presented to the proper Court, or make such other order as he may be advised in that behalf. If, on the other hand, he finds that the cause of action really arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge, he should try the appeal, on the merits, and determine whether the decree made by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiff should be affirmed or got.

The costs will abide the result.

[281] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Partnership—Alleged agreement—Burden of proof—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 253—Evidence—Income Tax—Income Tax Act (II of 1886), Rule 16—Production and admissibility in evidence of Income Tax papers.

In a partnership suit where one party does, but the other party does not, allege a specific agreement that the shares in the said partnership were unequal, the existing presumption as to the equality of partner's shares casts the burden of proof on those alleging the agreement who must therefore begin.

Rule 16 of the rules made by the Local Government under section 38 of the Income Tax Act (II of 1886) does not apply to the production of Income Tax papers in a Court of Law in a suit between two partners.

Lee v. Birrell, (1813) 3 Camp., 337, and Mayne's Commentary on the Criminal Law, pp. 86, 87, cited.

THIS was a partnership suit. The plaintiff and defendant had carried on business together for many years as dealers in stationery under the style of Day and Cousin. The plaint alleged that the parties in 1865 commenced to carry on business together upon the terms amongst others that each should be entitled to an eight annas share in the said partnership business; that the business was first carried on at the dwelling house of the parties, but that in 1870 a shop was opened at 9, Hastings Street, in Calcutta, and thenceforward the business was carried on at that shop, upon the same terms as before. The plaint also alleged that there was an equal contribution of capital. The defendant by his written statement denied that the shares were equal, and alleged that the business had all along been carried on upon the terms that the share of the defendant in the profit and losses should be 10 annas, and that of the plaintiff 6 annas, and that the capital had been contributed by the parties in proportion to their respective shares.

The plaint further alleged that the defendant had in fraud of the partnership opened another shop competing with the latter, [282] and had wrongfully closed the partnership business and excluded the plaintiff therefrom, and in the prayer asked for distribution of the partnership business, and that the usual accounts should be taken, and that the defendant should be ordered to account for the profits made in his other and rival shop, and should pay Rs. 2,000 as damages. At the trial the claim for damages and account of the alleged rival shop was abandoned, and the issue was limited to the question whether the shares were equal or unequal and as to their amount. During the hearing of suit the following points were raised :—

(1) As to whether the onus was on the defendant, who alleged inequality of shares in the partnership business, to prove it.

Mr. Sinha for the Plaintiff.—The onus is on the defendant. In the absence of any evidence the presumption is that the shares of the partners are equal. It lies on the defendant who alleges inequality to prove it. Lindley on Partnership, s. 348.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe (Mr. Dunne with him) for the Defendant.

Where no agreement is alleged or proved it is true that the presumption contended for does arise—Contract Act (Act IX of 1872), section 253 : but in the present case the plaint in effect alleges a specific agreement that the shares were to be equal. The plaintiff therefore rests his case, not on presumption but on the agreement, which he must prove.

Jenkins, J.—As the plaintiff does not allege any specific agreement, but contends that the business had been carried on without anything being said as to the amount of the shares, and as the defendant on the other hand alleged a specific agreement that the shares were to be unequal, the presumption which exists as to the equality of partner's shares casts the burden of proof upon the defendant, who must therefore begin.

(2) A further question then arose as to the production of certain Income Tax returns made by the firm of Day and Cousin. It was alleged that it would appear from these returns that the firm had stated the shares of the partners to be as alleged by the defendant. Application had been made to the Registrar for the issue of a subpoena upon the Income Tax Collector to produce all returns made by the firm from the year 1886. The Registrar refused to [283] issue the subpoena without the order of the Court by reason of Rule 16 issued under section 38 of the Income Tax Act (II of 1886) (Calcutta Gazette, March 10th, 1886), which rule was as follows :—

"16. All public servants are forbidden to make public or disclose, except for the purpose of the working of Act II of 1886, any information contained in documents delivered or produced with respect to assessments under Part IV of the said Act, and any public servant committing a breach of this rule shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 166 of the Indian Penal Code."

On application being made to the Court by the defendant, the subpoena was ordered to issue to the Income Tax Collector for the production in Court of returns without prejudice to any objection raised hereafter by the parties as to the production in evidence of these documents. At the hearing a clerk from the Income Tax Office attended with two Income Tax returns (the preceding returns having been destroyed), but objected on behalf of the Collector to their production in evidence on the ground of their being confidential communications and on the ground of the rule abovementioned.

Mr. J. G. Woodroffe for the Defendant.—These documents are not privileged from production. It is for the Court, not the Registrar, to decide as to the production of the document in evidence. The rule was published with the object of regulating the conduct of the officers of the Income Tax Office, not with the object of depriving litigants of evidence which they would otherwise be entitled to use. The rule has no application where disclosure is sought under the process of Court. Even if the rule has such application production can in this case be enforced because there is in fact no disclosure. The rule is for the protection of persons making returns. There can be no disclosure where the person applying for the return is the partner in the firm which made it. This is not the case of a stranger applying for returns made by a firm with which he is not connected. In the case of Ali Khan Bahadur v. Indar Parshad, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 950: L. R., 23 I. A., 92, the Judicial Commissioners held the returns to be inadmissible, but the Privy Council, [284] while deciding nothing upon this finding, appear to have inspected the returns in question. [JENKINS, J.—There are the cases of Lee v. Birrell, (1813) 3 Camp. 337; and R. v. Yakataz Khan, (1863) 2nd Madras Sessions, cited in Mayne's Criminal Law, pp. 86, 87.] Those cases are in the defendant's favour. No doubt it does not there appear that there was any such rule then in force as that which is now published: See Act XVII of 1870; and 46 Geo. III, c. 65, Sched. F; but there is no substantial difference between the oath of secrecy there referred to and the rule in question.

Mr. Pugh for the Plaintiff.—The grounds on which the plaintiff objects to these documents being produced are because he knows nothing about them. In England there was no statutory provision, but the Income Tax Officer was appointed on taking an oath not to disclose secrets which came to his knowledge. The question before Lord ELLENBOROUGH was whether, notwithstanding the oath, he could be made to disclose the particulars. Here there is a statutory provision, and the facts in that case differ materially from those in the present case.

Mr. Woodroffe.—In reply.

Jenkins, J.—The point for my decision is whether certain Income Tax papers, which are desired in evidence, are privileged from production by virtue of a rule made by the Local Government in pursuance of the power contained in section 38 of Act II of 1886. This section and the rule framed under it appear to me to have been framed for the purpose of regulating the conduct of officers coming under its operation and from [for?] preventing any disclosures by them in the course of their duties, and its object was to secure the interests of those making the returns under the Act. I think, however, that the rule was not directed against their production in a Court of Law such as is sought in this case. I therefore think the objection fails. A somewhat analogous point was decided by Lord ELLENBOROUGH in the case of Lee v. Birrell, (1813) 3 Camp., 337, and also apparently by SCOTLAND, C. J., in the Madras Court. The reference to this decision appears in Mr. Mayne's Commentaries on [285] the Criminal Law (Mayne's Criminal Law, pp. 86, 87). In both cases it was decided, notwithstanding the oath of secrecy taken on assumption of office, that the documents were not privileged from production.

[The returns were admitted upon its being proved that they had been compiled by the defendant in consultation with the plaintiff who had approved of their being made in the form in which they then appeared, and upon its appearing from the returns that the shares of the partners had been stated therein to be as contended for by the defendant.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th September, 1898.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, KT., K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Braja Lal Sen.....Plaintiff

Jiban Krishna Roy.....Defendant.*

Hindu Law—Bengal School—Father's brother's daughter's son, whether preferential heir to mother's brother's son—Limitation Act (IX of 1871)—Suit by reversioner for possession of immoveable property—Revival of right extinguished—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 2—Effect of Sale for arrears of rent accrued due after the death of the full owner, from the female heir—Res judicata.

Under the Bengal School of Hindu Law, the father's brother's daughter's son as heir is preferential to the mother's brother's son.

A and I, daughters of one R, on his death succeeded in equal shares to the properties left by him. Subsequently A died, leaving behind her a minor son U, who after his mother's death held possession of half of the said properties as heir to his mother's father for more than twelve years. The period of twelve years expired before the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) came into operation. In a suit for recovery of possession of the share of the immoveable properties, which was originally in the possession of U, but [286] afterwards passed into the hands of a third party, by the reversioner within twelve years from the death of I, the female heir, the defence was that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, that inasmuch as the possession of U was adverse to the female heir, and as her right to the disputed property was barred before the Limitation Act (IX of 1871) came into operation, the right of the reversioner was also barred. Srinath Kur v. Prasunno Kumar Ghose, (1893) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 934, followed. Tikaram v. Shama Charan, (1897) I. L. R., 20 All., 42, dissented from.

A claim for arrears of rent, against a female heir, accrued due after the death of the last full owner, is a personal claim against her: therefore by a sale held under the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, in execution of a decree for arrears of such rent obtained against her by some of the co-sharer landlords, only the limited estate of the female heir passed unless the said landlords proceeded to bring the tenure itself to sale.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 26 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Bulloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 3rd of October 1896.

A previous suit brought by the said female heir for setting aside the aforesaid sale was dismissed. In a subsequent suit by the reversioner for recovery of possession of the immoveable property so sold, the defence was that the suit was barred as res judicata.

Held, that the dismissal of the previous suit, which was for recovery only of the limited estate of a female heir, would not be a bar to the subsequent suit, which was for the recovery of the absolute estate, which vested in the reversioner.

THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Bhawani Churn Dutt for the Appellant.
Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Haro Kumar Mitter for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C.J., and Banerjee, J.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for possession and mesne profits of certain immoveable [287] property known as chak Bele Durgahagun, on the allegation that the chak appertained to the estate of one Ramsagur Mitter; that on the death of Ramsagur Mitter in 1240, corresponding to 1833, his two daughters Anandmoyi and Ishaneswari, who were his heiresses, held and owned the said chak in equal shares; that on the death of Anandmoyi in 1241 (or 1834), her share passed by survivorship to her sister Ishaneswari, who, however, out of affection, gave Anandmoyi's son Uma Charan an eight anna share of the chak for his maintenance, and Uma Charan accordingly held possession of the same; that on the death of Ishaneswari in Falgoun 1300 (or March 1894), the plaintiff as Ramsagur Mitter's father's brother's daughter's son became entitled to the said chak by inheritance, and that he has been wrongfully kept out of possession of it by the defendant; and that even if the defendant had acquired any right to the chak it became extinguished on the death of Ishaneswari.

The defendant sets up various defences. He says that the plaintiff is not the heir of Ramsagur, pleads the statute of limitation, sets up the plea of res judicata, and alleges that the property in dispute never belonged to Ramsagur Mitter, but was acquired by Uma Charan's father Harish and Ishaneswari in equal shares; and that even if it did belong to Ramsagur, the plaintiff's right, if any, as reversioner, has become extinguished. He then alleges, and there is not, we think, any dispute as to the truth of these allegations, whatever the result in law flowing from them may be, that Uma Charan, Ishaneswari, and her son Prosonno Coomar Bose jointly mortgaged the chak in dispute to Kristo Mohun Mitter in May 1861, to pay off certain arrears of rent due in respect thereof; that Uma Charan's heirs subsequently mortgaged their eight anna share, that is, a moiety of the chak, to Brojo Nath Kundoo to satisfy the mortgage debt due to Kristo Mohun Mitter; that subsequently the eight anna share of Uma Charan's heirs in the chak, was sold in execution of the decree obtained on Brojo Nath Kundoo's mortgage, and that the remaining eight anna share of the chak, which belonged to Ishaneswari, that is, the other moiety, was sold in execution of certain decrees for arrears of rent, and that the entire sixteen annas interest in the chak, that is, the entirety of the property, was purchased by one Mathura Nath [288] Chuckeravarti, whose interest subsequently passed by a sale in execution of a decree to Thakomoni Dasi. It is further alleged by the defendant, and we think proved, that the execution sale of Ishaneswari's eight anna share was set aside in a regular suit, and the said share was again sold on the 5th of January 1885 in execution of a fresh decree for arrears of rent, and purchased by one Chandra Coomar Bandopadhyaya, from whom it passed through an intervening transfer to Thakomoni Dasi; that Thakomoni Dasi subsequently mortgaged the disputed chak and other properties to the defendant; and that the defendant purchased the entirety of the property at a sale held in execution of the decree obtained by him on his mortgage. He thus claims to be entitled to the entire sixteen anna share, in other words the entirety of the property in dispute, and, in assertion of that claim, opposes the plaintiff's contention.

The Court below held that the plaintiff was the reversionary heir of Ramsagur Mitter; that the property in dispute appertained to the estate of Ramsagur, and that the plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation, but he dismissed the suit on the ground that the sale of Ishaneswari's eight anna share, in execution of the decrees for rent, passed not merely her limited interest as her father's daughter, but also the reversionary interest in the said share; that the present suit, so far as it relates to that share, was successfully met by the defendant's plea of res judicata by reason of the dismissal of Ishaneswari's suit for reversal of the execution sale; and that the reversionary right claimed by the plaintiff in respect of the eight anna share held by Uma Charan had been extinguished, and an absolute title created in favour of Uma Charan by virtue of a family arrangement made by Ishaneswari, and acquiesced in by Prosanno Kumar Bose, the then next reversioner.

Against this decision the plaintiff appeals, urging that the Court below was wrong in holding that the sale in execution of the rent decrees could pass anything beyond Ishaneswari's limited interest; that it was wrong in holding that the suit as regards Ishaneswari's eight anna share was barred as res judicata; and that it was also wrong in holding that, in regard to the remaining eight anna share, an absolute title had been created in favour of Uma Charan. The respondent not only supports the judgment [289] of the lower Court on the points decided in his favour, but also seeks to support the decree of dismissal of the suit on three additional grounds, namely, that the plaintiff has failed to establish his heirship to the estate of Ramsagur Mitter; that he has also failed to show that the property in dispute appertained to that estate; and that the suit, as regards the eight anna share of the chak held by Uma Charan, was barred by limitation. In this position of matters the points which arise for our determination are:

First.—Whether the plaintiff has made out that he is the reversionary heir to the estate of Ramsagur Mitter.

Second.—Whether the chak in dispute appertains to that estate.

Third.—Whether the plaintiff's claim to the eight anna share of the chak held by Uma Charan is barred by limitation.

Fourth.—Whether the reversionary right claimed by the plaintiff in the eight anna share held by Uma Charan became extinguished under the family arrangement set up by the defendant.

Fifth.—Whether the defendant's plea of res judicata in respect of the other eight anna share is a bar to the suit.

Sixth.—Whether the reversionary interest in the eight anna share passed under or was bound by the sale in execution of the rent decrees against Ishaneswari or her limited interest only.

Dealing with these various points in the order indicated above, on the first point the case of the plaintiff is that he is Ramsagur Mitter's father's brother's daughter's son, and as such, he is, in the absence of any nearer heirs, the reversionary heir to Ramsagur. The defendant contends that one Panchanan Bose, who is Ramsagur Mitter's mother's brother's son, but who has made no claim to the property in dispute, is his heir in preference to the plaintiff. The Court below has found the plaintiff's relationship with Ramsagur Mitter established by evidence. The correctness of this finding has not been questioned on this appeal, and we see no reason to dissent from it. But the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the alleged relationship of Panchanan Bose with Ramsagur Mitter is not established, and that, even if it had been established, still the plaintiff would be the preferential heir of [290] Ramsagur, and his finding of fact and his conclusion of law are both impugned on behalf of the respondent as incorrect. Three witnesses have been examined on behalf of the defendant to prove the alleged relationship between Panchanan Bose and Ramsagur Mitter; they are Harinath Mitter, a relation of Ramsagur, Sham Charan Mitter, a neighbour, and Panchanan Bose himself. There is no evidence to contradict them. The Court below has given no good reason for disbelieving their evidence; and we hesitate to affirm the finding of the Court below that the evidence is insufficient to prove that Panchanan Bose is the son of Ramsagur's maternal uncle. But in the view we take upon the question of law, it becomes unnecessary to determine this question of fact. We agree with the Court below in holding that even if Panchanan Bose be Ramsagur's maternal uncle's son, still the plaintiff would be the preferential heir of Ramsagur.

Whatever doubts might at one time have existed as to the heritable rights of the father's brother's daughter's son under the Bengal School of Hindu law [see Gobindo Hareekar v. Woomesh Chunder Roy, (1864) W. R., F. B., 176], it must now be taken as settled by the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Guru Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose, (1870) 5 B. L. R. 15: 13 W. R., F. B., 49, that he is in the line of heirs as a sapinda relation within the meaning of the Dayabhaga, and the only ground upon which the learned Vakil for the respondent rests his contention on this point is that the plaintiff, though in the line of heirs of Ramsagur, is excluded by Panchanan, the maternal uncle's son, being entitled to succeed in preference to the father's brother's daughter's son. No authority is cited in support of this contention; and the only reason given in its favour is that, while the maternal uncle's son is mentioned in the Dayabhaga, the father's brother's daughter's son is not. This is not, however, strictly correct. For if the maternal uncle's son is mentioned, by necessary implication (and not expressly, as the argument assumes) in the Dayabhaga, chapter XI, section VI, paragraphs 13 and 20,* so is the father's brother's daughter's son, as has been shown in the case of Guru Gobind Shaha v. Anund Lal Ghose, (1870) 5 B. L. R., 15: 13 W. R., F. B., 49. And as for the [291] exact position of the father's brother's daughter's son in the line of heirs, though that may be after the agnatic sapinda descendants of the great grandfather, a point upon which conflicting considerations may arise [see Huri Das Bundopadhyaya v. Bama Churn Chattopadhyaya, (1888) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 780] there can be no doubt that he comes before the sapinda relations in the maternal line. This will be seen from the Dayabhaga, chapter XI, section VI, paragraphs 13 and 20, in the former of which the author indicates the reason for the succession of maternal kinsmen and for the preference of sapindas in the paternal over those in the maternal line, according to the doctrine of spiritual benefit. That reason is shortly this: The wealth of a deceased person, who can no longer have temporal enjoyment, should devolve on those who can confer spiritual benefit on him. Now the sapindas on the paternal line offer oblations to the paternal ancestors which the deceased was bound to offer, and in which he participates, and the sapindas in the maternal line offer oblations to the maternal ancestors, which the deceased was bound to offer, but in which he does not participate; so that, while they both confer spiritual benefit on the deceased, the former benefit him doubly by enabling him to participate in the oblations offered by them and by discharging a duty that was incumbent on him of offering oblations to certain ancestors, and the latter benefit him only in one way, namely, by offering certain oblations which he was bound to offer; and therefore while both are entitled to inherit his estate, the latter succeed only on failure of the former. After showing that his doctrine is in conformity with the texts of Manu, the author of the Dayabhaga states his conclusion in paragraph 20. We should add that there is a slight inaccuracy in Colebrooke's translation of this paragraph in the passage "which the deceased shares, or which he was bound to offer," where the word "or" has been erroneously used for "and." The view we take that the father's brother's daughter's son comes in the order of succession before the maternal line is in accordance with the opinion of Jagannath (see Colebrooke's Digest, Book V, chapter VIII, section 1, v. 434, commentary, Madras Edition, Vol. II, page 567).

[292] Upon the second point all that is urged on behalf of the respondent, who impugns the correctness of the lower Court's finding, that the chak in dispute belonged to Ramsagur Mitter, is that the pottah of 1246 or 1839 (Ex. H. 2, p. 94 of the Paper Book), under which the chak is held, was granted to Uma Charan and Ishaneswari, and that the terms are very different from those of the pottah in favour of Ramsagur granted by Rani Sankari in 1227 or 1820. That may be so, but it is clear from the pottah of 1246 or 1839 (Ex. H. 2) that it was granted to Uma Charan and Ishaneswari as the heirs of Ramsagur, and that the tenure created by it was only a modified form of the tenure created in favour of Ramsagur by the pottah of Rani Sankari. We see no reason to disturb the finding arrived at by the Court below that the property in dispute appertained to the estate of Ramsagur Mitter.

Upon the third point, namely, that relating to the statute of limitation which has been decided by the lower Court in favour of the appellant, and which is raised before us by the respondent, the contention of the respondent is that the possession of Uma Charan Dutta and his heirs and successors was adverse to Ishaneswari, and that the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the eight anna share, over which such possession extended, was barred by limitation. In answer it is urged for the appellant that the possession of Uma Charan was not adverse to Ishaneswari, and that even if the possession of Uma Charan's heirs and successors was adverse, such adverse possession did not extend over a period of time sufficiently long to bar Ishaneswari's claim, before the present law, which gives the reversioner a fresh starting point, viz., from the date of the death of the person having the limited interest, first came into force. In other words, the appellant urges that when Uma Charan died in 1872, the claim of Ishaneswari had not become barred by the adverse possession, if adverse, of Uma Charan, and Uma Charan's heirs, and consequently that under the new law the period of limitation only begins to run against him as from the date of her death. In approaching this part of the case we have to deal with a condition of affairs which originated more than sixty years ago, and so far as the [293] evidence goes, there are matters which are left in some obscurity. But the evidence appears to us to establish these facts.

The property in dispute appertained, as has been found above, to the estate of Ramsagur Mitter, and on his death in 1240 or 1833 descended to his two daughters, Anandmoyi and Ishaneswari, as his heiresses. On Anandmoyi's death in 1241 or 1834 one moiety of the property would appear to have been held by her son Uma Charan Dutta, who was then a minor, and the other moiety by Ishaneswari. Things continued in this state down to Joisto 1279 or May 1872, when Uma Charan died and disputes arose between his sons and Ishaneswari. The possession of one moiety by Uma Charan is admitted in the plaint; but the plaintiff says that Uma Charan held possession by virtue of a gift from his aunt Ishaneswari, who, out of affection, gave him that moiety of the property for his maintenance. There is, however, no evidence, leastways no reliable evidence, of this supposed gift, and the first mention of it is to be found in the pottah (Ex. III, page 32 of the Paper Book) executed by Ishaneswari in favour of one Mathura Nath Chakravarti in 1873, which is after the death of Uma Charan, and after the dispute had commenced with his sons. The learned Vakil for the appellant asks us to infer such a gift from the fact deposed to by several of the witnesses for the plaintiff, and by one of the witnesses (Kedar Nath Mitter) for the defendant, that Ishaneswari loved Uma Charan as if he were her son, and lived in joint mess with him, and he contends that but for a gift express or implied from Ishaneswari, Uma Charan could not have obtained the half share he held; as, on Anandmoyi's death Ishaneswari became, as the survivor, entitled by law to the whole of her father's estate. There might have been considerable force in this contention if there had been nothing to show how and under what circumstances the possession of Uma Charan commenced. But that is not the case. It appears from the plaintiff's Exhibits I and V (attested copies of a decree of the Sudder Dewani Adalat, dated the 1st February 1837 and a solenamah or deed of compromise, dated the 29th January 1840) and the defendant's Exhibit H 2 (the pottah of 1246 already referred to) that Ramsagur Mitter brought a suit to recover possession of the chak in dispute; that on his death during the pendency [294] of that suit his daughter's son Uma Charan, then a minor, represented by his father Hara Chunder Dutta, and Ishaneswari, daughter of Ramsagur, were substituted as his legal representatives; that the suit resulted in a compromise pursuant to which a pottah was obtained from the proprietors of the land; and both in the deed of compromise and in the pottah Uma Charan and Ishaneswari are described and treated as the heirs of Ramsagur. Uma Charan's claim to one moiety of the property as a co-heir with his aunt Ishaneswari was thus asserted (erroneously no doubt), and this claim was not opposed by Ishaneswari who apparently was under a mistake as to the extent of her own right. Under the circumstances the fair inference appears to us to be that the admitted possession of Uma Charan from about 1838 to the date of his death in 1872, a period of nearly thirty-five years, ought to be attributed to the independent right which he asserted, and which was not disputed, as a co-heir of his grandfather, rather than to a gift which we are invited to infer from the circumstance of the affection which Ishaneswari felt for her nephew Uma Charan, and of their living in joint mess.

In our opinion the possession of Uma Charan from 1838 to 1872 was under this claim of right, and was adverse to his aunt Ishaneswari. After the death of Uma Charan, disputes undoubtedly arose between his sons and Ishaneswari as is admitted in the plaint, and the possession (so far as it extended) of Uma Charan's sons and of persons deriving title from them must, on the plaintiff's own admission, have been that of trespassers as against Ishaneswari. It is not by any means clear from the evidence that after Uma Charan's death, Ishaneswari had possession of the entire property. Debendra Kumar Dutta, one of the sons of Uma Charan, who is examined for the plaintiff, and who admits that he manages the case on behalf of the plaintiff, in his examination-in-chief cannot say more than this: after his father's death, "Ishaneswari was in possession of the sixteen annas of many portions of the disputed chak, and realized the sixteen annas of the rents;" but in his cross-examination he says: "A year after the death of my father, my eldest brother Upendra died. Mohendra then may have been twelve or thirteen years old. [295] On the death of my eldest brother, the second brother used to look after the estate. We had then a half share of the chak and the other half appertained to the estate of Ramsagur." And a little further on he adds: "We became dispossessed of the disputed chak from the time of the auction sale." The evidence tends to the conclusion that after Uma Charan's death, though there was some dispute about possession, the moiety of the property held by him remained in the possession of his sons until it was sold at auction at the instance of their creditors, and thereafter it remained in the possession of the auction-purchaser and of the persons deriving title from him.

It is in this manner, as appears to us, that possession has been held of the moiety of the property now under consideration, and the question is what is the effect in point of law of such possession as regards the plea of limitation.

It is contended for the defendant that, as the possession of Uma Charan's sons, and of persons deriving title from them must, in any view of the case, be held to be that of trespassers as against Ishaneswari, and as such possession had continued for more than twelve years before her death, the reversioner's claim must be held to be barred by limitation, notwithstanding that she died within twelve years before the institution of this suit, inasmuch as article 141 of schedule II of the Limitation Act only gives a fresh starting point to the reversioner from the date of the female heir's death, when the reversioner is entitled to the estate at such date, that is to say, when the interest of the female heir has not itself been barred at the date of her death. In our opinion the question is concluded by the Full Bench decision in the case of Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose, (1893) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 934, and we cannot agree with the view of the Allahabad High Court expressed in the case of Tikaram v. Shama Charan, (1897) I. L. R., 20 All., 42, that the case of Srinath Kur v. Prosunno Kumar Ghose, (1893) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 934, has been virtually overruled by the decisions of the Privy Council in the case of Lachhan Kunwar v. Anant Singh, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 445: L. R., 22 I. A., 25.

[296] It appears to us, therefore, not material to discuss this question any further, more especially as we entertain the view that the admitted possession of Uma Charan from 1838 to 1872 must be taken to have been a possession adverse to Ishaneswari. Such adverse possession, which had continued for upwards of twelve years, and had barred Ishaneswari's claim before the new law (first enacted by Act IX of 1871) came into operation, must be held to bar the reversioner also. This view gains support from the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurupersad Doss, (1868) B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008: 9 W. R., 505, which has been approved by the Privy Council in Amirto Lal Bose v. Rajonee Kant Mitter, (1875) 15 B. L. R., 10: 23 W. R., 214. And if the reversioner's right was barred before the new law of limitation came into force, as under the circumstances of this case in our judgment it was, that law (see section 2 of Act XV of 1877) does not revive such right.

It was further contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant that Ishaneswari by allowing the pottah of 1246 (Exhibit H 2) to be taken by Uma Charan jointly with herself, precluded herself from suing Uma Charan as a trespasser, and as this happened before Uma Charan's possession had continued for twelve years, Uma Charan's possession could not upon the authority of the case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Gurupersad Doss, (1868) B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 1008: 9 W. R., 505, bar the reversion. We do not think this argument is well-founded, viz., that the taking of the pottah jointly with Uma Charan can have any such effect. It seems to us that the pottah has one of two effects: either as an admission of Uma Charan's title to one moiety, to which his long possession of that moiety of the property is to be attributed, or as indicating an alienation by way of gift by Ishaneswari in favour of her nephew Uma Charan of that moiety, in which view the alternative contention put forward in the fourth point, urged would prevail. The alienation to be implied from the transaction was made by Ishaneswari in favour of Uma Charan, who was one of the then next reversioners, and such alienation was subsequently ratified by her son, Prosonno Kumar Bose, the only other next reversioner for the time being as [297] appears from the mortgage deeds of 1861 and 1869 (Exhibits B and A).

In this view, the interest acquired by Uma Charan would, upon the authority of Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 1102, be an absolute interest.

For the reasons given above we think that the suit, as regards the moiety of the chak which was held by Uma Charan, fails.

It remains now to consider the last two points, which relate to the remaining eight-anna share or the other moiety of the chak property.

Upon the fifth point the contention of the defendant, which has been accepted by the Court below, is that, as the suit brought by Ishaneswari in 1886 for setting aside the sale of an eight-anna share of the chak in dispute for arrears of rent was dismissed on the 19th of March 1887, that decision is binding on the reversioner, and the present suit, so far as it relates to that share, is barred as res judicata. On the other hand it is urged for the plaintiff-appellant, that, if what passed by the sale in execution of the decrees for arrears of rent, was only the limited estate of Ishaneswari, the suit could only have been for reversal of the sale of that estate, and the dismissal of such a suit cannot be a bar to the present suit, which is brought for recovery of the absolute estate now vested in the reversioner. And it is further urged that, having regard to the main ground of dismissal of the former suit, namely, that the sale had been confirmed with the consent of Ishaneswari, given upon receipt of Rs. 2,040 by her, the decree in that suit cannot bind the reversioner. We are of opinion that the appellant's contention is sound. It is quite true that Ishaneswari, though owning only the limited estate of a Hindu female, represented the absolute estate for certain purposes, and that a decree in a suit concerning the absolute estate if obtained against her without fraud or collusion would be binding on the reversioner—see Kattuma Nauchear v. The Rajah of Shivagunga, (1863) 9 Moo. I. A., 539 (604); but if a suit, though concerning the absolute estate, is determined [298] upon a ground personal to the female heir, for instance, if a suit brought by a Hindu widow to recover possession of immoveable property appertaining to her husband's estate is dismissed on the ground of its having been alienated by her in favour of the defendant, in the absence of legal necessity being shown, the decree in such a case ought not to bind the reversioner. Now having regard to the ground upon which Ishaneswari's suit for reversal of sale was dismissed (see Exhibit IX, p. 44 of the Paper Book) we do not think it would be right to hold that the dismissal of that suit is a bar to the reversioner's claim. If what passed by that sale so sought to be set aside was only the limited estate of Ishaneswari, the dismissal of the suit for setting that sale aside cannot bind the reversioner, whilst if what passed under that sale included also the interest of the reversionary heir, the question of res judicata becomes a superfluous one.

It remains, therefore, to determine what passed by the sale, which is the sixth and the last point. The sale, though for arrears of rent, was admittedly in execution of decrees for rent obtained by certain sharers, not the entire body of co-sharers, in the undivided estate under which the chak in dispute was held, and according to the law then in force (section 64 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869) it had "the same effect as the sale of any immoveable property sold in execution of a decree, not being for arrears of rent payable in respect thereof," that is to say, it would pass not the whole tenure, but only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor in this case was Ishaneswari, who held the qualified estate of a Hindu daughter under the law of the Bengal School, but the Court below has held that as she represented the absolute estate for certain purposes, and, as the suits for rent were brought against her as representing the absolute estate, the whole inheritance and not merely her limited interest passed by the sale in execution of the rent decrees; and the decision of the Privy Council in Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal. 985: L. R., 11 I. A., 66, is relied upon in support of this view. The rule laid down in that case is this: "If the suit is simply for a personal claim against the widow then merely [299] the widow's qualified interest is sold and the reversionary interest is not bound by it. If, on the other hand, the suit is against the widow in respect of the estate, or for a cause which is not a mere personal cause of action against the widow, then the whole estate passes." The suit against Ishaneswari was admittedly one for arrears of rent, and the question is whether a claim for arrears of rent is a personal claim against the widow, or is one against the inheritance which, for certain purposes, she represents. The point is not free from difficulty, and there is some conflict of authority in this Court upon it, the case of Tiluck Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Muddun Mohun Joogee, (1869) 12 B. L. R., 143, note: 12 W. R., 504; and Anund Moyee Dossee v. Mohendro Narain Dass, (1871) 15 W. R., 264, being in favour of the respondent, while Mohima Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Ram Kishore Acharjee Chowdhry, (1875) 15 B. L. R., 142: 23 W. R., 174 [in which Tiluck Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Muddun Mohun Joogee, (1869) 12 B. L. R., 143 note: 12 W. R., 504, was cited and considered] and Kristo Gobind Majumdar v. Hem Chunder Chowdhry, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 511, support the opposite view. As for the case of Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 985: L. R., 11 I. A., 66, relied upon by the Court below, though it lays down the general principle quoted above, the facts of that case were different from those in the case we are now considering. There the sale was in execution of a decree for mesne profits and costs against a Hindu widow, who was sued, along with certain reversionary heirs, for possession of immoveable property, and for mesne profits. Here the suit for rent was brought against Ishaneswari alone, and in respect of arrears which accrued due after her father's death, and as she was in enjoyment of the rents and profits of the chak, the liability for rent ought to be regarded as her personal liability and ought not to be held as attaching to the reversion, unless the landlord proceeded to bring the tenure itself to sale under the special provisions of the rent law. In Tiluck Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Muddun Mohun Joogee, (1869) 12 B. L. R., 143 note: 12 W. R., 504, the landlord had, as had been pointed out by the Privy Council in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall, (1875) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 133: L. R., 2 I. A., 275, proceeded against the tenure under the [300] rent law, and the same remark also applies to the case of Anundmoyee Dossee v. Mohendro Narain Das, (1871) 15 W. R., 264.

* The present case in our opinion is rather analogous in principle to the case of Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall, (1875) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 133: L. R., 2 I. A., 275, in which the Privy Council held that a sale in execution of a decree against a Hindu widow for arrears of her mother-in-law's maintenance which was a charge on the inheritance, passed only the widow's estate; and following that case and the case of Mohima Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Ram Kishore Acharjee (Howdhry), (1875) 15 B. L. R., 143 note: 23 W. R., 174, we hold that the sale in question passed only the limited estate of Ishaneswari.

The result is that the decree of the Court below, so far as it relates to the eight-anna share of the chak in dispute that was sold on the 5th of January 1885, must be set aside, and the plaintiff's suit in respect of that share decreed with mesne profits and costs in proportion. The decree dismissing the suit as regards the remaining eight annas will stand. As each party has partially succeeded and partially failed in this appeal there will be no costs.

Decree varied.

NOTES.

[The Privy Council affirmed this decision in (1903) 30 Cal. 550, as regards the point that the decree for rent was personal so long as the tenure was not brought to sale under the Rent Law. See also (1912) 16 C.W.N., 1070; (1912) 17 C.W.N., 337.]

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Pardhan Bhukhan Lal and another.....Defendants

Narsing Dyal.....Plaintiff.*

Interest—Penalty – Enhanced rate of Interest—Interest Act (XXVIII of 1855), section 2—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 74—Equitable relief.

In a mortgage bond the interest payable was 2 per cent. per mensem, and there was a stipulation that on default of payment on the due date, interest should run "from the date of default of promise" at 6 per cent. per mensem. In a suit upon the bond, interest was claimed at the higher rate from the date of default to the date of realization.

[301] Held, that it is open to the Court to decide, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2,† Act XXVIII of 1855, whether the stipulation as to the enhanced interest was agreed upon as interest properly so called, or as a penalty, and whether in the circumstances of the case the debtor was entitled to equitable relief. Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahmed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C.W.N., 231, and Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) 1 L. R., 17 Bom., 106, referred to.

Per GHOSE, J.—The cases of Mackintosh v. Crow, (1882) 1 L. R., 9 Cal., 689, and Kala Chand Kyal v. Shib Chunder Roy, (1892) 1 L. R., 19 Cal., 392, do not lay down any rule of law precluding the Court from affording relief to a debtor, independently of section 74^a of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), even when the bond provides for increased rate of interest prospectively and not retrospectively, where a proper ground for such equitable relief is made out.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 77 of 1897, against the decree of F Cowley, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 16th of September 1896, modifying the decree of Colonel C. H. Garbett, Esq., Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated the 27th of July 1894.

What rate of interest shall be decreed by the Court in any suit.

† [Sec. 2 :—In any suit in which interest is recoverable, the amount shall be adjudged or decreed by the Court at the rate (if any) agreed upon by the parties; and if no rate shall have been agreed upon, at such rate as the Court shall deem reasonable.]

Per RAMPINI, J.—The stipulation for increased rate of interest may be a penalty, but is not necessarily so merely because the increased rate is an exorbitant one; whether it is a penalty or not is rather a question of fact than one of law, and the Court must consider whether in the circumstances of the case the defendants had made out their claim to equitable relief. Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahmed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, distinguished.

THIS was a suit on a mortgage bond, dated the 16th August 1886, for recovery of Rs. 1,183, of which the principal was Rs. 185 and the rest interest. The facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for this report and the arguments urged and the cases cited, appear from the judgments of the High Court.

The defendants (debtors) appealed to the High Court.

Babu Joges Chandra Dey and Babu Raghunandan Prasad for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash' Behary Ghose and Babu Akkhoy Kumar Banerjee for the Respondents.

GHOSE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of money due upon a bond. The document stipulates for the payment of interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem, but provides at the same time that if the money borrowed be not repaid on the due date, interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per mensem should be paid from that date. And the main question that has been discussed before us is whether the Courts below were right in decreeing to the plaintiffs interest at the rate of Rs. 6 instead of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of default, it being contended on behalf of the defendant appellant that the stipulation to pay such increased rate of interest was but a penalty against which a Court of Equity should give relief.

Both the Courts below have decreed the claim in full. And the learned Judicial Commissioner has affirmed the decree of the Court of First Instance allowing the plaintiff interest at the increased rate upon the ground that the stipulation to pay such increased rate of interest from a "definite date" is "not illegal."

* [Sec. 74:—When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, the party complaining of the breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage or loss is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named.

Title to compensation for breach of contract in which a sum is named as payable in case of breach.

Exception.—When any person enters into any bail bond, recognizance or other instrument of the same nature, or, under the provisions of any law or under the orders of the Government of India or of any Local Government, gives any bond for the performance of any public duty or act, in which the public are interested, he shall be liable, upon breach of the condition of any such instrument, to pay the whole sum mentioned therein.

Explanation.—A person who enters into a contract with Government does not necessarily thereby undertake any public duty or promise to do an act in which the public are interested.]

No doubt, according to section 2, Act XXVIII of 1855, a man is free to contract to pay any rate of interest that he chooses on the money borrowed, and he may do so from any time, either prospective or retrospective. Such a contract may not be "illegal," but the question that may arise, and which does arise in this case, is whether the stipulation to pay the increased rate of interest was, in the circumstance, not really a penalty against which a Court of Equity ought to grant relief. The Courts below have not apparently considered the case from this point of view, but have proceeded upon the idea that whenever the increased rate of interest is agreed to be paid from the date of default, and not from the date of the bond, the Court is bound to enforce such stipulation. The learned Judicial Commissioner does not quote any case in support of his view, but the Deputy Commissioner has referred to the case Mackintosh v. Crow, (1882) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 689.

[303] In the case of Mackintosh v. Crow, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 689, it was held that where money is borrowed under a contract for repayment with interest on a certain day, and the contract stipulates that if the money is not paid on the due date it shall thenceforth carry interest at an enhanced rate, such a stipulation is not a penalty, and the enhanced rate can be recovered in its entirety. This case was approved of in Kala Chand Kyal v. Shib Chunder Roy, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 392. The stipulation in the bond in the latter case was that, on failure of payment on the due date, the interest should be paid at an increased rate from the date of bond, and it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that this provision was a penalty, and that section 74 of the Contract Act applied to the money claimed at the enhanced rate of interest.

But these cases, and other cases which are to the same effect, do not, I think, lay down any rule of law precluding the Court from affording relief to a debtor, independently of section 74 of the Contract Act, even when the bond provides for increased rate of interest prospectively and not retrospectively, where a proper ground for such equitable relief is made out. As explained in the case of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahamed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, it is open to the Court to decide, notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855, whether the stipulation as to the enhanced interest was agreed upon between the parties as interest, properly so called, or as a penalty. And as stated by SARGENT, C. J., in the case of Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106, "that a proviso for enhanced interest in the future cannot be considered as a penalty unless the enhanced rate be such as to lead to the conclusion that it could not have been intended to be part of the primary contract between the parties."

I do not propose to go into all the authorities on the subject, and as to the circumstances under which a Court may or may not afford equitable relief; for the learned Judicial Commissioner has not dealt with the case from the point of view which I have expressed.

[304] In this view of the matter, the case should, I think, be sent back for consideration of the question whether, in the circumstances of the case, the defendant is entitled to equitable relief.

Another point has been raised before us, which is to the effect that the Courts below have allowed the plaintiff compound interest. The matter is not very clear upon the decree itself; but I think it would be as well to declare that the plaintiff is not entitled to such compound interest.

Rampini, J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur.

The suit is one based on a mortgage bond in which the amount of the principal lent was Rs. 185. The interest payable on the loan was 24 per cent. per annum, and there was a further stipulation that, if default in payment was made on the due date, interest should run "from the date of default of promise" at the rate of 72 per cent. per annum.

The lower Courts have held that the stipulation for payment of interest at the higher rate is enforceable under the law, and have decreed the plaintiff's claim.

The defendants appeal, and on their behalf it has been urged: (1) That the higher rate should not have been decreed up to the date of realization; (2) that compound interest should not have been allowed; and (3) that the stipulation for the payment of the higher rate of interest of 72 per cent. is, in the circumstances of this case, a penalty, and one from which this Court as a Court of Equity should give relief.

The first ground of appeal is apparently founded on a misapprehension. The Subordinate Judge, whose order has been affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner, has allowed the higher rate of interest not up to the date of realization, but only up to three months from the 24th July, 1894.

From the decree it is not clear whether compound interest has been decreed or not. If it has, I agree, that, looking at the terms of the bond, it should not be allowed.

The principal ground of appeal in the case is, however, the third; and in support of his contention that the higher rate of 72 per [305] cent. is a penalty, from the burden of which we should relieve his client, the learned pleader for the appellant relies on the two cases of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahamed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, and Manoo Bepari v. Durga Churn Saha, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 333, recently decided by two Benches of this Court.

In the first of these cases it was held on a consideration of the terms of the bond sued on that the higher rate of interest stipulated for in case of default of payment was meant to apply from the date of the loan, and that in that view of the matter it was a penalty, which could not be enforced. So far then the ruling in the case of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahamed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, is no authority for the argument of the learned pleader for the appellant in the present case, for in the present case it is clear beyond all doubt that the higher rate of 72 per cent. per annum was to run only "from the date of default of promise," and not from the date of loan.

But the learned Judges who decided the case of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahamed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, went on to say that even if the stipulation for the higher rate of interest in that case were to be construed as running only from the date when default had been committed, they were not "prepared to hold that it was a stipulation which, according to the principles of equity, ought to be enforced." "No doubt," it was said, "according to section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855 a man is free to contract to pay any rate of interest that he chooses on the money borrowed, and there is nothing to hinder him from agreeing to pay it from any time either prospective or retrospective. But the question that would arise in a case like the present is whether a Court of Equity is precluded from affording relief independently of section 74 of the Contract Act. This question seems to have been discussed in the Bombay High Court in two cases, viz., Pava Nagaji v. Govind Ramji, (1873) 10 Bom. A. C., 382, and Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106, and also by this Court in Bichook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochun Singh, (1873) 11 B. L. R., 135, [306] and it has been held in these cases that, notwithstanding section 2 of the said Act, it is still open to the Court to decide whether the provision as to the enhanced rate of interest was agreed upon by the parties as interest, or whether it was intended to be a penalty. We are inclined to adopt this view, and we may in this connection also refer to the case of Magniram Marwari v. Rajpati Koeri, (1893) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 366 note., where this Court, upon a similar question being raised, did not hold that the matter was precluded by the Act of 1855, but rather went into the facts with a view to see whether any case for equitable relief had been established. In the present case there can be little or no doubt, looking at the instrument as a whole, that the provision to pay interest at 75 per cent. per annum in case of breach was not meant to be interest properly so called, but a penalty to ensure due payment in accordance with the instalments mentioned in it. It will be observed that interest upon the sum borrowed was calculated upon the date of the bond at more than 12 per cent. per annum, and added on to the principal, and the whole amount was agreed to be paid in eight years, and the further provision was that in default of payment of the instalments, interest should be paid at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum. We think that this provision was intended to be a penalty, and that the debtor is entitled to be relieved from it in accordance with the principles of equity and good conscience.

The facts of the second case relied on, that of Manoo Bepari v. Durga Churn Saha, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 333, are similar. In that case the higher rate of interest was also 75 per cent. per annum, but GHOSE, J., who delivered the judgment of the Bench, held that on the terms of the bond it was not clear whether the higher rate was to run from the date of the bond, or from the date of default, but considered that it was safer to hold that the former was the case, and consequently that the stipulation to pay this higher rate of interest was a penalty. GHOSE, J., went on to say: "We think we are not precluded from relieving the defendant from the penalty of paying that interest, if we are convinced that the stipulation was intended to be really a penalty for ensuring the payment of the instal-[307] ments on the dates agreed upon, and not for the payment of a higher interest. He then referred to the cases of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahamed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, and of Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106, and observed that the Bench was prepared to adhere to the view expressed in these cases. AMER ALI, J., concurred.

Now, with regard to those cases, I would say, firstly, that seeing that in both of them it was held on a consideration of the bonds sued on that the higher rate of interest was to run from the date of the bond, they are not on all fours with the present case in which no such contention has been or could be raised; secondly, the learned Judges who decided those cases, merely laid down that the Courts of this country are not restricted by the terms of section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855, from giving equitable relief against stipulations to pay increased rates of interest, which appear to be penalties and not interest, but they did not lay down any hard and fast rule as to when such stipulations are to be regarded as penalties which should be relieved against.

The leading case on the subject of when such stipulations are penalties is the case of Mackintosh v. Crow, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 689. In that case it was ruled, that "where money is borrowed under a contract for repayment with interest on a certain day, and the contract stipulates that, if the money is not paid at the due date, it shall thenceforth carry interest at an enhanced rate, such a stipulation is not a penalty, and the enhanced rate may be recovered in its entirety." In that case, WILSON, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, laid down that it was a rule of law established by the Legislature of this country that a man is free to contract to pay any rate of interest that he chooses upon money borrowed; and the Courts must enforce it against him (Act XXVIII of 1855, s. 2), and there is nothing to hinder his agreeing with regard to the future as well as the present. He may contract to pay no interest at present, but interest hereafter: or to pay one rate of interest now, and a higher or lower rate hereafter.

[308] Other cases to the same effect are Mackintosh v. Hunt, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Cal., 202; Bhola Nath v. Fateh Singh, (1884), I. L. R., 6 All., 63; Kunj Behari Lal v. Ilahi Baksh, (1884) I. L. R., 6 All., 64; Jaganadham v. Ragunandha, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 276; and Dullabh Das Dev Chand Shet v. Lakshman Das Swarupchand, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Bom., 200. In the full Bench case of Kala Chand Kyal v. Shib Chunder Roy, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 392, it was unanimously held that when it was stipulated in the bond that the increased rate of interest should in the case of default run from the date of the bond, this is a penalty, and the provisions of section 74 of the Contract Act become applicable, but no dissent from or doubt of the correctness of the rule laid down in Mackintosh v. Crow, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 689, and other cases, that where the higher rate of interest is to run only from the date of default this is not a penalty, was expressed.

There are numerous other cases to the same effect. Reference to them in detail appears to be unnecessary.

I would now advert to the cases referred to by the learned Judges who decided the cases of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry v. Serajuddin Ahmed Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, and Manoo Bepari v. Durga Churn Shaha, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 333. These are the cases of Bichook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochun Singh, (1873) 11 B. L. R., 135, and Magniram Marwari v. Rajpati Koeri, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 366 note, decided by this Court, and those of Pava Nagaji v. Govind Ramji, (1873) 10 Bom. A. C., 362, and Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106, decided by the Bombay High Court.

The case of Bichook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochun Singh, (1873) 11 B. L. R., 135, is an old case, in which the increased rate of interest was to run [309] from the date of the bond. This is undoubtedly a penalty. The learned Judges who decided the case of Ramendra Roy Chowdhry, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 234, no doubt only referred to Bichook Nath Panday's case as an authority for the proposition that the provisions of section 2 of Act XXVIII of 1855 do not preclude a Court from giving equitable relief, where there is reason to believe that the stipulation for the increased rate of interest is a penalty. It would, however, seem to me to be no authority for holding that a stipulation for the payment of increased interest from the date of default is necessarily and in all cases a penalty.

The case of Magniram Marwari v. Rajpati Koeri, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 366 note, similarly appears to me to afford no authority for the proposition that the enhanced rate of interest in this case is necessarily of the nature of a penalty. On the contrary, it appears to me to be an authority for the proposition that equitable relief against a stipulated rate of interest can only be given in exceptional circumstances, such as will be adverted to later on.

The case of Pava Nagaji v. Govind Ramji, (1873) 10 Bom. A. C., 365, would only seem to lay down that the provisions of Act XXVIII of 1855 do not destroy the equitable jurisdiction of the Courts to relieve against a penalty.

There remains the case of Umar Khan v. Sale Khan, (1893) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106. In this case it was said by SARGENT, C.J., and JARDINE, J., that "upon a review of the authorities we think the safer conclusion is that a proviso for retrospective enhancement of interest in default of payment of interest at the due date is generally a penalty which should be relieved against, but that a proviso for enhanced interest in the future cannot be considered as a penalty, unless the enhanced rate be such as to lead to the conclusion that it could not have been intended to be part of the primary contract between the parties, as may well be deemed to have been the case in Bichook Nath Panday v. Ram Lochun Singh, (1873) 11 B. L. R., 135, and Pava Nagari v. Govind Ramji, (1873) 10 Bom. A. C., 382.

[310] It appears then that a stipulation for an enhanced rate of interest running from the date of default is not to be considered as a penalty except in exceptional circumstances.

The law on this subject has been summed up in Cunningham and Shephard's Contract Act (8 Edit., p. 229) as follows: "The equitable jurisdiction which the Courts possessed to relieve against penalties is not restricted by Act XXVIII of 1855 or by this Act. The tendency, however, of Courts of Equity as well as of Courts of Law at the present day is to interfere as little as possible with the expressed intention of the contracting parties, and the mere fact that the terms are exorbitant is by itself no reason for not enforcing an agreement. It is only when to this fact is added the circumstances that the parties were not on an equal footing, or that the party seeking relief did not fully understand the transaction that the Court will give relief."

The judgment of PIGOT, J., in Surya Narain Singh v. Jogendra Narain Roy Chowdhry, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 360, may also be cited. In this judgment it is said: "Such a contract as to interest must, we think, be held valid, where there is no question of fraud or oppression, improper dealing, exorbitant amount, dealing with an ignorant person, or the like considerations, but there is nothing of the sort in this case."

Now, applying these principles to the present case it would seem to me that the stipulation for increased rate of interest contained in the bond now sued on may be a penalty, but is not necessarily so merely because the increased rate is an exorbitant one. Whether it is a penalty or not is rather a question of fact than one of law, and as the lower Courts seem to have been under the impression, when deciding the case, that they must decree the increased rate in favour of the plaintiff, and could, in no circumstances, grant the defendants equitable relief, I think it advisable to remand this case to the Lower Appellate Court to re-consider the case, and to enable the defendants to show, if they can, that in the circumstances they are entitled to equitable relief. [311] If they do not make out such a case, the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for the full amount of the interest claimed by him.

I would accordingly remand the suit and would order costs to abide the result.

[The Contract Act, 1872, sec. 74, was repealed and a new section substituted in its place in 1899. It has been held that notwithstanding the Interest Act, 1855, the Court has the power to interfere with the interest agreed upon whenever it appears to be in the nature of a penalty. Easement—Implied grant—Easement upon the severance of a heritage by its owner into two or more parts—Continuous and apparent easement—Right of way—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 26.

Implication of a grant of easement upon the severance of a tenement may extend to a "way," but that is so only where there has been some permanence in the adaptation of the tenement from which continuity could be inferred.

Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 956, distinguished.

THIS appeal arose out of a suit for the declaration of a right of way and for the removal of certain obstructions alleged to have been made by the defendants. The plaintiff's allegation was, that on the north of a tank known as Sen's tank was his homestead, as well as that of the defendants, his house being just on the northern bank of the tank, and that of the defendants on the east of it; that there was a space between the defendants' house and the tank, over which he had a right of way, and which was interfered with by the defendants. Originally the homestead of the plaintiff and that of the defendants and the tenement over which the right of way was claimed belonged to one and the same person. The western portion, now plaintiff's house, was the inner apartment, and the eastern portion, now defendants' house and the land over which right of way was claimed, was the outer apartment. In course of time the entire house passed to two sets [312] of owners; the western portion passed to one Ram Coomar Sen and others and afterwards to the plaintiff, and the eastern portion including the disputed land passed to one Bhairab Das and others and afterwards to the defendants, who were occupying it since ten years before this suit. The Munsif upon the evidence held that the plaintiff had been living on the western portion for about thirty years, and that he had proved his right of way over the disputed land which had all along remained waste and unoccupied, although it formed part of the defendants' homestead, and decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge by the defendants, he reversed the decision of the Court of First Instance. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter and Babu Kuruna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Babu Benod Behary Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for the declaration of a right of way, and for the removal of certain obstructions alleged to have been made by the defendants.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1220 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Amrita Lal Pal, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 30th of April 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Shoshi Bhushan Chowdhry, Munsif of Munshigunge, dated the 30th of March 1896.

Three points have been raised by the learned Vakil for the plaintiff appellant. First, that upon the findings arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree quite irrespective of section 26 of the Limitation Act, on the ground that the claim was one that the plaintiff was entitled to make under an implied grant presumable from what is known as: "Disposition of the owner of two tenements;" secondly, that the Lower Appellate Court is in error in throwing upon the plaintiff the burden of proof upon the question whether the user was "as of right;" and, thirdly, that upon the findings arrived at, by the Lower Appellate Court, even if the plaintiff was not entitled to a right of way for marriage and funeral processions, he was at least entitled to an ordinary right of way.

In support of the first contention raised, it is argued that as the tenement belonging to the plaintiff, and the tenement over [313] which the right of way is claimed, belonged originally to one and the same person, and as it has been found that the original owner of the land over which the way is now claimed used it as a way for purposes of ingress to and egress from the other tenement now belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff must be held to be entitled to the way in question, and the case of Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 956, is relied upon as supporting the appellant's view. We are, however, of opinion that the contention is not sound, and that the case cited is distinguishable from the present. The presumption in favour of the grant of an easement upon the severance of a heritage by its owner into two or more parts arises primarily with reference only to continuous and apparent easements; and a "way" is evidently neither a "continuous" nor always an "apparent" easement.

It is true that in certain cases referred to in text books on the subject—See Gale on Easements, 6th edition, pp. 108 to 123 and Goddard on Easements, 5th edition, pp. 174 to 186, implication of a grant of an easement, upon the severance of a tenement, has been held to extend, under certain circumstances, to a "way," but that is so only where there has been some permanence in the adaptation of the tenement, from which continuity could be inferred. In other words the extension of the rule can hold good, if at all, only in the case of "a formed road," to use the language of Lord Justice FRY in Thomas v. Owen, (1887) L. R., 20 Q. B. D., 225 (231), "made over an alleged servient tenement, to and for the apparent use of the dominant tenement."

Now, in the present case, not only is there no finding of fact that there has been any such permanence of adaptation, any such formed road, but there was no case of an implied grant from the severance of a heritage made or even suggested in the plaint or in the issues. Nor was the case put upon a ground like this in either of the Courts below.

That being so, we do not think that the first contention is at all tenable.

It was argued that even if the findings arrived at by the Lower [314] Appellate Court be not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree, as the Lower Appellate Court has not considered the question whether a grant could not be implied from the severance of the original tenement into two, the case ought to be remanded to that Court in order that it may be dealt with from that point of view, and it was urged that the case cited, Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 956, was an authority in favour of the appellant. But, as we have said above, that case is quite distinguishable from the present, for there the way claimed was one leading to a ghat, and the way or path and the ghat were alleged to have been constructed by the original owner; and so there was a sufficient case made in the pleadings for the implication of a grant upon severance of the tenement by reason of the alleged permanence of adaptation evidenced by the construction of the way and ghat.

It is not, however, suggested in this case that the way claimed by the plaintiff is a metalled way, or is anything but an undefined track over a strip of land.

As to the second contention raised on behalf of the appellant we do not think that it arises in this case. For the learned Subordinate Judge, after having said in his judgment that he entertains doubt regarding the correctness of the proposition, that the burden of proof upon the question whether the user was as of right, lay upon the party who alleged that it was not as of right, goes into the entire evidence bearing upon the question, and upon a consideration of the evidence adduced on both sides comes to the affirmative finding that the user was permissive. And if the second contention fails, it is conceded that the third contention must also fail.

The contentions urged before us, therefore, all fail, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

S. C. G.

Appeal dismissed.

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Kali Nath Sen and another.....Plaintiffs

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 67, 187—Suit for arrears of rent and interest at an exorbitant rate—Rule relating to hard and unconscionable bargains—Liability of a purchaser of a tenure at a sale for arrears of rent to pay interest.

A stipulation for the payment of interest at an unusual and an exorbitant rate cannot be supposed to be an incident of a tenancy which would attach to it even after a sale for arrears of rent.

In execution of a decree for rent against a tenant who held under a kabuliyat, dated March 1880, the plaintiff put up the tenure for sale and the defendant purchased it on the 20th November 1891. Subsequently a suit for rent with interest at 225 per cent. per annum, specified in the kabuliyat executed by the former tenant, was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant. The defence was that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest at such high rate.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1445 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Dwarka Nath Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Faridpur, dated 30th of April 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Govind Lal Gupta, Munsif of Madaripur, dated the 7th of August 1896.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest at the rate claimed, it being an exorbitant one and not an ordinary incident of a tenancy.

Held, also, that in such a case the rule relating to hard and unconscionable bargains should apply, and the plaintiff would be entitled to interest at 12 per cent. per annum, being the ordinary rate of interest for arrears of rent.

Per RAMPINI, J.—By the sale of an ordinary raiyyati tenancy for arrears of rent, a new contract is created between the auction-purchaser and the landlord at the date of the sale; therefore, in a case where the tenure was sold after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation, and a suit was brought by the landlord for rent with interest against the auction-purchaser, the provisions of section 67 read with section 178, sub-section 3, cl. (h) of the Bengal Tenancy Act would apply.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for rent, with interest, based upon a kabuliyat. The plaintiff's allegation was that one Ratan Mandal took a settlement of a raiyyati holding, and executed in his favour a registered kabuliyat in the year 1880, by which the said Ratan Mandal agreed to pay interest at the rate of three annas per rupee per month on his failure to pay rent according to [316] instalments. Ratan Mandal having allowed the rent to fall into arrear a suit was brought against him, a decree was obtained, and in execution of that decree, his tenure was sold after the expiration of the term and was purchased by the defendant in the year 1891. Subsequently the plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant for arrears of rent with interest based upon the kabuliyat executed by the former tenant. The defence, inter alia, was that the claim for interest was illegal, and that he (the defendant) was not bound to pay interest according to the terms of the kabuliyat executed by his predecessor. The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit in part, but held that the defendant was not liable for interest. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the Subordinate Judge, he held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest at the exorbitant rate specified in the kabuliyat, but he allowed interest according to the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

The High Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.) delivered the following judgments:—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent with interest, based on a kabuliyat, and the suit was brought, not against the person who had executed the kabuliyat, but against the purchaser of his holding at a sale for arrears of rent.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to consider it for the purposes of this appeal, was that the claim for interest was illegal, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any interest, as the rent had been tendered.

The first Court found for the defendant upon most of the points raised, and decreed the claim of the plaintiffs only in part.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court has modified that decree, and allowed interest in accordance with the terms of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, holding that the rate of rent specified in the kabuliyat was not recoverable as against the defendant.

[317] In second appeal the only question raised is whether the decision of the Lower Appellate Court as regards interest is correct.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs, appellants, contends that the interest claimed in this suit is perfectly legal, and that the defendant is bound to pay that interest, notwithstanding that he is the purchaser of the holding at a sale for arrears of rent due from the former tenant, who had executed a kabuliyat, inasmuch as the stipulation as regards interest was an incident of the tenancy.

On the other hand, it has been argued on behalf of the defendant respondent, that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest only in accordance with the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act: Firstly, because the kabuliyat relied upon by the plaintiffs created a tenancy from year to year only, so that at the commencement of each year of the tenancy, a fresh contract as to the terms of the tenancy is to be implied, and the contract as regards payment of interest, which was in contravention of the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, became inoperative by section 178, sub-section 3, clause (h), from the year after that Act was passed; secondly, because even if the stipulation in the kabuliyat could be binding after the passing of the Tenancy Act as against the former tenant, by whom the kabuliyat was executed, it cannot be operative as against the purchaser of the holding at a sale for arrears of rent, the stipulation to pay interest at an exorbitant rate not being an ordinary incident of a tenancy, and that a fresh contract is to be implied as between the landlord and the tenant upon the transfer of the holding at a sale for arrears of revenue; and, thirdly, because the stipulation for the payment of the exorbitant interest claimed by the plaintiffs is such a hard and unconscionable contract that Courts of Equity ought not to enforce it.

I am of opinion that the stipulation for the payment of interest upon arrears of rent is an ordinary incident of a tenancy in this country, unless there is something unusual in the stipulation, and that, as a rule, it would attach to the tenancy, not only so long as it remains in the possession of the tenant who enters into the stipulation, but would continue to attach to it, notwithstanding a sale for [318] arrears of rent. But though that is so, if there is anything unusual in the stipulation, it would not be an ordinary incident of a tenancy, and would not continue to be attached to the tenancy after a sale for arrears of rent. Let us then see whether the stipulation for the payment of interest in the present case ceases to be binding on account of any of the reasons specified in the argument of the learned Vakil for the respondent.

With reference to the first reason assigned, I am of opinion that, having regard to the terms of the kabuliyat, it cannot be said that a fresh contract is to be implied at the commencement of each year of the tenancy. The kabuliyat does not specify any term. It stipulates for the payment of interest from year to year, and it further stipulates that, in case there be any default in the payment of any instalment, the tenant will pay interest for the over-due instalment at a certain rate. That, in my opinion, is a contract entered into once for all, and would continue in force so long as the tenancy is not determined, and I see no reason for holding that at the commencement of each year there must be implied the making of a fresh contract. It was argued that the case of Ali Mahmud Pramanick v. Bhagabati Debbya, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 525, favours the respondent's contention. On the other hand, it is argued that the case of Kishore Lal Dey v. The Administrator-General of Bengal, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 203, supports the opposite view.

I am of opinion that neither of the two cases cited touches, in any way, the present question. In the case of Kishore Lal Dey v. The Administrator-General of Bengal, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 203, what was held was this, that where a tenant holds over after the expiry of his term, the correct view to take is that he enters into an implied contract once for all, at the beginning of the holding over, and there is no rule of law in support of the view that he enters into an implied contract at the beginning of each year of the holding over. The correctness of that view is questioned by one of the learned Judges who decided the case of Ali Mahmud Pramanick v. Bhagabati Debya, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 525, while the other learned Judge thought it unnecessary to consider the point, as the case before the Court [319] did not require the point to be determined. But in neither of the two cases had the Court to determine whether where a lease was for a term uncertain, any implied contract had to be presumed at the commencement of each year of the tenancy.

The second reason relied upon is a valid reason for holding that the stipulation for the payment of interest is not binding. Although, as I have said, a stipulation regarding the payment of interest is ordinarily one of the incidents of tenancy, a stipulation for the payment of interest at an unusual and an exorbitant rate cannot be supposed to be an incident of a tenancy which would attach to it even after a sale for arrears of rent.

No doubt the line between what rate of interest would be within the limits of an usual rate of interest, and what would exceed those limits, is not always easy to draw. But there can be little difficulty in saying that whereas the law, section 21 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, and section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, provides that 12 per cent. per annum shall be the ordinary rate of interest, 225 per cent. per annum, (for that is the rate of interest in the present case) falls outside the limits of ordinary interest for arrears of rent.

The distinction between usual and unusual terms of a contract of tenancy is a distinction which should be taken into consideration in determining whether the incident in question continues to attach to the tenancy, notwithstanding its sale for arrears of rent, and it is a distinction which has been given effect to by this Court in certain cases, of which I may refer to the following, namely, Deendoyal Paramanick v. Juggeshur Roy, (1863) Marsh, 252; and Alim v. Satis Chandra Chaturdhrin, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 37.

Following the principle laid down in these cases, I must hold that the stipulation for interest in the present case was not such an incident of the tenancy as would continue to be attached to it, notwithstanding the sale of the holding for arrears of rent.

In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider the question whether the sale of a tenancy for arrears of rent involves a new contract between the auction-purchaser and the [320] landlord at the date of the sale, such as would bring into operation the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I am also of opinion that the third reason put forward by the learned Vakil for the respondent, for holding that the stipulation for the payment of interest is not enforceable, is a valid reason. The rate of interest, as I have already said, is the exorbitant rate of 225 per cent. per annum, and the contract was entered into between the landlord and a cultivating raiyat, that is a person belonging to a section of the community that has been considered entitled to some special protection, not only by the Legislature, as is evident from the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, section 67 and section 178, sub-section (3), clause (h), but also by Courts of Justice, as will be seen from the observations of Mr. Justice MAHMOOD in the case of Lalli v. Ram Prasad, (1886) I. L. R., 9 All., 74.

Having regard then to the exorbitant nature of the interest claimed, and the parties to the stipulation, I am of opinion that the case is one to which the rule of law relating to hard and unconscionable bargains enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kamini Sundari Chaudhrani v. Kali Prossunno Ghosè, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 225; L. R., 12 I. A., 215, should apply. Applying that principle, I think that the stipulation for interest in this case is one that a Court of Justice ought not to enforce.

For all these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court below is right, and ought to be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Rampini, J.—The only point for determination in this appeal is whether the defendant is liable to pay interest at the rate specified in the kabuliyat given by the former tenant, Ratan Mandal, or not.

This kabuliyat was executed in favour of the plaintiffs by Ratan Mandal on the 26th Falgun 1286, which corresponds with some date in March 1880, that is, before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The kabuliyat is one executed by an ordinary rayat. The tenancy is from year to year, and the rate of [321] interest stipulated for in it is three annas per rupee per mensem, or 225 per cent. per annum.

The Courts below have held that the defendant is not liable to pay interest at that rate. But the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs, appellants, contends that he is liable.

I am of opinion that the appeal fails, and that we cannot decree interest at this rate. I fully concur in what has been said by my learned brother as to the rate stipulated for being exorbitant and unconscionable, and, as to its being a rate at which no Court of Equity should give a decree. I further concur in what my learned brother has said as to the incident of paying interest on arrears being an ordinary incident of a tenancy in this country, and agree that a purchaser of a holding at a sale for arrears of rent must be liable to pay interest on arrears. But I do not think that it is one of the ordinary incidents of a rayat tenancy in this country that interest at a higher rate than 12 per cent. should be paid. Section 67 of the Bengal tenancy Act, read with section 178, sub-section 3, clause (h), shows that the payment of interest at a higher rate than 12 per cent. per annum is not now one of the ordinary incidents of a rayat tenancy. In support of this view, I would cite a passage from the judgment in the case of Alim v. Salis Chandra Chaturdhuri, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 37, which runs as follows: "We will assume, in the absence of anything to denote the contrary, that the original holder, while holding over, held under all the terms of the kabuliyat which he had given. When however, the landlord put up the holding to sale for its arrears he must be taken to have put it up subject to all the ordinary incidents of such a holding. It was not an ordinary incident that interest on arrears should be payable at the very high rate claimed. On the contrary, there was no such incident, and if the landlord had put up the holding subject to an express condition that the higher rate should be paid, the condition would not bind the purchaser, in so far as it purported to create a new contract between himself and the landlord. If there was no such condition attached to the sale, the purchaser must be taken to have purchased subject to all [322] ordinary incidents of the holding. If there was such a condition, and it was for the respondent to show it, which he has not done, the condition was, we consider, contrary to the provisions of the Act, and not binding on the purchaser. An agreement by a tenant of a holding for a term to pay interest at a certain rate may, if made before the passing of the Act, bind him so long as he continues to hold, but it does not attach to the land when the term has expired, and the holding by the act of the landlord passes into other hands, and if the landlord after the expiry of the term puts up the holding to sale under the Act, he puts it up subject to the express provisions of the Act in connection with it."

The learned Judges in the case quoted above appear to me to lay down that it is not an ordinary incident of a raiya holding in this country, that interest on arrears should be paid at a higher rate than 12 per cent., and they further hold that even if the landlord had put the holding of the defendant in that case up to sale subject to the terms of the kabuliyat executed by him before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the stipulation for the payment of a higher rate of interest than 12 per cent. would not have been binding, as the defendant's lease was for a term which had expired, and the defendant, who was holding over, was to be regarded as holding the land under a new contract impliedly entered into on the expiration of the term of his lease.

Now, in this case it seems to be clear that the tenancy was not put up for sale subject to the terms of the kabuliyat executed by the former tenant. The defendant has expressly pleaded this in paragraph 2 of his written statement. He says: "He was not aware of a contract to pay such interest, nor did the plaintiffs cause the fact of the contract to pay such interest to be mentioned in the sale ishtihar." There is no evidence, or even contention, on the part of the plaintiffs to the contrary. I am therefore of opinion that the defendant in this case is not bound to pay the higher rate of interest claimed by the plaintiff, (1) because the payment of more than 12 per cent. interest on arrears is not one of the ordinary incidents of a raiya holding, and (2) because the holding was not put up for sale with notice that it was being sold subject to the terms of Ratan Mandal's kabuliyat.

[323] But I go further, and consider that, even if it had been put up for sale under the express terms of Ratan Mandal's kabuliyat, the defendant would not be liable to pay the higher rate, because a fresh contract must be regarded as having been entered into between him and the landlord, when the latter put the holding up to sale and the former purchased it, which he did on the 20th November 1891. The holding is an ordinary raiya tenancy not transferable except by custom or with the consent of the landlord. That being so, when the landlord put the holding up to sale he offered to accept the purchaser as a new tenant. The defendant, when he purchased, accepted his offer, and must now, I think, be regarded as holding under a new contract made after the passing of the Tenancy Act, and not under the terms of the old kabuliyat. Therefore, the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, read with section 178, sub-section (3), clause (h), must apply.

For these reasons I concur in dismissing this appeal.

I would add that to give effect to the contention of the appellants would, in my opinion, be contrary to the policy of the Tenancy Act. Section 67 lays down that an arrear of rent shall bear simple interest at 12 per cent., and clause (h), sub-section (3), section 178, enacts that no contract made after the passing of the Tenancy Act is valid, which contravenes the provisions of section 67.

If the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants were given effect to, and if a landlord could enforce stipulations in contracts made before the passing of the Tenancy Act with former tenants for the payment of such exorbitant rates of interest on arrears as 225 per cent. per annum, the policy of the Tenancy Act as embodied in sections 67 and 178 (3), clause (h), would, in my opinion, be completely set at nought. .

S. C. G.

Appeal dismissed.

Nunda Lal Dey.....Auction-purchaser.*

Sale in execution of decree—Fraud—Application to set aside sale on the ground of fraud in a case where a third party is the auction-purchaser—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 2, 244, 311 and 588—Second Appeal—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, articles 166 and 178.

The decision in the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 769, has been in effect overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 683; L. R., 19 I.A., 166.

An application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud would come under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code notwithstanding that the purchase was made by a person who was a third party.

An application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud is governed by Art. 178 † of the Limitation Act.

THE facts of this case, for the purposes of the report, and the arguments, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Nil Madhab Bose, and Babu Shib Chander Palit, for the Appellants.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of an application for setting aside a sale of immoveable property held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, on the ground that the sale was brought about by fraud, and that the judgment-debtors were kept out of knowledge of [325] the sale until the time when the auction-purchaser took possession of the property.

The first Court found for the judgment-debtors and set aside the sale.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the order of the first Court, without coming to any finding as to whether the allegation that the sale had been brought about by fraud was correct, the ground being that the applicants had failed to show that they had been kept out of the knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holders and the auction-purchaser, and that their application was barred by limitation.

Against this decision of the Lower Appellate Court the present appeal has been preferred, and at the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondent that a second appeal does not lie, the order of the Lower Appellate Court being final under section 588 of the Code. The argument in support of this objection is this, that the application must be treated as one under section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that it cannot come under section 244 of the Code as the auction-purchaser is a third party and not one of the parties to the suit, and that consequently the last paragraph of section 588 makes the order of the Lower Appellate Court final. And in support of this contention a decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769, is relied upon. On the other hand it is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the application for setting aside the sale in this case being based on the ground that the sale had been brought about by fraud, it comes under section 244 and not under section 311 of the Code, and that the fact of the auction-purchaser being a third party, does not prevent the application from being dealt with under section 244, and, in support of this contention, the decision of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166, and the decisions of this Court in the cases of Doyamoyi Dasi v. Sarat Chunder Mojumdar, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 175, and Nemai Chand Kanji v. Denonath Kanji, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 691, are relied upon.

[326] We are of opinion that the preliminary objection urged on behalf of the respondents ought not to prevail, and that a second appeal lies in this case. It is true that the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769, cited by the respondents favours the objection raised on their behalf, but the decision of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166, must be taken to have overruled, in effect, the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769 ; we have had occasion to consider this matter in an unreported case, namely, second appeal No. 956 of 1895,

*Moti Lal Chakrabutty v. Russick Chandra Bairagi and the view we took there is also confirmed [327] by the decisions of this Court in the cases of Doyamoyi Dasi v. Sarat Chunder Mojumdar, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 175, and Nemai Chand Kanji v. Denonath Kanji, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 691.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar, (1898) I. L. R., 20 All., 412, would go to show that the order of the first Appellate Court in a case like this is final, and that a second appeal does not lie from such an order. The argument is based upon the fact that an appeal to Her Majesty in Council was allowed from an [328] order of the District Judge made in an appeal Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—Suit to set aside a sale on the ground that the decree was obtained by fraud, whether maintainable, where third party is the auction-purchaser—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 95.

A suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud is not maintainable under the provisions of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, even in a case where the real or nominal auction-purchaser is a person who was not a party to the original suit.

Prosunno Kumar Sanjal v. Kali Das Sanjal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166, followed.

A suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground that the decree was obtained by fraud is maintainable and is governed by article 95† of the Limitation Act.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Kulada Kinker Roy for the Appellants.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent to recover possession of certain lands on the allegation that they constitute his jote under defendants Nos. 2 to 4, that these defendants, in collusion with their servant the defendant No. 1, fraudulently obtained against the plaintiff an ex parte decree without serving any summons on him ; that they then fraudulently caused the sale of the jote in execution of their decree without serving any writ of attachment or sale proclamation ; that the jote was purchased at the execution sale by defendant No. 1 for the benefit of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 ; and that the plaintiff came to know of the decree and the sale on the 11th Falgun 1299.

† Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 956 of 1895, against the decree of Alfred Fr. Sternberg, Esq., District Judge of Rungpore, dated the 28th of February 1895, affirming the decree of Babu Hari Prasanno Mukerjee, Munsif of Gyabanda, dated the 9th of July 1894.

‡ [Art. 95 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To set aside a decree obtained by fraud, or for other relief on the ground of fraud.	Three years.	When the fraud becomes known to the party wronged.]

from an order passed on an application for setting aside a sale. This question was not raised in that case, and, moreover, the order made in that case was clearly under section 312, the ground upon which the sale was sought to be set aside being irregularity in the conduct of the sale and not fraud. If that was so, the order complained of was one that came specifically under section 588 of the Code and could not come within the definition of "decree" in the Code, and so no second appeal could lie in that case.

[329] It was further contended that the observation of the Judicial Committee in the case of Prosunno Coomar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166, that the fact of the auction-purchaser being a third party, does not prevent a case from being dealt with under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was in the nature of an obiter dictum, and cannot be taken to over-rule the decision of the Full Bench in Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769.

The defence was that no regular suit was maintainable for setting aside an execution sale ; that the suit was barred by limitation ; that the allegation of fraud was unfounded ; and that the defendant No. 1 had purchased the property for his own benefit at an execution sale duly held.

The first Court, without going into the question whether the decree had been obtained by fraud, found for the plaintiff upon all the other questions that were raised in the case, and gave him a decree, and on appeal that decree has been affirmed by the Lower Appellate Court.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendants that section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure bars this suit. In support of this contention, the learned Vakil for the appellants relies upon the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : I. R., 19 I. A., 166, and he argues that this case has in effect overruled the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 769, upon which the Lower Appellate Court has based its judgment. In answer to this contention, it is urged for the respondent that the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166, is distinguishable from the case before the Full Bench and from the one before us, and that the question that arises in this case did not properly arise in that case, nor was it determined by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

This contention is so far correct that, while the plaintiffs in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal's case raised no question affecting the validity of the decree, the plaintiff impugns not only the sale, but also the decree itself on the ground of fraud, and thus raises a question which does not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and which cannot come within the scope of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. But the Courts below have not gone into this last-mentioned question at all. They have set aside the execution sale and given the plaintiff a decree for possession solely upon the ground that the sale was brought about by fraud, and they have overruled the objection in bar based upon section 244 solely upon the ground that the auction-purchaser, though a party to the fraud, was no party to the suit in which the decree was passed. The first question for determination in this appeal, therefore, is whether that decision is correct, and that question will have to be determined quite irrespectively of the fact that the plaintiff impugns the decree itself as fraudulent. If the question is answered in the negative, then the further questions will arise, whether the decree which led to the sale was obtained by fraud, and whether the defendant No. 1, the auction-purchaser, was a party to that fraud ; and for the determination of these two questions the case will have to go back.

The learned Vakil for the respondent contends that quite apart from the question raised in the case whether the decree itself was obtained by fraud, the decision appealed against is correct.

After carefully considering the two cases referred to above, and the facts of this case as found by the Courts below, we feel bound to say that we are unable to accept this last-mentioned contention as correct. It is true that the judgment of this Court in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal's case was based upon the ground that the suit there as against the decree-holders was not maintainable by reason of the provisions of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as against the auction-purchasers it was not maintainable because there was no case made out at all upon the allegations in the plaint. But their Lordships of the Privy Council in confirming the judgment of this Court did not make any distinction of that kind at all, but held that section 244 was a bar to the whole suit, notwithstanding [330] We have given our reasons for considering this argument untenable in our judgment in the unreported case referred to above; and it is enough to say that the question, whether section 244 of the Code would be a bar to a suit for setting aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud where a third party was the auction-purchaser, was a question that did directly arise before the Privy Council, and the decision of their Lordships was that that section was a bar to the suit.

[331] The effect of that decision was therefore this that an application for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud would come under section 244, notwithstanding that the purchase was made by a person who was a third party.

The preliminary objection being disposed of against the respondents, let us now see how the appeal stands on the merits.

The point urged on behalf of the appellants is that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the application for setting aside the sale in this case was barred by limitation. If the application was one governed by article 166 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, then the conclusion that it was brought, not only against the decree-holders, but also against the auction-purchaser who was a third party. That the question that arises in this suit, viz., whether a suit to set aside an execution sale on the ground of fraud is maintainable notwithstanding the provisions of section 244 of the Code by reason of the real or nominal auction-purchaser being a third party, did properly arise and was determined in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Dass Sanyal, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 683. L.R., 19 I.A., 166, is clear from the following passage in their Lordships' judgment. "Both Courts have held," observe their Lordships, "that the question which the plaint seeks to raise could only have been determined by the order of the Court which executed the decree, and that, in such a case as the present, a separate suit for the purpose of setting aside an execution sale is expressly forbidden by section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Doyle, who appeared for the appellants, admitted that the question at issue was one 'relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.' But he argued with much ingenuity that the suit was not barred by the provisions of section 244, because the question concerned the auction-purchasers as much as anybody, and therefore, as he contended, it could not properly be described as a question 'arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed.' At the same time he admitted that he was unable to produce any authority for his contention, and he also admitted that it was the common practice to make the auction-purchaser a party to an application for setting aside an execution sale. As the point appeared to be one of some importance, and the respondents were not represented at the Bar, their Lordships thought it desirable, before giving judgment, to examine the reported cases which have arisen under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An examination of these cases, of which it is only necessary to mention Sakharam Gobind Kale v. Damodar Akharam Gujar, (1885) I.L.R., 9 Bom., 468, and Kuriyal v. Mayan, (1883) I.L.R., 7 Mad., 255, has satisfied their Lordships that the decision appealed from is in accordance with the construction which the Courts in India have uniformly placed on the section in question. It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244, and that when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held as bar to the application of the section."

No doubt their Lordships observe that the Counsel for the appellants before them admitted that he was unable to produce any authority for his contention; and no doubt it is true that the Full Bench decision in Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1890) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 769, was authority in his favour; but that does not go to show that their Lordships' determination of the case is based upon the admission of Counsel and not upon their decision of the question raised. Their Lordships' observation that "the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section," may not be quite reconcilable with the fact that a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mondul, (1898) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 769, has taken a somewhat different view. But it is not for us to say how far that may form a ground for inducing their Lordships in any future case to reconsider the question. All we can say is that it would be contrary to first principles and settled arrived at by the Lower Appellate Court would be one that would not be open to question in second appeal. Then, is the application one that is governed by article 166? We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the negative. Article 166 of the Limitation Act applies only to an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, or on the ground that the decree-holder has purchased without the permission of the Court.

The ground upon which the sale now in question is sought to be set aside is not either of those two grounds, but is fraud on [332] the part of the decree-holder, and also on the part of the auction-purchaser in bringing about the sale.

That is a very different ground from irregularity in publishing the sale. The case, therefore, is governed, not by article 166, but by article 178, there being no other provision in the Act applicable to the case; and, if that is so, the question of limitation cannot arise, the application being within three years from the date when the right to apply accrued.

The view we take is supported by the decision of this Court in Nemai Chand Kanji v. Deno Nath Kanji, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 691.

It was argued that as one of the facts found by the Lower Appellate Court is that it is not shown that the auction-purchaser was a party to the fraud alleged to have been committed by the decree-holder in bringing about the sale, practice (see the Rules of this Court, Chapter V, para. 6) for us not to follow a decision of the Privy Council which is in point for a reason like that. We must therefore follow in this case the decision in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 689; L. R., 19 I. A., 166, and hold that section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a bar to this suit so far as it seeks to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud, notwithstanding that one of the parties to it is the auction-purchaser who was no party to the original rent suit.

It remains now to consider the further contention urged on behalf of the respondent, that, even if no separate suit is maintainable, the plaint in this suit may be treated as an application under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and the relief that has been given to the plaintiff may be granted to him, if not in the form of a decree in a regular suit, in the form of an order under that section, seeing that upon the facts found, an application under section 244 was not barred by limitation, and that the suit was brought in the very same Court that would have had to hear such an application. Now if the assumptions of fact upon which this argument proceeds had all been correct, the case of Purmessur Pershad Narain Singh v. Jankee Koor, (1873) 19 W. R., 90, would have lent considerable support to it. But upon the facts of this case, we think the contention must fail. For we find on reference to the record that this suit was instituted in the second Munsif's Court at Grahanda, while the Court executing the decree was a different Court, viz., the Court of the first Munsif of that place. For the foregoing reasons we must hold that the decision appealed against is wrong in law and must be set aside. But as has been said above, that does not dispose of this case. The questions raised in the case, namely, whether the decree was obtained by fraud and whether the defendant No. 1 was a party to that fraud, must now be determined, and if they are answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree. Those are questions which clearly do not come within the scope of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and so far as the suit depends upon their determination, that section can be no bar to it. It was urged for the appellant that the suit, so far as it seeks to set aside the decree, is barred by article 164 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. But that article has no application to this case. What the plaintiff seeks to do is, not to set aside the decree merely as an ex parte decree passed without service of summons, but to set it aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. The provision of the Limitation Act applicable to it is article 95; and upon the facts found, the suit is not barred under that article.

The result then is that the case must go back to the Lower Appellate Court for the determination of the two questions stated above. If that Court is satisfied that any evidence was excluded by reason of the view taken of the case by the first Court, it will allow the parties to adduce fresh evidence. Otherwise the questions will be determined upon the evidence on the record.*

Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

so far as the auction-purchaser is concerned, the case against him can only be regarded as one for setting aside the sale on the ground of irregularity, and that the extended period of limitation in the case of an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud, cannot [333] apply to the case, so far as it proceeds against the execution-purchaser.

We are unable to accept this contention as sound. If the sale was a fraudulent sale, then, even if the auction-purchaser was not a party to that fraud, still it could not be said that the application ought not to be dealt with as one outside the scope of article 166.

The application is one to have the sale set aside; and if it was vitiated by fraud, the consequence of that must attach, so far as the present question goes, as much to the case of the auction-purchaser as to the case of the decree-holder.

It would be different if it had been necessary for the applicant to obtain an extension of the period of limitation under article 18 of the Limitation Act. That section expressly provides that the extended period of limitation on the ground of fraud is applicable only as against a party to the fraud. Here the applicant obtains the extended period, not by the application of article 18, but because his case does not come under article 166, but comes under a different article under which, quite apart from article 18, the application is not barred.

[334] The application, as we have pointed out, is governed by article 178 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, there being no other provision of the law applicable to this case, which is one for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud.

For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court that the application is barred by limitation must be set aside, and this case sent back to that Court in order that it may be determined on the merits.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result. The question for which the case is remanded is whether the sale in question was brought about by the fraud of the decree-holder.

Evidence—Registration Act (III of 1877), section 49—Collateral purpose—Mortgage, unregistered—Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

An unregistered document, the registration of which is compulsory, may be admissible in evidence for a collateral purpose, i.e., to prove admission of liability on part of the executant sufficient to prevent a claim from being barred by the Limitation Act.

IN this case the plaintiffs sued to recover the sum of Rs. 3,801 by way of principal and the sum of Rs. 997-12-6 for interest, being at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum. The plaintiffs alleged that previous to 23rd December 1894 there had been monetary transactions between their own firm and the defendant's firm, and on 22nd December 1894 an adjustment of account was come to between them, by which the sum of Rs. 833-6-9 was found due to the plaintiffs as principal, and Rs. 253-4-9 as interest; and that Rs. 253-4-9, the amount of the interest, had been paid, and Rs. 32-6-9 on account of the principal, which left a balance in favour of the plaintiffs' firm of Rs. 801. The plaintiffs further alleged that on 23rd December 1894 they at the request of the defendant [335] advanced to certain persons a sum of Rs. 3,000 at the above rate of 9 per cent. First the plaintiffs produced as evidence of these transactions entries in their books to the following effect:—

On the other side.

Account 1 of Gurmukh Roy Dip Chand Bengum, Sambat 1,951.

B. M. B. 15 cash book, page 313 Miti, the 14th of the light side in Pous.

286-11-6 cash book, page 399, Amount given up to you in respect of interest up to Miti, the 11th of the dark side in Pous. The same is credited. 30-11-6.

1,086-11-6. Previous balance.

3,000 cash book, page 295 Miti, the 12th of the dark side in Pous 1-14 cash book, page 321 Miti, the 7th of the dark side in Magh 1 cash book, page 370 Miti, the 15th of the light side in Falgoon. 4,089-9-6.

These entries were not signed by the defendant, and it did not appear from the entries that any interest had ever been paid or that there had been an adjustment of account.

Secondly, as evidence of the defendant's liability the plaintiffs' firm produced a mortgage executed by him in the Hindi language, charging his immoveable property in Ladnoo with the sum of Rs. 3,801, but it was found that the defendant had omitted to complete this mortgage by registering it.

Thirdly, the plaintiffs produced other entries in their books relating to monetary transactions with the defendant, but not signed by him, and Fourthly, they tendered oral evidence.

The suit was instituted on 23rd November 1897.

* Original Civil Suit No. 796 of 1897.

Mr. Chakravarti for the Plaintiff.—The mortgage, although not registered, can be used as collateral evidence, and by way of an admission of liability on the part of the defendant, in spite of section 49 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) ; see Field's Evidence Act, pp. 452, 453 ; and Woodroffe's Evidence Act, p. 415 ; also the case of Lachmipat Sing Dugar v. Khairat Ali, (1869) 4 B. L. R., F. B., 18, and the Bengal Banking Corporation v. Mackertich, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 315.

An unregistered document, the registration of which is compulsory, is nevertheless admissible if evidence for a collateral [336] purpose. If such a document is admissible as evidence of admission of liability on the part of the defendant it is sufficient to free the claim from being barred by the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

No one appeared for the defendant.

Sale, J.—I will allow the document to be admitted as evidence for the collateral purpose of showing that there has been an admission of liability on the part of the defendant sufficient to prevent the claim from being barred by the Limitation Act.

Bigamy—Complaint by the husband—" Person aggrieved"—

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), section 198—

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 494.

The husband is a " person aggrieved " within the meaning of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code upon whose complaint the Court should take cognizance of an offence under section 494† of the Penal Code.

* Criminal Government Appeal No. 4 of 1898.

† [Sec. 494 :—Whoever, having a husband or wife living, marries in any case in which such marriage is void by reason of its taking place during the life of such husband or wife, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Marrying again during the life-time of husband or wife.

Exception.—This section does not extend to any person whose marriage with such husband or wife has been declared void by a Court of competent jurisdiction, nor to any person who contracts a marriage during the life of a former husband or wife, if such husband or wife, at the time of the subsequent marriage, shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years, and shall not have been heard of by such person as being alive within that time, provided the person contracting such subsequent marriage shall, before such marriage takes place, inform the person with whom such marriage is contracted, of the real state of facts so far as the same are within his or her knowledge.]

Queen-Empress v. Bai Rukshmoni, (1886) I. L. R., 10 Bom., 340, and In the matter of Ujjala Bewa, (1878) 1 C. L. R., 523, referred to.

THE accused in this case was on the complaint of her husband charged under section 494 of the Penal Code with having committed bigamy. The Sessions Judge before whom the trial was held, without going into the facts of the case, directed the jury to return a verdict of "not guilty" inasmuch as, regard being had to the provisions of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he was of opinion that the case could not proceed. The [337] husband in his opinion was not a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of that section. The jury in pursuance of the direction of the Sessions Judge returned a verdict of "not guilty" and the accused was acquitted. The Local Government appealed against this order of acquittal.

The judgment of the High Court (O'Kinealy and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows:—

In this case Government has appealed from a decision passed by the Sessions Judge of Jessore.

The accused was tried with the aid of a jury under section 494 of the Indian Penal Code, namely, for marrying again during the life-time of her husband. The Judge did not try the facts, but he directed the jury that, as a matter of law, the husband was not competent to carry on the case under the Procedure Code. Section 198 of the Procedure Code runs as follows: "No Court shall take cognizance of an offence falling under chapter XIX or chapter XXI of the Indian Penal Code or under sections 493 to 496 (both inclusive) of the same Code, except upon a complaint made by some person aggrieved by such offence." Section 494 falls between sections 493 to 496, and is therefore within section 198. The Judge directed the jury that, as a matter of law, the husband is not the "person aggrieved" by such offence, and he thinks that the only "person aggrieved" is the person with whom the second ceremony was gone through. If he refers to the words of the section they would show him that the grievance may not be confined to a single individual. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Bai Rukshmoni, (1886) I.L.R., 10 Bom., 340, it was admitted by all at the Bar that a husband would be a "person aggrieved" under section 494; and in In the matter of Ujjala Bewa, (1878) 1 C. L. R., 523, the Judges were of the same opinion.

We think, therefore, that the direction of the Court below was not correct, and, setting aside the judgment of acquittal, we direct that the case be re-tried.

S. C. B.

NOTES.

[In (1905) 3 C.L.J., 38, MOOKERJEE, J., on a review of the authorities, held that it should be determined with reference to each case who was the 'person aggrieved'; and that the husband was not the only such person.]

[336] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 13th and 16th January, 1899.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE
PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Madhubmoney Dassee.....Defendant

versus

Nundo Lal Gupta.....Plaintiff.*

Landlord and Tenant—Assignment, by tenant, of goodwill, stock-in-trade, fixtures, furniture and chattels—Notice by landlord to lessee and to assignee to deliver up possession on expiration of lease, or to pay rent—Holding over—Use and occupation—Liability of assignee for compensation for use and occupation.

L assigned to D the stock-in-trade, goodwill, fixtures, chattels and premises in connection with a certain business carried on by him at the said premises which he held on lease from the plaintiff. The deed of assignment contained (inter alia) a provision empowering the assignee, in the event of any breach by L of the covenants contained in the said deed, to let the premises for any term or terms of years for such rent and under such covenants and conditions as D might think fit; and there was a further provision that L should not remove any of the stock-in-trade, chattels, &c., without the permission of D. Shortly before the expiration of the lease, the plaintiff served a notice on L to deliver up possession of the premises on the expiry of the lease, or to pay an enhanced rent therefor, and a notice on D requiring D to deliver up possession, and stating that, in default, he would hold D jointly liable with L for the enhanced rent. D had durwans and a clerk on the premises to see that nothing was removed therefrom without his permission. L and D continued to keep the stock-in-trade on the premises after the determination of the lease, and the business was carried on as before. The plaintiff subsequently brought an action against D and L for compensation for use and occupation of the premises for four months.

Held (reversing the decision of AMEER ALI, J.) that the lease did not pass under the terms of the assignment to D, and that D was not liable to the plaintiff for compensation for the use and occupation of the premises.

ON the 19th August 1891, the plaintiff granted a lease of the premises No. 159 and 160, Dhurrumtollah, in the town of Calcutta, to one Joseph Lauter, a veterinary surgeon and stable-keeper for a term, which expired on the 31st August 1895. On the 30th September Lauter assigned to one Dwarka Nath Mitter [339] the goodwill and his interest in the business of veterinary surgeon and stable-keeper as the same was carried on at the said premises, and "all the horses, carriages, stock-in-trade, fixtures, furniture and other effects in anywise belonging to or used in the said business, and all the right, title, interest, property, claims and demands whatsoever of the said Lauter to, in, and upon the said business and other the premises" thereby assigned. The assignment contained (inter alia) provisions to the effect that "on default on the part of the said Lauter in payment of the principal money or interest thereby secured, or some part thereof, within twenty-four hours after the date appointed for payment thereof in case of breach of any of the covenants which the said Lauter had entered into with the said Dwarka Nath Mitter, then it should be lawful for the said Dwarka Nath Mitter, or his executors, &c.; at any time after the expiry of twenty-four hours from such default or breach of covenant to enter upon the said premises, or any other place in which the horses, carriages, and other chattels" thereby assigned, "should be or should be supposed to be, to seize the said horses, &c., and either remove them or allow them to remain on the said premises; and also at any time after the expiry of twenty-four hours from such default to sell the horses, carriages, goodwill, chattels and premises" thereby assigned; "and also at any time or times to let the said horses, carriages, goodwill, chattels and premises, or to grant any lease or leases thereof for any term or terms of years upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such covenants as he or they should think fit." Another clause prohibited Lauter from removing any of the chattels, horses, carriages, &c., without the consent of Dwarka Nath Mitter.

On and shortly after the 18th July 1895 certain letters passed between the pleaders of the plaintiff and Dwarka Nath Mitter, claiming, on the one side, rent from Dwarka Nath Mitter as mortgagee in possession of the premises, and on the other side, repudiating liability for the rent, and denying that Dwarka Nath Mitter was in possession of the premises as mortgagee.

In July 1895 the plaintiff brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover from Lauter and Dwarka Nath Mitter the rent of the premises for May and June 1895. The allegation against [340] Dwarka Nath Mitter was that he was jointly liable with Lauter because he was the mortgagee in possession of the stock-in-trade; but as against Dwarka Nath Mitter the suit was withdrawn on the 21st August 1895. During the suit, a notice, dated the 14th August, was, according to the plaintiff, served on Lauter requiring possession of the premises on the 31st August, and claiming in default an enhanced rent of Rs. 500 per month in the event of his holding over. A similar notice was served on Dwarka Nath Mitter, stating that he would be held jointly liable with Lauter for the enhanced rent. They did not vacate the premises. Lauter was adjudicated insolvent on the 10th January 1896; but the plaintiff did not prove for his debt on the insolvency. Meanwhile, Dwarka Nath Mitter died. The plaintiff in January 1896 sued Lauter and the representatives of Dwarka Nath Mitter for compensation for the use and occupation of the premises during the period from September to December 1895, alleging that Dwarka Nath Mitter was a mortgagee in possession of the premises, and also that he had agreed to pay the enhanced rent. The suit was transferred to the High Court. The learned Judge who tried it (AMEER ALI, J.) found that the notice alleged had been served on Dwarka Nath Mitter; and that his alleged agreement to pay the enhanced rent was not proved; but he held that Dwarka Nath Mitter was the mortgagee in possession, and as such was as much in the occupation of the premises as Lauter himself, and that his representatives were liable for compensation for the period in respect of which the suit was brought. He, therefore, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff with costs other than the costs of trial of the issue as to the alleged agreement.

The defendants appealed.

Mr. Palit and Mr. H. D. Bose for the Appellants.—Dwarka Nath Mitter was never in possession of the premises as mortgagee; he simply had a durwan and a clerk there to take charge of the horses, carriages, &c., and to see that they were not improperly removed, not to be in possession of the premises on his behalf.

The question raised by the learned Judge as to whether there had been use and occupation does not arise, because the plaint was based on an express contract. If Dwarka Nath Mitter had been [341] a sub-tenant of Lauter's, or even if he had been a trespasser, he would not be liable in an action for compensation for use and occupation.

On the plaintiff's own evidence it is clear that Lauter was not holding over after the determination of the lease, for he says that Lauter made a new agreement with him to pay the enhanced rent. And that being so, there could be no holding over by Dwarka Nath Mitter. A suit and a decree for compensation for use and occupation must be based upon some tenancy. No contract of tenancy can be created in such a case as the present. Marquis of Camden v. Batterbury, (1860) 7 C. B. (N. S.) 864, (878). And in all tenancies by sufferance there is an underlying assumption that the letting was by implication: there must have been a previous permission to enter into possession. [PRINSEP, J., referred to the passage in Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, 16th edition, p. 577: "A lessee or his assignee . . . trespasser".] But the holding over must be by the tenant—in this case, Lauter; Dwarka Nath Mitter never was a tenant. The plaintiff is endeavouring to convert his notice into a contract, which he cannot do. The decision in Hellier v. Silcox, (1850) 19 L. J. (N. S.) Q. B., 295, on which the respondents rely, is explained in Churchward v. Ford, (1857) 2 H. and N. 446 (449), and does not assist them.

The Court called upon the respondent's Counsel.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. Hill and Mr. Dunne) for the Respondent.—The argument against us is that the question of use and occupation does not arise. But it was sufficiently raised before the lower Court. It was argued without objection on the defendants' part; and there is no ground of appeal with regard to it.

It is said that there was no holding over. But it was clearly the interest of Dwarka Nath Mitter that he and Lauter should not be ejected, but should be allowed to have the premises for carrying on the business, which otherwise would have suffered greatly. The mortgage was a mortgage, not of the stock-in-trade [342] merely, but also of the business and goodwill. Any interest that Lauter had in these premises Dwarka Nath Mitter got. He was entitled to carry on the business; and he did carry it on, through Lauter, and he got possession of the premises by his durwan and clerk. And for the purpose of looking after the stock-in-trade, he took possession of the premises. He was de facto in occupation of them, and it was essential that he should be, as the lease was coming to an end, and he had had the notice referred to served on him. At the time of the mortgage it was not an entry as a tenant; but even if he did not enter as a tenant at all, still the relation of landlord and tenant might arise by a notice given and a subsequent occupation. On the evidence there is use and occupation by Dwarka Nath Mitter prior to the end of August. On the 14th August the plaintiff did take steps to create the relation of landlord and tenant as from the expiration of the lease. The use and occupation by Dwarka Nath Mitter date from the time when he went into possession under the deed of assignment; Lauter's tenancy is a distinct matter. A man may occupy a place by putting his goods there; residence is not necessary. The occupation in such a case as this must be actual, de facto, occupation. Robinson v. Briggs, (1870) L. R., 6 Exch. 1. Where a grantor of a bill of sale makes over his goods in such a way that the grantee's durwans open and close the place of business (as they did in this case), and wait there to see that nothing is removed therefrom, the grantor is no longer in occupation. The assignment is of the goodwill, as well as of the stock-in-trade, and that is inseparable from the enjoyment of the premises. But then Dwarka Nath would be liable as assignee of the lease. But he has power under the assignment to let the premises on lease upon such terms as he may think fit. Lauter also agreed to pay the rent; and the object of that was to maintain Dwarka Nath Mitter's hold on the premises. He never said so in any form; and his whole conduct indicated the contrary. It is not correct to say that an action for compensation for use and occupation must be based on a contract, express or implied; it is more accurate to say that the defendant must have held or occupied the premises as tenant thereof to the plaintiff, [343] or by his permission or sufferance—Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, 16th ed., p. 571. The implied contract is raised by law from the fact that land belonging to the plaintiff has been occupied by the defendant by the plaintiff's permission—Gibson v. Kirk, (1841) 1 Q. B., 850 (856).

Mr. Hill on the same side.—The very assignment of the goodwill shows that it was to carry with it the right of occupation of the premises where the business was carried on. The powers of the assignee, in the event of breach of covenant by Lauter, included a power to let the premises for a term of years; and that expression, while appropriate to any lease of the business premises, is certainly not appropriate to the hire of horses. After default made, Lauter was only a licensee for the purpose of carrying on the business. No doubt the holding over would be prima facie a holding over by Lauter. But there are other circumstances; and those are that he could not remove the furniture, or even his name-plate on the door, nor could he carry on business elsewhere. All the fixtures and chattels were conveyed by the assignment; they passed by title, and not under any consideration operating in bankruptcy, such as apparent possession. The plaintiff was at liberty to allow both Dwarka Nath Mitter and Lauter to remain on the premises, and hold them jointly liable, though either of them was at liberty to go out. As between the landlord and Lauter, the latter could have gone out; but as between Lauter and Dwarka Nath Mitter, Lauter's hands were tied, so that the occupation was the occupation of Dwarka Nath Mitter, because he was the only person who could make any effective choice in the matter.

Mr. Palit, called on by the Court only as to the effect of the notice and as to the argument that the assignment passed the lease of the premises, cited in reply Churchward v. Ford, (1857) 2 H. and N., 446; Toverson v. Jackson, L. R., (1891) 2 Q. B., 484; Ibbs v. Richardson, (1839) 9 Ad. & E., 849; Moore v. Greg, (1848) 2 Phillips, 717, and Cox v. Bishop, (1857) 8 De. G. M. and G., 815.

[344] Mr. Pugh in reply on the authorities.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and PRINSEP and HILL, JJ.):—

Maclean, C.J.—On the 29th of August 1891, the plaintiff in the present suit granted a lease of certain premises No. 159-160, Dhurumtollah Street, in Calcutta, to one Joseph Lauter for a term which expired on the 31st August 1895. On the 30th September 1893, Joseph Lauter assigned the goodwill and interest and the stock-in-trade, trade fixtures, &c., in the business which he then carried on as a veterinary surgeon and livery stable-keeper, on the above premises, to one Dwarka Nath Mitter, who has since died, and whose representatives are the defendants in the present case.

I will deal at once with the question of the construction of the above assignment before going into the further facts of the case. It is contended for the plaintiff that the assignment passed the lease as well as the stock-in-trade and trade fixtures, etc., but that contention is not, in my opinion, well founded. A distinction is drawn between the household premises themselves and the goods and chattels in and upon them. The plaintiff says that the lease passed under the terms, "goodwill and interest of the said Joseph Lauter in the business of veterinary surgeon ;" but I am unable to accept this view, or to say that under these words Dwarka Nath Mitter became the assignee of the lease, and in expressing this opinion I am not unmindful of the clause to be found at page 29 of the Paper Book, which gives Dwarka Nath Mitter a power in certain events, not only to sell the chattels, but also to grant a lease of the premises. But in the view I take of the case I am not satisfied that this question is very material.

Passing on to the history of the case, it appears that on the 18th of July 1865, a suit was brought by the plaintiff in the Small Cause Court against Joseph Lauter and Dwarka Nath Mitter to recover Rs. 740 as the rent of the premises for the months of May and June 1895, at the rate of Rs.370 per month. It is clear from the letter of the 11th of June 1895, which is set out at page 45 of the Paper Book, what was the position which the plaintiff thought the appellant occupied in relation to those premises.

[345] The plaintiff treated Dwarka Nath Mitter as mortgagee in possession of the premises themselves and as jointly liable with Joseph Lauter for the rent. That position Dwarka Nath Mitter repudiated, and doubtless, in consequence of the letter of the 19th of August 1895, which is set out at page 47 of the Paper Book, the suit in the Small Cause Court was withdrawn as against Dwarka Nath Mitter, and the plaintiff had to pay his costs. In that letter, Dwarka Nath Mitter, through his pleader, repudiates any tenancy, and tells the plaintiff what his position is. He says: "What he" (meaning his client, Dwarka Nath Mitter) "contends is that he is not the tenant of your client, nor he is bound to pay to your client the rent which he had sued him for. Your client well knows the fact that my client has a lien over the stock-in-trade of the said Joseph Lauter, as he has advanced Rs. 15,000 to him on the security of the same."

On the 14th August 1895, the plaintiff served Dwarka Nath Mitter with the notice, which will be found at page 25 of the Paper Book, and great reliance is placed by the respondent on this notice. The plaintiff also sent a notice to Joseph Lauter, which will be found at page 34 of the Paper Book.

According to the statement in the plaint Joseph Lauter "consented to the said enhancement of rent," which means, if it mean anything, that he consented to hold over on those terms. Dwarka Nath Mitter died on the 21st of November 1895, Lauter became a bankrupt on the 10th of January 1896, and on the 23rd of January 1896, this suit was instituted, claiming as against the representatives of Dwarka Nath Mitter Rs. 2,000 for the rent, use and occupation of the premises for four months, viz., September, October, November and December 1895.

Mr. Justice AMEER ALI gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff, and hence the present appeal by the representatives of Dwarka Nath Mitter.

Two questions arise for our consideration: Firstly, whether the allegation made by the plaintiff that Dwarka Nath Mitter agreed to become tenant of the premises upon the terms of paying Rs. 500 a month is made out, and, if not; secondly, whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 2,000 upon the footing of use and occupation of the premises by Dwarka Nath Mitter.

[346] The learned Judge in the Court below has found as a fact that the agreement set up by the plaintiff has not been made out, but the respondents invite us to reverse that conclusion.

The agreement is not supported by any documentary evidence, and virtually the only evidence in support of it is the evidence of Harish Chunder Biswas, who was the sirkar of the plaintiff. He speaks of a certain conversation with Dwarka Nath Mitter, but no rent-bills are produced, and, as against a dead man, I am not disposed to place much reliance on this evidence, in which there are passages which show that it must be accepted with the greatest caution. For instance, he tells us at page 12 of the Paper Book that the reason for not making out rent-bills was because of the uncertainty as to who was to pay the rent. But how could there be any uncertainty as to that, if there was, as he says, a clear agreement that Dwarka Nath Mitter was to pay it? Furthermore this story is inconsistent with the evidence of Joseph Lauter, who was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and he says at page 20: "There was a conversation between us as to notice at the end of September. I said, the "lease is over, and Mr. Gupta has put the rent to Rs. 500. What am I to do. I can't get money enough in. Will you help me?" And he said he would. He said, "Sonnie, I will help you. I will give you Rs. 2,000, and he will help with the rent up to the end of the season. This was the conversation when the two nephews were present. I cannot give you the exact date. I would know the nephews if I see them." That is the evidence of their own witness, and it is perfectly inconsistent with the view that Dwarka Nath Mitter was under the impression that he had entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to pay any rent in respect of these premises, or to become, as between himself and the plaintiff, the tenant of the premises. Again, after Dwarka Nath Mitter's death, the plaintiff treated Lauter as in occupation of the premises, as appears from the letter of the 18th of January 1896 set out at page 60 of the Paper Book: "We are instructed by Babu Nundo Lal Gupta, owner of the premises Nos. 159-160, Dhurum-tollah Street, hitherto in the occupation of the insolvent above named, to request you will be so good as to see that the property belonging to the said insolvent is removed at once, and the premises vacated in the course [347] of a day or two," and so forth. That is only a few days before the present plaint was filed, and that letter shows that the view then taken by the plaintiff was that the premises were, up to the time of the letter, in the occupation, not of Dwarka Nath Mitter, but of the insolvent, and is absolutely inconsistent with the idea of any agreement by Dwarka Nath Mitter to become the tenant. I agree with Mr. Justice AMEER ALI upon this part of the case.

Then, is the plaintiff entitled to recover any thing upon the footing of use and occupation? To enable the plaintiff to recover upon that footing, there must be a tenancy, expressed or implied, there must be evidence of the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant, and of an entry into and occupation of the premises attributable to that tenancy. Where are those requisites to be found in the present case? There is no evidence to support a claim upon the footing of use and occupation.

I have already pointed out that by his plaint the plaintiff says that Lauter consented to hold over, and this is consistent with the letter of the 18th of January which treats Lauter as in occupation of the premises. The case made by the plaintiff is that Dwarka Nath Mitter was in possession of the leasehold premises as mortgagee in possession. To my mind he was nothing of the sort. Under the deed he was entitled to keep a durwan on the premises, and clerk in charge of the books, &c. He put the durwan and clerk on the premises not to take possession of the premises, but to look after the chattels assigned to him by way of mortgage, and he did so on the very day that the deed was executed; and so matters remained up to the time of Dwarka Nath Mitter's death. There was no change in the position, and he never took possession as mortgagee of the leasehold premises. But if he had, I do not appreciate how this would have assisted the plaintiff. The mere fact of his being in possession would not constitute the relation of landlord and tenant, so as to entitle the plaintiff to sue for use and occupation.

But it is said that a tenancy is to be implied from the notice of the 14th of August, Dwarka Nath Mitter being in possession as mortgagee of the leasehold premises. I have exposed the fallacy of this latter view.

But, even if he were, the mere service of such a notice—and [348] when it was served Dwarka Nath Mitter according to the plaintiff's evidence, that of the man who took the notice, said he had nothing to do with it—will not constitute a tenancy. A mere notice such as that given in this case does not constitute a contract. When the tenancy terminated on the 31st of August the plaintiff could have adopted one of two courses. He could have turned Lauter and his horses and carts and chattels into the street, or he could have made a bargain with him or with Dwarka Nath Mitter for a fresh tenancy. As regards the latter, he adopted neither of these courses, but on his own statement, he did make a bargain with Lauter to hold over on an enhanced rent.

There was no express tenancy between the plaintiff and Dwarka Nath Mitter, nor is there anything in the circumstances from which any such tenancy can be reasonably implied. The facts all tend the other way.

Upon this part of the case I am unable to agree with the learned Judge in the Court below, and speaking with every respect I am at a loss to appreciate the bearing of the case upon which he appears to place so much reliance, namely, the case of Ex parte National Guardian Assurance Co. In re Francis, (1878) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 408 (413), a long quotation from which is set out in the judgment. I may add that I scarcely think we should have heard of the present claim had Lauter not become a bankrupt.

For the reasons I have given, the appeal must be allowed. The suit ought to have been dismissed, and must now be dismissed with costs as against the representatives of Dwarka Nath Mitter, including the costs of the appeal.

Prinsep, J.—I concur and have nothing to add.

Hill, J.—I also agree with the views expressed by the Chief Justice.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

Lutchmanen Chetty

Siva Prokasa Modelar.*

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partnership—Infant sons—Mitakshara law—Promissory note, Suit on—Non-joinder of parties—Pleas in bar of suit.

In a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of a firm whose original partners were two brothers, one of whom had previously died, leaving an infant son surviving, while the other, who also had infant sons, was at the date of the execution of the note, sole surviving partner of the firm :

Held, that a Hindu infant who by birth or inheritance becomes entitled to an interest in a joint family business does not necessarily become a member of the trading partnership carrying on the business. There must be some consentient act to that effect on the part of the infant and his partners. Even, therefore, where parties are governed by the Mitakshara law an infant need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. Decrees obtained in such suits by or against the managers of the business are presumed to have been obtained by or against them in their representative capacity, and will be binding on the whole joint family.

Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh, (1879) L. R., 6 I. A., 233 ; Petum Doss v. Ramdhone Doss, (1848) Taylor, 279, and Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 815, referred to.

THE plaintiff and one A. R. L. N. Ramanathen Chetty were undivided brothers constituting a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. They carried on a business together at Davakotta in the Madras Presidency, and subsequently opened a branch business in Calcutta in the name of Ramanath Chetty, who was the elder brother, which was managed on their behalf by a gomastah of the name of Viena Ramanathen Chetty. In 1889 moneys were advanced to the defendant by the Calcutta firm through the gomastah. In March 1890 the plaintiff's brother, Ramanathen Chetty, died intestate leaving an only son. The business continued in the name of the deceased brother, and there were further monetary transactions between the firm and the [350] defendant, and an account was finally taken and adjusted of the dealings between the defendant and the firm of Ramanathen Chetty, when a sum of Rs. 12,000 was found due by the defendant to the firm, and for that sum and interest a promissory note, the subject of this suit, was executed by the defendant in favour of the firm on 31st January 1891, and given by the defendant to the gomastah Viena Ramanathen Chetty for and in respect of the debt due to the firm.

The defendant relied mainly in bar of the suit on the plea that all necessary parties to the suit had not been joined as plaintiffs.

The plaintiff, it was proved, had four sons living, the eldest of whom was nine or nine and-a-half, while the youngest was born since the institution of the suit. The son of the deceased brother Ramanathen Chetty died after the institution of the suit, leaving only a daughter. The plaintiff and his brother Ramanathen Chetty carried on their business both in Calcutta and at Davakotta jointly for the benefit of themselves and their families, and since the death of the plaintiff's brother the businesses were carried on for the benefit of the members of the joint family by the plaintiff as the manager or head of the family.

The defendant raised the contention that as the family was governed by the Mitakshara law the plaintiff's sons on birth became co-sharers in the joint family properties, which included the note in suit; that they succeeded to a share in the joint family property by inheritance on the death of their father's brother Ramanathen Chetty; that as such co-sharers they were necessary parties to the suit, and should have been joined as plaintiffs. It was not, however, shown that the infants had been admitted into the trading partnership or taken any part in the business or exercised any control therein, or that the business was an ancestral business, or that the Calcutta business was started by the brothers with ancestral funds as distinguished from their own acquisitions.

None of the plaintiff's sons were in existence at the time the dealings with the defendant commenced. At the date of the execution of the note in suit the plaintiff's eldest son was probably in existence, and the plaintiff's brother's son was also in existence, but it did not appear when he was born.

[351] Mr. Chakravarti (Mr. Woodroffe with him) for the Plaintiff.—This suit is brought on a promissory note executed for the sum of Rs. 12,000. The execution of the note is admitted, and the only defence is whether the plaintiff is entitled alone to maintain this suit. The note is in the name of the firm under which the Calcutta business was carried on. The note remained with the agent of the firm and was afterwards made over to the custody of the plaintiff. At the time the note was given the plaintiff was the sole partner of the business. His other partner was dead. We are now suing as the sole partner of the firm in whose favour the note was given. Lindley on Partnership, 5th Ed., p. 274. There is no question as to any assignment. At the date the note was given there is no doubt that the plaintiff's brother was dead.

Mr. Henderson (Mr. Knight with him) for the Defendant.—The property of the firm was joint. The suit should be brought in the joint names and not in the name of the plaintiff alone. Ramsebak v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 815. The eldest son of the plaintiff was alive at the time of these transactions, and, if it was joint property, each son at the time of birth became interested in the firm. At no time was Lutchmanen Chetty entitled to the exclusion of his sons. Surju Prasad Singh v. Kwakish Ali, (1882) I. L. R., 4 All. 512, Woodroffe's Evidence Act, pp. 620, 692.

Mr. Chakravarti in reply.—The fact that an infant has an interest in the firm does not make him a necessary party to the suit, see section 247, Indian Contract Act. The case of Ramsebak v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 815, does not assist the Court. There was no question there as to any party being an infant. There the parties were the actual partners. There was no infant. But if a member of a family takes out funds and starts a business of his own there is no presumption that there is any joint family business. If the infants do not become partners why cannot the sole surviving partner alone sue. In the case of the minor the contract must have been with the guardian. Every partner is entitled to give a discharge, but an infant cannot: Rampartab Samrathrai v. Foolibai, (1895) I. L. R., 20 Bom., 767. [352] Besides, three or four members of a Mitakshara family may start a business and all contribute out of the joint funds of their family, but that does not make it a joint family business. The cases cited are cases of an ancestral business where the right accrues by inheritance.

There is no evidence here that the infants were taken in as partners. If two persons choose to start a business of their own and a son is born does he immediately become a partner in the business? He must be admitted or become so by law. Each partner is an agent of the other, but an infant cannot be the agent of all. [SALE, J.—An infant can be made liable by a manager to a certain extent in an ancestral business.] Persons without their consent cannot be made partners, and these infants are of such tender years that they cannot give their consent. The letters of administration show that this was a business started with their own money by the brothers. Mayne's Hindu Law, section 274; Trevelyan on Minors, p. 185. Bungsee Singh v. Soodist Lall, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 739, and Arunachala Pillai v. Vythialinga Mudaliyar, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Mad., 27. The plaintiff besides is the manager of the family.

SALE, J.—The plaintiff in this case claims judgment for the amount of principal and interest due on a promissory note executed by the defendant on the 31st January 1891.

The note is executed in favour of A. R. L. N. Ramanathen Chetty. It appears that the plaintiff and one A. R. L. N. Ramanathen Chetty were undivided brothers constituting a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. They carried on a business together at Devakotta in the Madras Presidency and subsequently opened a branch business in Calcutta in the name of Ramanath Chetty, who was the elder brother, which was managed on their behalf by a gomastah of the name of Viena Ramanathen Chetty. In the year 1889, dealings were commenced with the defendant, moneys being advanced to him by the Calcutta firm through their gomastah Viena Ramanathen Chetty. In the month of March 1890 the plaintiff's brother Ramanathen Chetty died intestate leaving an only son. The business in Calcutta was continued in the name of the deceased brother, and there were further dealings between the [383] firm of Ramanathen Chetty and the defendant till some time shortly before the execution of the promissory note in suit. It has been proved that an account was taken and adjusted of the dealings between the defendant and the firm of Ramanathen Chetty; that a sum of Rs. 12,000 was found due by the defendant to the firm; and that for that sum and interest the note in suit was executed in the name of the firm and was given by the defendant to the gomastah Viena Ramanathen Chetty for and in respect of the debt due to the firm. The defendant has filed three different written statements raising various grounds of defence, and there has been a considerable body of evidence adduced both at the hearing and on two commissions which were issued by this Court. At the hearing no serious attempt was made upon the evidence to contest the plaintiff's claim on the merits, but a plea of non-joinder of parties as plaintiffs was relied on in bar of the suit. The plea was raised in the second and third written statements after evidence had been taken on the first of the commissions issued by this Court. The facts which have been proved, and which it is necessary to state relative to this plea, are as follows. The plaintiff has now four sons living, the eldest of whom is nine or nine and-a-half years old, the youngest having been born since the institution of this suit. The son of the plaintiff's brother Ramanathen Chetty has died since the institution of this suit leaving only a daughter. The plaintiff and his brother Ramanathen Chetty carried on their business both in Calcutta and at Devakotta jointly for the benefit of themselves and of their families, and since the death of Ramanathen Chetty the businesses have been carried on for the benefit of the members of the joint family by the plaintiff as the manager or head of the family. It has not been shown by whom the Devakotta business was started, nor has it been shewn that it was ancestral business, that is to say, a business which descended to the plaintiff and his brother from their father or their ancestors. Nor does it appear that the Calcutta business was started by the brothers with ancestral funds, as distinguished from their own acquisitions. None of the plaintiff's sons were in existence at the time the dealings with the defendant commenced. At the date of the execution of the note in suit [354] the plaintiff's eldest son was probably in existence, and the plaintiff's brother's son was also in existence, but it does not appear when he was born.

* It is contended that the family being governed by the Mitakshara law, the plaintiff's sons on birth became co-sharers in the joint family properties, which included the note in suit, and that moreover they succeeded to a share in the joint family property by inheritance on the death of their father's brother Ramnath Chetty, and that as such co-sharers they are necessary parties to the suit, and should have been joined as plaintiffs. A plea of non-joinder of plaintiffs in an action of contract is a plea in bar of the suit, and if established at the hearing must, as explained in the case of Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo, (1881) 1. L. R., 6 Cal., 815, result in the dismissal of the suit.

No authority has been cited to show that infant members of a Hindu co-parcenary must be joined as co-plaintiffs in suits to recover claims arising out of a joint family business managed by adult members of the family. A debtor of a firm carrying on a joint family business is no doubt entitled to insist that all his co-contractors should join as plaintiffs in a suit instituted to recover the debt, but on what principal can it be said that infants, possibly of tender years as in this case, who are not shown to have been admitted into the trading partnership or to have taken any part in the business or exercised any control therein, are in any sense co-contractors of the debtor? A trade like other personal property is descendible amongst Hindus, but it does not follow that a Hindu infant, who by birth or inheritance becomes entitled to an interest in a joint family business, becomes at the same time a member of the trading partnership which carries on the business. He can only become a member of the partnership by a consentient act on the part of himself and his partners, and it was on this ground held by the late Supreme Court that an infant of tender years, whose name was used in a partnership business, need not be joined as a co-plaintiff in a suit by the father to recover a trade debt. Petum Doss v. Ramdhone Doss, (1848) Taylor, 279.

[355] It is true that the parties in that case were not governed by the Mitakshara law, and that the infant was not entitled to a share in the joint estate, but it seems to me that the same principle would have applied if the infant had been a member of a co-parcenary governed by the Mitakshara law.

In the case of Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo, already cited, the plea of non-joinder was held to be established on principles applicable to a case of an ordinary contractual partnership, although the plaintiffs, both original and added, were all members of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, and the debt sought to be recovered was a debt due in respect of the joint family business. Moreover, it is not necessary, in order to bind the interest of infant members of a Hindu co-parcenary, that they should be joined as co-plaintiffs in suits instituted by the adult members of the family who carry on the joint family business or contracts entered into with the firm, because decrees obtained in such suits by or against the managers of the business will be presumed to have been obtained by or against them in their representative capacity, and will be binding on the whole joint family—Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Euchmessur Singh, (1879) L. R., 6 I. A., 233. It is settled law in England that dormant partners may join as co-plaintiffs in suits on contracts entered into with the firm, but that they need not do so—Lindley on Partnership, 5th Edition, Vol. I, p. 276.

It would seem that this rule would apply with greater force to the case of infant co-sharers of a Hindu joint family, who have not in fact been admitted into the trading partnership by which the family business is carried on for the mutual benefit of all the members of the family.

In the present case the evidence shows that the only original partners of the firm in whose name the note in suit was given were the plaintiff and his brother Ramanathen Chetty, and upon the death of the latter, and at the date of the note, the plaintiff was the sole surviving partner of the firm, and that as such and as the managing member of the family he continued to carry on the business of the firm in Calcutta, until it was closed.

[356] These facts in my opinion are sufficient to establish the plaintiff's right to maintain this suit in his own name, without joining his sons as co-plaintiffs. Nor is the gomastah Viena Ramanathen Chetty a necessary party to this suit, as it has been shown that the defendant's dealings with him throughout were as agent of the firm, and that it was in that capacity the note in suit was given to him.

The result is that there must be judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs of suit, including the costs of the commissions on scale 2.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 18th January, 1899.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty.....Plaintiff

versus

Kailash Chandra Bandopadhyaya and others.....Defendants*

Mesne profits, Suit for—Turn of worship—Right of suit—A suit for wasilat in respect of profits derived from a turn of worship, whether maintainable.

A suit for wasilat in respect of profits derived from a turn of worship, which are in their nature uncertain and voluntary, is not maintainable.

Ramessur Mookerjee v. Ishan Chunder Mookerjee, (1868) 10 W. L., 457, followed.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for mesne profits. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he had purchased a jama out of the debutter of a goddess

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1427 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Roy, Subordinate Judge of Jessore, dated the 5th of May 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Purna Chandra Chowdhry, Munsif of Narail, dated the 27th of May, 1896.

Kali in "the village of Lakshmipur, as also the right to the turn of worship of the said goddess, in the name of his wife, but that the defendants dispossessed him from the said jama and turn of worship on the 1st Aughran 1299; that he had then to institute a suit against the defendants to recover possession of the said jama and turn of worship, a decree was passed in his favour, and in execution of that decree he had obtained possession of the land in dispute, as well as of the turn of worship. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action for recovery of profits, (realized from the land as well as from the turn of worship), which were unjustly appropriated by the defendants, for the period he was kept out of possession by them. The defence mainly was that the suit was not maintainable, and that the claim was excessive. The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiff's suit against the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 for a certain amount, and dismissed the suit against defendant No. 2. On appeal by defendant No. 3 to the Subordinate Judge the whole suit of the plaintiff was dismissed. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Surendra Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry and Babu Bidhu Bhusan Ganguli, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, J.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for wasilat in respect of a certain turn of worship and of certain land. The suit was brought against three persons. Their defence was, shortly, a denial of liability.

The Court of First Instance decreed the suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 3 for a certain amount, and dismissed the suit as against defendant No. 2. Thereupon defendant No. 3 preferred an appeal, and, on the appeal of that defendant, the whole suit has been dismissed by the Lower Appellate Court, on the ground that no suit for wasilat could lie in respect of profits derived from a turn of worship.

In second appeal it is contended, on behalf of the plaintiff appellant, first, that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that no suit for wasilat, in respect of profits derived from a turn of worship, could lie; and, secondly, that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in dismissing the whole suit when a part of the claim was for wasilat in respect of land.

[358] We are of opinion that the first contention of the appellant is untenable. It has been found, and it is practically undisputed, that the offerings to the idol, which constituted the profits of the shebait during his turn of worship, are in their nature uncertain and voluntary. That being so it cannot be said that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants that which they have received out of the offerings made by votaries during the time that the worship was performed by them, even if the plaintiff was the person entitled to perform the worship during that time. In so far as the offerings were intended for the idol the plaintiff can have no personal claim to them, and in so far as they were intended for the shebait of the idol they, being in their nature voluntary, must be taken to have been intended for the person who was then performing the worship, whether rightfully or wrongfully, as against any other person who had a better title to perform the worship during the same time.

Upon neither view can the plaintiff claim to recover the amount.

It has been argued that, if the plaintiff's right to perform the worship during his proper turn had not been interfered with by the defendant, he would have made some profit. But what the amount of that profit would have been is wholly uncertain, and there is no knowing whether any votaries would have paid anything if they knew that it would go to the plaintiff, and not to the defendant, who was then actually performing the duties of a shebart.

The view we take is in accordance with the decision of this Court in the case of Ramessur Mookerjee v. Ishan Chunder Mookerjee, (1868) 10 W.R., 457.

The second contention of the appellant is one on which he is entitled to succeed. The plaint shows that the suit was for wasilat in respect, not only of a turn of worship, but also of certain land; and, so far as the latter claim goes, it is not disputed that the suit is maintainable.

The learned Vakil for defendant No. 3 asks us to absolve his [359] client from liability on the ground that defendant No. 3 did not interfere with the possession of the plaintiff.

Whether that is so or not is a question of fact which will have to be determined by the Lower Appellate Court.

The result is that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that it may dispose of the appeal after determining the question, what is the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover as mesne profits on account of his having been kept out of possession of the land referred to in the plaint, and against which of the defendants. Other questions arising in the case will also have to be dealt with by the Lower Appellate Court.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result, and will be awarded in proportion to the success and failure of the parties in the Lower Appellate Court.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 22nd February, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Chandra Mohan Banerjee.....Petitioner

*Sanction for Prosecution—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), section 195—Presidency Magistrate, Jurisdiction of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 116, 193—Abetment—
Instigating person to give false evidence.*

B, without having obtained sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, charged C before the Chief Presidency Magistrate with instigating her to give false evidence in a certain divorce suit in which C was co-respondent.

* Criminal Revision No. 945 of 1898, made against the order passed by T. A. Pearson, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated 20th December 1898.

Held, that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case without the sanction of the Court before which the divorce proceedings were pending, as the offence charged was alleged to have been committed in relation to those proceedings.

For the purpose of this report the facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. Allen, Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, and Baboo Dasarathi Sanyal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows:—

After a petition for a divorce had been made on the Original Side of this Court, Mrs. Mary Balfour complained to the Magistrate that an offence, being one under sections 116* and 193 of the Indian Penal Code, had been committed in reference to her, inasmuch as an attempt had been made to instigate her to give false evidence in that matter on behalf of the co-respondent. An objection was at once taken that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence without sanction of the Court before which the proceedings in the matter of the divorce case were pending, and the Chief Presidency Magistrate has over-ruled this objection, holding that no sanction was necessary. It seems to us, having regard to the terms of sub-section (h), clause (1), section 195, of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with clause (3), that the sanction of the Court, before which the divorce suit is pending and in which Mrs. Mary Balfour is a witness, is absolutely necessary. The alleged offence is in relation to the proceedings in that Court. The rule will, therefore, be made absolute, and the proceedings in the Presidency Magistrate's Court set aside.

F. K. D.

Rule absolute.

[361] APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 17th February, 1899.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE
PRINSEP, AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Toolsee Money Dassee and others.....Defendants

Sudevi Dassee and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Appeal—Order refusing to set aside award—Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, clause 15—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 2, 588—Preliminary Objection to Appeal—Costs.

An order made by a Judge of the High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction refusing to set aside an award is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court; and an appeal therefore lies from such an order to the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction.

Such an appeal is not restricted by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) 1. L. R., 9 Cal., 482; L. R., 10 1. A., 4, referred to.

On an application to have an award set aside by reason of misconduct on the part of the arbitrators their action alleged was held not to amount to misconduct, and therefore the defendants were not entitled to have the award set aside.

An appeal was dismissed with costs notwithstanding that almost the whole time occupied in the hearing of the case on appeal was taken up by the argument on a preliminary objection that no appeal lay, which was taken by the respondents and was unsuccessful.

THIS suit was brought for the return of certain jewelry, and in the course of it, the questions at issue between the parties were referred to arbitrators. The order of reference, together with the record, was sent to them on the 26th May 1897. Notice was given to the parties that the first meeting before the arbitrators would be held on the 15th August 1897. The appellants (defendants in the suit) attended, and found that some of the other parties were represented by their attorneys; they therefore applied for, and obtained, a postponement of the meeting to the [362] 18th August. Several other meetings were held without any definite result. The sixth meeting was fixed for Sunday, the 21st November; and the appellants' attorney wrote to the arbitrators, protesting against the holding of meetings on Sundays or out of office hours, threatening that if the meetings were so held he would withdraw from the proceedings. The meeting, however, was adjourned for three weeks. It was subsequently postponed to the 3rd January 1898 and then to the 1st February. On the 7th January the arbitrators suddenly issued notices for the meeting to be held that evening at 6-30; this notice was sent to the appellants but not to their attorney. Objection was raised and the meeting was convened the next morning at 7-30. The defendants were not present either in person or by their attorney.

A correspondence ensued; the award was made; and the defendants applied to SALE, J., to set aside the award. He refused the application by an order made on the 22nd March 1898.

* Appeal from Original Civil No. 10 of 1898 from the order of Mr. Justice SALE in suit No. 586 of 1895.

The learned Judge made his decree in the suit subsequently, namely, on the 5th May 1898.

The defendants appealed against the order of the 22nd March 1898.

Mr. Woodroffe and Mr. Garth for the Appellants.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection to the appeal. This is an interlocutory order, and is not appealable. If the defendants had waited until the decree of the 5th May, and had then appealed, they could in that appeal have questioned the propriety of this order; but they filed the present appeal in April. No appeal lies against this order; because clause 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865 is made subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council and the Civil Procedure Code has modified it; and, to the extent that appeals are limited by section 588, has prevented any appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, from an interlocutory order. There is a unanimous series of decisions in the Indian Courts that clause 15 of the Letters Patent must be taken to be modified by section 588 of the Code—Achaya v. [363] Ratnavelu, (1885) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 253; In re Rajagopal, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 447; Vasudeva Upadaya v. Visvaraja Thirthasami, (1897) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 407; Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain, (1889) I. L. R., 11 All., 375. Clause 44 of the Letters Patent expressly makes the powers of the High Court, thereby conferred, subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council.

The decision in the case of Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482, is, no doubt, against me; but the observations of the Privy Council as to the right of appeal there must be taken as having reference only to that particular case, and not as laying down a general principle of such far-reaching consequences.

The order now questioned is not a final order, and it has been followed by a judgment; the order cannot under any circumstances be called a "judgment," but is governed by section 591 of the Code. Such orders then as are contemplated by section 588 are orders made before the final decree in the case, i.e., are interlocutory orders. Those orders not referred to in section 588 may be made the subject of an appeal if the decree by which they are followed is appealable. If this Court sets aside this order, the result will be that the award and the decree will stand while the order itself would be set aside. [AMEER ALI, J.—In In the Goods of Indra Chandra Singh, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 580, PIGOT, J., seems to take the observations of the Privy Council in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry's case, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482, as laying down principles of general application]. The judgment of this Court in that case may be explained by saying that there the Court held that SALE, J., had no jurisdiction to make the order, and the Appeal Court, therefore, was entitled to hear an appeal from it and to set it aside: and the case came before the Court, not under the Code, but under the Probate and Administration Act. An order setting aside an award is an interlocutory order, and is not open to appeal except in an [364] appeal from the decree—Mothooranath Tewaree v. Brindaban Tewaree, (1870) 14 W. R., 327. In all civil matters of original jurisdiction coming before the Court, clause 15 of the Letters Patent is governed by the Civil Procedure Code—Naxivahoo v. Narotamdas Candas, (1882) I. L. R., 7 Bom., 5; Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 B. L. R., 433 (453). Section 588 of the Code, taken with section 591, deals with interlocutory orders; section 244 deals with orders made after a final decree. An appeal lies against a decree given in accordance with an award under section 522 of the Code; and that section has recently been held to include an invalid or illegal award—Kali Prosanne Ghose v. Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 141.

Mr. Woodroffe for the Appellants.—A Judge exercising the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court is not subordinate to the High Court; he is "the High Court." No appeal lies or can lie, under the Civil Procedure Code, from the decree or order of the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction; the appeal is by virtue of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Chapter XLI of the Code deals with appeals from one Court to another and higher Court, and not with appeals from one branch of the High Court to another. Section 588 of the Code no doubt governs the High Court in all matters coming before it under the Code; but it does not touch the right of appeal under the Letters Patent. The case of In re Rajagopal, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 447 is not in point, because section 413 of the Code makes the rejection of an application to sue in forma pauperis a bar to any further proceedings except on compliance with certain terms; and the matter, therefore, was regulated by the Code. The same observation applies to the decision in Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain, (1889) I. L. R., 11 All., 375. The case of Navivahoo v. Narotamdas Candas, (1882) I.L.R., 7 Bom., 5, was decided before the Privy Council's judgment was given in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry's case, (1882) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 482; L.R., 10 I. A., 4, and the decision in Vasudeva Upad-[365] yaya v. Visvaraja Thirthasami, (1897) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 407, is not consistent with itself. A refusal to confirm an award is a "judgment" and is appealable—Howard v. Wilson, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 231, and a refusal to set aside the award should likewise be deemed so. In the case cited the order came under the Letters Patent; in the case of Ambica Dasia v. Nadyar Chand Pal, (1885) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 172, which dissented from Howard v. Wilson, the order did not come under the Letters Patent but under the Code. The word "judgment" in the Letters Patent is purposely used so as to include decisions whether interlocutory or final; and the authorities show that anything is a "judgment" within clause 15 of the Letters Patent which determines any right. The order we complain of did determine a right; the decree merely followed it as a matter of course.

Mr. Bonnerjee in reply on the objection.—The argument that appeals from the Original Side of the Court can only be made under the Letters Patent is not sound; because, under section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, the term "District Court" includes the High Court in its original civil jurisdiction. Section 540 applies to the High Court, because it is not one of the excepted sections; and therefore the High Court exercising original civil jurisdiction is in reality distinct from the High Court exercising appellate jurisdiction.

If the contention of the appellants as to clause 15 of the Letters Patent is correct, then, if under section 321, SALE, J., had set aside this award there would have been an appeal: but no such appeal would be allowed in the mofussil because it would be a mere interlocutory order, so that there would be more appeals from the Original Side of the High Court than from mofussil Courts.

[Their Lordships decided to hear the appeal. After a little time, the Court, without calling upon Mr. Bonnerjee, expressed itself opposed to the appellants on the merits, and called upon Counsel to argue the question of costs.]

[366] Mr. Woodroffe.—If the appeal had been heard as to its merits on the first day it would, as we have seen, been quickly disposed of. The respondents, however, have raised the preliminary objection, and it has taken about two whole days to discuss it. The objection has been over-ruled, and the appellants ought to have the costs of these two days—Tarachand Mookerjee v. Jadoonath Mookerjee, (1862) Marsh, 79.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—When an appeal is brought, the respondent is entitled to raise a preliminary objection as to its admissibility, and if it be not unreasonable he ought not to be made to pay all costs relating to it if the objection is disallowed.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.)

Maclean, C.J.—This is an appeal from an order of Mr. Justice SALE, dated the 22nd March 1898, refusing to set aside an award made in the suit.

The suit was for the recovery of jewellery of the value of Rs. 2,600 or thereabouts: it was by consent referred to arbitration on the 22nd February 1897, and the award, which the present appellants seek to set aside, was made on the 9th January 1898.

It is sought to set aside the award on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrators.

A preliminary objection, however, has been taken on behalf of the respondents (the successful plaintiffs in the suit) that no appeal lies to this Court, and that contention is based on two grounds, (1) that the right of appeal from the decision of a single Judge conferred by clause 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865 is controlled by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and (2) that the decision of Mr. Justice SALE is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

To my mind the first of these points has been authoritatively decided against the view of the present respondents by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Hurnish [367] Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482; L. R., 10 I. A., 4. I need not travel into the facts of that case, but there their Lordships said at page 494 of the report in the Indian Law Reports: "It only remains to observe that their Lordships do not think that section 588 of Act X of 1877, which has the effect of restricting certain appeals, applies to such a case as this where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the Full Court." It is clear from the report that the point was elaborately argued, and the clear expression of their Lordships' opinion must be read in connection with that argument. But we are told there are reported decisions of the High Courts of India which conflict with this view of the Privy Council, and that there is virtually a current of judicial authorities in this country against that view. Great reliance is placed upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain, (1889) I. L. R., 11, All 375, but the reasons there given for distinguishing that case from the one in the Privy Council are not to my mind sufficiently convincing. In a later case, Muhammad Narmullah Khan v. Ishanullah Khan, (1892) I. L. R., 14 All., 226 (230), the same Court assigns other possible reasons for the decision of the Privy Council, but it seems a little forced to say these were the reasons of the Privy Council when their Lordships have said that section 588 does not apply, "when the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the Full Court." Then again we are referred to two cases of the Madras High Court—Achaya v. Ratnavelu, (1885) I.L.R., 9 Mad., 253, and In re Rajagopal, (1886) I.L.R., 9 Mad., 447. But in neither of these cases, which were respectively decided in 1885 and 1886, was the case in the Privy Council cited, though previously decided in 1882, so they can scarcely carry much weight. In the case of Vasudeva Upadhyaya v. Visvaraja Thirthasami, (1897) I.L.R., 20 Mad., 407, Mr. Justice BENSON at page 412 tells us what, in his opinion, their Lordships' language in the Privy council amounts to, and it is this: "Section 588 no doubt has the effect of restricting appeals in the case of orders which are not decrees, but it does not apply to such a case as this before us, [368] which is an order in execution and, therefore, a 'decree.' When, therefore, such an order has been made by a single Judge an appeal lies to the Full Court." This may be what their Lordships meant, but it is not what they have said. And the learned Judge goes on to say at the same page: "It is impossible to suppose that their Lordships, in a mere observation of four lines, without any explanation or reasoning, laid down a rule of such far-reaching importance and opposed to what appears to be the plain language and intention of the Legislature."

To my mind the language of the Judicial Committee is not very aptly described as "a mere observation."

Mr. Justice BENSON'S opinion, however, is not shared by his learned colleague in the case, and I am not disposed to accept the view that, in advising Her Majesty, the members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are so unguarded in their language—especially when the precise point has been urged before them by most experienced Counsel—as Mr. Justice BENSON seems inclined to assume. I am but little disposed to whittle away decisions of the Privy Council. I prefer to accept, and, as I am bound, to follow them if really in point, and if they be regarded as requiring reconsideration to let them be reconsidered by the members of the Judicial Committee themselves. I notice that two of the members of the Judicial Committee on this occasion were retired Chief Justices of Bengal, and I may add that the majority of the Judges of this Court held that an appeal would lie, and that GARTH, C.J., dissented only because he doubted whether Mr. Justice PONTIFEX'S decision was a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

In my opinion then the first question is concluded by the decision of the Privy Council. So also virtually is the second, for the decision proceeds upon the footing that Mr. Justice PONTIFEX'S order was a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865. But whether that be so or not, I am clearly [of] opinion that Mr. Justice SALE'S order was a "judgment" within the meaning of that section. I concur in the definition of a "judgment" given in the case of The Justices of the Peace of Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 B.L.R., 433 (452). Mr. [369] Justice SALE'S order was a decision upon the question of whether the award was to stand or to be set aside. If this be not a "judgment," I scarcely see what a judgment can well be. I therefore overrule the preliminary objection.

I will now pass to the merits. The appellants charge the arbitrators with misconduct, and upon this they base their claims to have the award set aside.

The arbitration commenced on the 15th August. Certain witnesses were examined and cross-examined, and adjournments were from time to time made, and although there was a little skirmishing as to whether the arbitrators should sit on Sundays or out of office hours, no case of misconduct is alleged against the arbitrators up to the early part of January 1898.

But on the 3rd January 1898 the defendants' attorney received a letter from the plaintiffs' attorney, saying that the hearing of the arbitration would be postponed for four weeks on account of the absence from Calcutta of one of the arbitrators. Notwithstanding that intimation, on the 7th January the arbitrators sent a notice to the defendants that they intended to proceed with the arbitration at 6-30 that same evening. This to my mind was not a reasonable conduct on their part having regard to their notice a few days before, that the meeting had been adjourned for a month, and if the arbitrators had insisted on proceeding with the arbitration that evening, I am not prepared to say that my conclusion on the case would not have been adverse to the plaintiffs. The defendants say they did not receive this notice until 5 o'clock, but be that as it may, they attended the meeting and the hearing was postponed until 7-30 on the following morning, although, as the defendants say, they protested that this was too short an adjournment, and that they would not have time to consult their attorney. The plaintiffs say they heard nothing of any such protest. Except extending the time for making the award nothing was done at this meeting. The fact of fixing so early an hour in the morning for the meeting may appear somewhat strange to European ideas; but it must be remembered that this was an arbitration between native litigants with native arbitrators, and that the evidence shows it was to be [370] conducted out of office hours, and in that view a meeting at such an hour is, perhaps, nothing very extraordinary. However, on the 8th January the defendants did not appear at the meeting, and after waiting nearly two hours, the arbitrators adjourned till 8 A.M. on the 9th notice of which was given in the forenoon of the 8th to the defendants and to their attorney. But on the 8th the defendants' attorney wrote the letters set out at pages 9 and 10 of the Paper Book. After that at page 9 had been written—but whether or not before it had been sent is not apparent on the evidence—the defendants' attorney received the notice of the postponement of the meeting until the 9th, and thereupon wrote the letter on p. 10 saying "the whole thing seems to be a farce; my clients will have nothing further to do with the arbitration." Now, were the defendants under these circumstances justified in withdrawing from the arbitration? I think not. The arbitrators to put it at the lowest had displayed a readiness to adjourn the case when the defendants said they were not prepared to go on; they adjourned the meeting on the 7th, and again they adjourned it on the 8th, and proceeded on the 9th only after they had been told that the defendants had withdrawn. It is their action on these occasions which is said to constitute the misconduct on their part. I do not think such action amounts to misconduct. On the contrary I think the defendants, under the circumstances, put themselves in the wrong by withdrawing from the arbitration. When they were told the meeting was adjourned until the 9th, their reasonable course would have been to have appeared before the arbitrators, and urged the necessity, if it existed, of a further and reasonable adjournment. Looking at some of the objections raised from time to time by the defendants' attorney I am not disposed to think that the defendants were over-anxious that the arbitration should proceed with too much rapidity. However, be that as it may, I agree with Mr. Justice SALE that there was no misconduct on the part of the arbitrators, and the rule must be discharged with costs.

Prinsep, J.—This appeal is against an order of Mr. Justice SALE under section 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure refusing to set aside an award.

[371] A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground, first, that it is barred by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and next that if not so barred it is not appealable as a "judgment" within the terms of clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

Briefly the law bearing on this subject may be thus stated:—Suits brought in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction may be tried by one Judge, whose proceedings are regulated by rules and orders made by the High Court as far as possible in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure.

Clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, declares that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the judgment, not being a sentence or order passed or made in a criminal trial of one Judge. Clause 15 therefore constitutes a Court of Appeal in such cases, and it further declared that the appeal shall lie from a judgment of a single Judge.

It is contended that this clause of the Letters Patent, 1865, has been modified by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and especially by section 588 of that Code. The Supreme Legislative Council has the power to amend the Letters Patent (clause 44), but the question is whether such power has been exercised in this respect.

Clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865 is like the Bengal Civil Courts Act and similar Acts constituting a Court to hear appeals in cases where the right of appeal is given by law, but clause 15 goes farther than those Acts, because it limits the cases appealable. It provides for an appeal to the High Court against the judgment of a single Judge of that Court not being a sentence or order passed or made in a criminal trial, and this applies where such judgment may have been passed by such Judge sitting as a Division Court in the exercise of civil jurisdiction, either as a Court of Appeal or as a Court of Original Jurisdiction. But the right of appeal is against a judgment only and against a judgment of only a single Judge. I do not refer to the other part of this clause because it is irrelevant for the purposes of the case now before us. Without clause 15 of the Letters Patent, although an appeal might lie under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, there would be no Court constituted to hear the appeal against a judgment decree or order on the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, for clause 16 relates to a different matter, and it would confer no such appellate jurisdiction, and the portions of the Code of Civil Procedure, which relate to appeals to Her Majesty in Council, would give the right of appeal only in a small number of cases of a special character, either in regard to the points of issue or the value of the subject-matter of the particular suit. We have it, therefore, that if beyond clause 15 of the Letters Patent 1865, section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the right of appeal against any order of the description specified therein, there is no Court of Appeal constituted to hear it, if such order not being a judgment had been made by the Judge on the Original Side of the High Court. There would be another difficulty, which it is inconceivable that the Legislature should have contemplated. If irrespective of clause 15 of the Letters Patent an appeal lies under section 588 of the Code it must be against an order passed by any Divisional Court exercising the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court. To what Court would it lie? There is no Court constituted by the Letters Patent or by any local law to hear it. Clause 16 of the Letters Patent does not apply, nor does clause 15. Then, again, if such an order be appealable, it would be appealable if passed by a Division Court consisting of more than one Judge. The Court might have consisted of the majority or even of all of the Judges of the High Court. I would also point out that the same difficulty would arise if an order of remand be passed by a Division Court hearing an appeal whether that appeal be from the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction or from a subordinate Court such as the Court of a District Judge or Subordinate Judge. These considerations lead me to conclude that it was never intended by the Legislature to alter the effect of clause 15 of the Letters Patent by such indirect legislation. If it had been intended to do so the alteration in the law would have been expressly declared, and such difficulties as I have indicated would have been provided for. The contention of the learned Counsel proceeds upon sections 632 and 638 of the Code of 1882. Section 632 provides that "except as provided in this chapter the provisions of this [373] Code apply to such" that is, to all "High Courts" established by 24 and 25 Victoria, chapter 104, and section 638 sets out the sections of the Code which are so excepted. Amongst these sections 588 does not appear, and so it is contended that an appeal lies under section 588 against an order passed on the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court; that only such orders as are specified in section 588 are appealable; and lastly that as the order on the case before us is not within section 588 it is not appealable. But to complete this line of argument it would be necessary to go further and to hold that the term "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent must be read as synonymous with "decree" as defined in the Code. There is no authority for this, and we cannot alter the meaning of "judgment" in the Letters Patent, 1865, as it has always been accepted, by inferentially making it synonymous with the definition of "decree" as given in the Code of 1882.

I have so far considered this matter as if it were res integra. But fortunately we have authority for our guide. In Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482: L. R., 10 I. A., 4, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an order made by Mr. Justice PONTIFEX on the Original Side of the High Court under section 610 of the Code rejecting an application to execute an order of Her Majesty in Council was a "judgment"; and in dealing with that case their Lordships were pressed with the argument that the right of appeal in that case was regulated by section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure which had modified clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Their Lordships of the Privy Council disposed of this in these words: "It remains only to observe that their Lordships do not think that section 588 of Act X of 1877, which has the effect of restricting certain appeals, applies to such a case as this, where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the Full Court." I observe that Act X of 1877 is here mentioned, but as a matter of fact the order under appeal was passed in 1880, and was consequently under the Act of 1877, as modified by Act XII of 1879, and the Code of Civil Procedure in this respect is the same as the Code of [374] 1882, which is now in force. I understand this to mean that section 588 does not affect any matter coming within clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and, if I may venture to say so, the reasons which led to the expression of that opinion and which have not been given in the judgment reported may be those stated by me for arriving at the same conclusion. It is much to be regretted that the terms of section 638 of the Code should have been so expressed as to give good ground for entertaining a doubt, but in my opinion the matter has been definitively settled by the highest authority in the case mentioned by me.

Some cases have been cited to us, in which there has been a reluctance to accept this expression of opinion regarding the operation of section 588. An endeavour has been made to explain it as not binding to the full extent of the meaning. I find myself unable to accept this view of the law, both because the terms of this expression of opinion by their Lordships are clear and emphatic, and also because, if I may be permitted to say so, a careful examination of the law on the subject fully bears it out.

In Banno Bibi v. Meldhi Husam, (1889) I. L. R., 11 All., 375, the case of Hurrish Chundra Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 482: L. R., 10 I. A., 4, was considered, and that case was distinguished having regard to the matter then before their Lordships of the Privy Council. With every respect to the learned Judges I am unable to agree with their views of the distinction. Whatever may have been the grounds upon which two of the Judges (WHITE and MITTER, JJ.) in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry's case may have decided that matter it was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council that they had held Mr. Justice PONTIFEX's order was "a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent;" and in their observations in dealing with the dissentient judgment of GARTH, C.J., they show no indication of any doubt on this point. On the contrary they follow this up by adding " their Lordships do not think that section 588 of Act X*of 1877 (Code of Civil Procedure) which has the effect of restricting certain appeals applies to such a case as this where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the [375] Court to the Full Court." I observe that EDGE, C.J., in this case states that " considerable difference exists between section 588 of the present Code and section 588 of Act X of 1877 which was the Act under consideration in the case before the Judicial Committee." I cannot find to what the learned Chief Justice refers, for after a careful comparison of these sections of the two Codes of 1877 as amended by the Act of 1879 and of 1882, I am unable to find any difference affecting this particular matter.

Two cases Achaya v. Ratnavelu, (1885) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 253, and In re Rajagopal (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 447, were relied upon in the case of Banno Bibi v. Mehdi Husain, (1889) I. L. R., 11 All., 375. In the first of these cases it was held that, notwithstanding clause 15 of the Letters Patent, there was no appeal against the order of a single Judge of the High Court rejecting an application for review of judgment. The reason given for this was that clause 15 of the Letters Patent was controlled by section 659 of the Code, which declared that such an order shall be final. The other case is exactly in point, and it was there held that clause 15 of the Letters Patent was controlled by section 588 of the Code, which gave no appeal against an order rejecting an application to sue in forma pauperis. But the reports of these cases show that in neither of them was the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council cited or considered. I do not, therefore, propose to discuss them in detail. It is sufficient to state that they express a different view of the law, which I am not disposed to follow against the higher authority of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In Muhammad Naimullah Khan v. Ishanullah Khan, (1892) I. L. R., 14 All., 226, (230), the case of Hurriah Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi is incidentally referred to, the interpretation of that expressed in the earlier case of the Allahabad Court being maintained.

The matter was also considered by the Madras High Court in Vasudeva Upadyaya v. Visvaraja Thirthasami, (1897) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 407, which was [376] an appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, against the order of a single Judge of the High Court dismissing an appeal against an order passed by a Lower Appellate Court remanding a suit. The learned Judges in that case (BENSON and SUBRAMANYA AYYAR, J.J.) did not take the same view of the law regarding the effect of section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure on clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The order under consideration was, I would again state it so as to express the case clearly, an order passed by a single Judge of the High Court sitting as an Appellate Court on an appeal under section 588 from the order of a Lower Appellate Court remanding a suit. BENSON, J., held that clause 15 of the Letters Patent had been modified by section 588 of the Code, that is to say, of the Code of 1882; that the order in question was not appealable under section 588 because it was an order passed by a single Judge in an appeal which had been heard under section 588, and the concluding words of section 588 barred a further appeal; whether such an order would be a " judgment " within the terms of clause 15 of the Letters Patent apparently was not considered. Mr. Justice BENSON referred to the case before the Privy Council, and notwithstanding the emphatic terms in which their Lordships expressed their opinion that section 588 does not apply to a case such as that before them, in which the appeal is from one of the Judges of the High Court to the Full Court, he stated that in his opinion " these words refer only to the actual case before the Privy Council." Whatever may have been the case before their Lordships their observations clearly were directed to every case in which "the appeal is from one of the Judges of the High Court to the Full Court," which I understand to be that, notwithstanding section 588 of the Code, clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, remains in full force and untouched, and I certainly do not agree in the paraphrase of those observations as expressed by that learned Judge in page 412 of the report.

Mr. Justice SUBRAMANYA AYYAR, on the other hand, reluctantly yielded to the force of authority in previous cases of the Madras High Court supported by the Allahabad cases which I have mentioned; but he was not prepared to set aside the opinion of [377] their Lordships of the Privy Council as mere dicta. He says: "The tenor of the observations seem clearly to indicate that they were intended to be a decision on the point irrespective of the circumstances of the particular case in which the observations were made," and he left the matter to be finally settled at some future time by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court. I may here state that in another case, Sankaran v. Raman Kutti, (1896) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 152, the Madras High Court (COLLINS, C.J., and BENSON, J.) held that in a similar case an appeal did not lie by reason of the concluding words of section 588 against an order passed on appeal by a single Judge of that Court against the orders of a Lower Appellate Court remanding a suit. The case before the Privy Council was not referred to in the report of that case. The High Court followed previous cases on the subject, and amongst these the case of Loki Mahto v. Aghoree Ajail Lall, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 144. I have not referred to that case, as it was decided before the Privy Council case was decided. There are only two reported cases of this High Court in which the case of Hurriah Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi has been referred to, and in each of these cases that case was explained and distinguished in this way, that their Lordships held that where the order of a single Judge decided finally or otherwise any question at issue in the case of the rights of any of the parties to the suit it is appealable to this Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. How far section 588 of the Code has touched clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865, has never, that I am aware of, been considered until now.

I do not desire to discuss this subject any further. I entirely agree with the manner in which Mr. Justice SUBRAMANYA AYYAR had expressed himself in the words which I have quoted from the case of Vasudeva Upadyaya v. Visvaraja Thirithasami, (1897) I. L. R., 20 Mad., 407 (417), and I have no doubt that we are bound to follow to the fullest extent the opinion expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council that section 588 of the Code does not apply to the case now before us, and that this matter has thus become settled law.

[378] I confess, however, to have had some doubt whether the order under section 522 of the Code refusing the application to set aside the award is a "judgment" within the terms of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and whether the appeal before us has not been prematurely made. Section 522 declares that after such an order "the Code shall proceed to give judgment according to the award" and that "upon judgment so given a decree shall follow."

This appeal has been preferred before judgment and decree on the case, and it seems therefore to have been somewhat premature. This, however, is after all a mere matter of form. The question is whether the order is a "judgment" within clause 15 of the Letters Patent, 1865. The order is so far final that judgment must follow on it on the terms of the award, and it so far concludes the rights of the parties in the suit. So far, therefore, as held in Hurriah Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi it is a "judgment" within the meaning of section 15 of the Letters Patent. There are other cases to the same effect to which I might refer, but this is unnecessary.

On the merits of this appeal I agree with the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice just delivered.

Ameer Ali, J.—After the well-reasoned judgments just delivered, it only remains for me to express my entire concurrence with them.

I only wish to observe that where the Legislature intended to give finality to an order, whether made by a single Judge of a High Court established by Royal Charter or by any other Judge, it has declared so in explicit terms. The effect, therefore, of acceding to the objection taken by the learned Counsel for the respondents, would be to cut down by implication the provisions of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, which I think would be against all principle; for a right or power vested by statute can be taken away or divested only by express enactment and not by mere suggestion based upon inferences. In my opinion section 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to orders made by subordinate Courts, which derive their powers from the Code. The Civil Procedure Code is applicable to the Original [379] Side of the High Court in so far as the procedure is concerned, and some of its provisions have no doubt had the effect of curtailing the right of appeal by giving finality to certain orders of a Judge exercising singly the ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction of the High Court. In other words, it lays down uniform procedure for all Courts of Original Civil jurisdiction, including the High Court on its original side. But the powers of the High Court are not derived from the Code, and consequently an order of a Judge of the High Court exercising its Original Civil jurisdiction, though made in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Code, can hardly be said to be made "under the Code." Besides, section 589 of the Code indicates to my mind that the preceding section was applicable only to the orders of subordinate Courts.

Another argument advanced on behalf of the respondent requires some attention. It was contended that it would be anomalous to give a right of appeal from every order of a Judge of the High Court exercising singly its ordinary civil jurisdiction whilst restricting that right in the case of orders made by a subordinate Court. To my mind the anomaly suggested is hypothetical. In the first place, only such orders of a Judge of this Court are appealable under clause 15 as fall within the category of "judgments." In the second place many of the orders of subordinate Courts not appealable under section 588 are subject to revision under section 622 of the Code. And as this section is not applicable to the High Court, the Legislature, it seems to me, has advisedly left untouched the provisions of clause 15. Apart, therefore, from the express ruling in the case of Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kali Sunderi Debi, (1882) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 482 : L.R., 10 I.A., 4, I am of opinion that the objection is untenable. The Madras and Allahabad High Courts have tried to restrict the decision of their Lordships on the point in question to what is called "the facts" of the particular case. I am not prepared to adopt either the reasoning or follow the views expressed by the learned Judges. The scope of their Lordships' decision must be understood by the light of the contention raised before them.

[380] As regards the contention that the order appealed against is not a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15, it must be remembered that it was made under section 521 of the Code, which provides the different grounds on which (and no other) an award shall be set aside, one being the corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators or umpire. And it decides the merits of the question between the parties by determining the right of the appellant to have the award set aside on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrators. Section 522 does not affect the character of the decision under section 521, for the judgment under section 522 follows as a matter of course when the right of the party questioning the award is once determined or adjudicated. The order therefore, falls strictly within the definition of the word "judgment," in clause 15, given by COUCH, C.J., in the case of Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 B. L. R., 433.

"I agree, therefore, in holding that the present appeal is maintainable.

As regards the merits of the case it seems to me difficult to say that the view taken by Mr. Justice SALE is incorrect. It is possible that the arbitrators acted somewhat unreasonably in cancelling the date fixed on the 3rd of January and taking up the case on the evening of the 7th. That evening, however, nothing was done in consequence of the protest of the appellants, and the arbitrators appointed next morning to proceed with the arbitration on the 8th. Neither the appellants nor their attorney appeared, and the case was again adjourned. On that same date Mr. Rutter, attorney for the appellant, wrote to the arbitrators the letter to which attention has already been called. No step was taken to obtain an adjournment from the arbitrators or to represent to them in a proper spirit that the hasty manner in which they were proceeding prejudiced the appellants, and that they (the appellants) required more time to get themselves ready. Had the arbitrators refused to accede to such an application, matters might have stood on a different footing, but in the face of Mr. Rutter's letter it is difficult to say that the learned Judge in the Court [381] below is wrong in holding that the appellants had failed to make out a sufficient case for setting aside the award. I therefore agree in dismissing appeal No. 11 of 1898.

Appeal dismissed.

Attorney for the Appellants: Mr. Rutter.

Attorney for the Respondents: Mr. S. D. Bonnerjee.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K. C. I. E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Brohmo Dutt.....Defendant
versus Dharmo Das Ghose.....Plaintiff.*

Estoppel—Minor—Mortgage by Minor—Attorney for both Mortgagor and Mortgagee— Notice of minority—Evidence Act (I of 1872), section 115— Contract Act (IX of 1872), sections 11, 64—Avoiding Contract— Compensation—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sections 38, 41.

Section 115† of the Evidence Act has no application to contracts by infants; but the term “person” in that section applies only to a person of full age and competent to enter into contracts.

The words “person” and “party” in section 64‡ of the Contract Act are interchangeable, and mean such a person as is referred to in section 11§ of that Act, i.e., a person competent to contract.

A mortgagee employing an attorney, who also acts for the mortgagor in the mortgage transaction, must be taken to have notice of all facts brought to the knowledge of the attorney; and, therefore, where the Court rescinded the contract of mortgage on the ground of the mortgagor's infancy, and found that the attorney had notice of the infancy, or was put upon enquiry as to it, Held, (affirming the decision of JENKINS, J.) that the mortgagee was not entitled to compensation under the provisions of sections 38|| and 41 of the Specific Relief Act.

THE facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of JENKINS, J., which is reported in I. L. R., 25 Cal., 616. His decision was in favour of the plaintiff.

* Appeal No. 7 of 1898 from the decree of Mr. Justice Jenkins in Original Civil Suit No. 630 of 1895.

[382] The defendant appealed.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe (with him Mr. Garth, Mr. A. Chowdhry, and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe) for the appellant.—Even if the plaintiff was not actually of age, he was even on the finding of the lower Court, within two months of his majority. It was proved that the plaintiff had instituted legal proceedings in his own name as a person sui juris, and on the very day that he executed the mortgage deed in favour of the defendant, he made a declaration, before a notary, that he was of age. He is, therefore, though an infant, estopped from asserting the contrary,—Ganesh Lala v. Bapu, (1895) I.L.R., 21 Bom., 198. We submit that that decision is good law although JENKINS, J., has held that it is not, and is of opinion that an infant, though not excepted by section 115 of the Evidence Act, does not impliedly come within it.

Section 229 of the Contract Act, as to notice, does not apply to a case like the present where the agent is the agent of both parties: the language of the section is limited to the case of third parties. Either the attorney had notice of the plaintiff's minority or he had not. If he had not, the defendant is entitled to the return of the money he lent: if he had, he was conspiring with the plaintiff to defraud the defendant. And where an attorney acts fraudulently, notice is not necessarily to be imputed to the client—Cave v. Cave, (1880) L. R., 15 Ch. D., 639 (643), because the fact raises a presumption against the communication being made to the client; Espin v. Pemberton, (1859) 3 De. G. & J., 547. Fraud is not an essential ingredient of estoppel—Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 296. The result of acceding to this argument would be not to take away the protection the law gives to an infant but would merely be to prevent him from committing a fraud, and depriving the person who had dealt with him in good faith of the benefit of the transaction. The Privy Council has laid it down that an infant may be of such an age as either to consent or to bind himself by his conduct. And it is submitted that even if he cannot contract he can make a representation binding on himself—Mills v. Fox, (1888) L. R., 37 Ch. D., 153. In Raj Coomary Dassee v. Preo Madhub Nundy, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 453, JENKINS, J., held that a contract made by an infant was not void, but only voidable.

Under section 64 of the Contract Act, the defendant is entitled to a refund of the money advanced. The word "person" in that section must not be limited to mean a person of full age; such a construction would unduly narrow the scope of the section, and is not justifiable. [Mr. Bonnerjee—Section 64 evidently refers to a contract voidable under section 19.] It does not follow that section 64 refers only to cases falling within section 19; because section 19 is not exhaustive. But even if the defendant should not succeed under section 64 of the Contract Act, then, if this mortgage deed is cancelled, he would be entitled to a restitutio in integrum under sections 38 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act.

Mr. Garth on the same side.—The discretion vested in the Court should in the present case be exercised on behalf of the defendant. The case of Sarat Chandra Mitter v. Mohun Bibi, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 371, is distinguishable; for there the lender admittedly knew that the borrower was a minor. All that the defendant asks is that the Court will not give the plaintiff the equity he asks, without doing equity to the defendant. It should not be forgotten that it is the plaintiff who invokes the equity of the Court; and if he seeks equity he must do equity.

• As to imputing any knowledge to the defendant about the plaintiff's age,—it is clear that not even the attorney had or could have any such knowledge; nobody could have, until the case was decided in Court after the hearing of all the evidence; and the Court, in order to come to any conclusion, had to have before it the evidence on oath of all persons able to assist it in the matter.

Mr. Bonnerjee (with him Mr. Chuckerbutty) for the Respondent.—Section 64 of the Contract Act contemplates contracts voidable under section 19, and does not apply to contracts voidable under other circumstances than those of section 19. Section 11 shows what persons are incapable of entering into a [384] contract, and, among others, persons not of age according to the law to which they are subject. Apart from that argument, the illustrations to section 65 show that contracts with minors are not contemplated.

Section 38 of the Specific Relief Act has no application to the present case. The suit was for cancellation of the mortgage deed; section 39 (if any) was the only one applicable. The appellant has shown no case upon which he is entitled to say, in the words of section 41, that "justice requires" that compensation should be given him.

Mills v. Fox, (1888) L. R., 37 Ch. D., 153, is no authority in support of the defendant's case; all that it shows is that the representation by the settlor, in the course of negotiations under the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855, that she was entitled to deal with her property, should be made good in equity. And Buckmaster v. Buckmaster, (1887) L. R., 35 Ch. D., 21, (taken to the House of Lords under the name of Seaton v. Seaton, (1888) L. R., 13 App. Cas., 61) shows that that Act has removed the disability of infancy only as regards settlements made by minors in contemplation of marriage and with the sanction of the Court of Chancery; and the judgment of STERLING, J., must be taken to have reference only to that Act.

Mr. Woodroffe in reply.

The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN, C. J., and PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.)

Maclean, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice JENKINS, in which he held that a certain alleged mortgage deed executed by the plaintiff on the 20th of July 1895, was void and inoperative, and ought to be cancelled.

The circumstances of the case are these: The suit is brought by a minor, suing by his mother as his next friend, to set aside a mortgage which the plaintiff had undoubtedly executed. I will take it for the purposes of this judgment that the contract was not a void one, but a voidable contract.

[385] The defence was that, even if the plaintiff were a minor, he fraudulently represented that he was of age and that fraudulent representation was acted upon, and that consequently, by a well recognised principle of equity, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

The first point for consideration is, whether or not the plaintiff, on the 20th of July 1895, was a minor or of full age. Upon that part of the case, we have heard but little argument from the appellant's Counsel. The learned Judge in the Court below has stated that he had no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff was not of the age of twenty-one years, on the 20th of July 1895; and substantially that issue has not been contested before us, although, during the course of the argument, it was rather feebly suggested that Mr. Justice JENKINS, in allowing the mother to refresh her memory from a certain document which was shown to her when giving evidence, had admitted evidence which was not admissible. That point, however, is not raised as one of the grounds of appeal, and under these circumstances we declined to allow the matter to be gone into. Upon the first issue then, I see no ground whatever to dissent from the view expressed by the Judge in the Court below; that on the 20th July 1895 the present plaintiff was a minor.

The next question is, did the plaintiff fraudulently represent to the defendant that he was of age? This representation is alleged to have been made in a declaration, which he swore, and which is set out at page 132 of the Paper Book. It is a long document, but the pith of it lies in the last paragraph, in which the plaintiff says or is made to say that he came of age on the 17th of June then last past, that would be the 17th of June 1895. This is the alleged fraudulent representation.

Now, let us consider the circumstances under which that document was obtained. One Kedar Nath Mitter, an attorney of this Court, was acting as solicitor both for the present appellant (the intending mortgagee) and for the plaintiff, the intending mortgagor. It appears that on the 15th of July this attorney received a letter from the solicitor of the mother [386] and guardian of the infant, (she having been appointed guardian by an order of Court) telling him in the clearest terms that the plaintiff was not of age. There was a dispute upon the evidence as to whether or not Kedar Nath Mitter ever received that letter. I do not entertain the slightest doubt that he did receive it, and, notwithstanding his denial, I am satisfied that the letter is the letter which is spoken of as a "thundering letter" by his own witness, whose evidence will be found at page 100 of the Paper Book. In consequence of that letter what does Kedar Nath Mitter do? Although he is told in the most explicit terms by the attorney of the mother that the plaintiff is an infant, under the age of 21 years, and that any one lending money to him would do so at his own risk and peril, he thinks fit to proceed, and obtains a declaration on the 19th July from one Nanda Lal Ghose, and from another person, who is described as the family astrologer, and both these declarants say that the plaintiff was of age. But Kedar Nath Mitter does not rest there. Although he was acting as the solicitor of the plaintiff, and it was his clear duty, as such solicitor, to protect him, he thinks it right to obtain the declaration in question from him. That declaration is obviously prepared and drawn up by Kedar Nath Mitter himself. Its language is not the language of the plaintiff, it is the language of Kedar Nath Mitter, and to my mind it was a most reprehensible act on the part of Kedar Nath Mitter to have prepared, and allowed his client to have sworn, this declaration, when he had received the clearest notice from the mother that her son, as has proved to be the case, was a minor. The declaration was not prepared or sworn until after the mortgage had been prepared, and when it was ready for execution: and when according to the defendant's own story, negotiations had been going on regarding it, since the previous May. It was prepared and sworn, in fact, at the very last moment. These are the circumstances under which this declaration was taken.

Now taking that declaration to contain a fraudulent representation as to the plaintiff's age, was this attorney misled or defrauded by it. He had received the clearest notice, by the letter of the 15th of July, that the plaintiff was not then of [387] age, he pays no heed to that notice, he obtains this declaration under the circumstances I have mentioned, and it is to my mind almost absurd to ask us to believe that he was deceived by any statement contained in it. I entirely agree with the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Justice JENKINS that Kedar Nath Mitter was not misled by it.

But then it is said that, although Kedar Nath Mitter may not have been misled by it, there is nothing to show that the defendant himself, who was advancing the money, was not misled by it. That is an argument to which I am quite unable to accede. The defendant thought fit to employ this attorney in the matter, and the knowledge acquired by the attorney in a case such as this must be taken to be the knowledge of the defendant himself, and the attorney must be taken in an ordinary mortgage transaction such as the present, to have communicated to his client the facts which were communicated to him. At any rate as between the plaintiff and defendant it does not lie in the defendant's mouth to say that he was not bound by the knowledge which his agent, whom he employed in this transaction, had acquired.

Then it is urged that Kedar Nath Mitter practised a fraud, not upon the infant plaintiff, but upon the defendant, and we are asked upon that footing to adopt the view laid down by Lord CHELMSFORD in the case of Espin v. Pemberton, (1859) De G. and J., 547, where he says: "I would rather say that the commission of the fraud broke off the relation of principal and agent, or was beyond the scope of the authority, and, therefore, it prevented the possibility of imputing the knowledge of the agent to his principal. I think that Pemberton was not the solicitor of Browne in the assignment, as there is not only no proof of consent that he should act in that capacity, but something approaching to proof of the contrary."

We are invited upon that principle to hold that any knowledge acquired by Kedar Nath Mitter could not be fairly imputable as knowledge acquired by the defendant himself. This is a perfectly new case; no such case was ever suggested [388] in the Court below, and there is no evidence to support such a case; on the contrary the evidence shows that Kedar Nath Mitter, so far from practising any fraud upon the defendant, took this declaration from the plaintiff, either with the object of holding it in terrorem over him, when he attained his majority, as a lever, possibly, for a threat of criminal proceedings, or, alternatively as a basis for his present contention that the plaintiff, even though a minor, could not take advantage of his own fraud. It would appear, therefore, that Kedar Nath Mitter obtained the declaration, not with the view of defrauding the defendant, but of protecting the defendant's interest.

Then it is contended that under section 115 of the Evidence Act, the plaintiff, though a minor at the time, is estopped from saying that he did not make the representation in question. In my opinion, this section has no application to the case of a minor. A minor cannot be estopped by a deed or by the recitals in a deed, and if he cannot be so estopped, it seems incongruous to say that he can be estopped by a parol declaration, for this is the contention. We must read the language of the Legislature if we can, so as to make it harmonize, and not conflict, with the general law, though remembering at the same time that the office of the Legislature by its legislative Acts is to define, and even alter, the law. The term "person" in section 115 is amply satisfied by holding it to apply to one who is of full age, and competent to enter into a contract, and I cannot bring myself to think that it could have been the intention of the Legislature, by such a general expression, to institute such a grave change in the law of estoppel in relation to minors.

Our attention has been directed to a case decided by the High Court at Bombay, which holds that section 115 of the Evidence Act is applicable to the case of a minor. Speaking with every respect, I am unable to assent to that view, and I may point out that the cases upon which the learned Judges in that Court rely as substantiating their proposition when carefully examined appear to me not to warrant the conclusion arrived at. This has been pointed out by Mr. Justice JENKINS, and concurring as I do in his criticism I need not refer to what he [389] has said. The case of Mills v. Fox, (1888) L. R., 37 Ch. D., 153, is quite distinguishable. That was a case under the Infants' Settlement Act, which for the purposes of the settlement treats the infant pro tanto, as sui juris, and I am satisfied that Mr. Justice STERLING in that case did not intend to lay down any such proposition in relation to estoppel against a minor, as that for which the present appellant now contends.

Now I pass on to the argument raised in relation to section 64 of the Contract Act. Section 64 again speaks of a "person" and the "party," and I think that the terms "person" and "party" must be regarded as interchangeable terms.

The observations I have made as to the meaning of the term "person" in section 115 of the Evidence Act apply with even greater force to that expression as used in section 64 of the Contract Act.

In my opinion the term "person" in section 64 means such a person as is referred to in section 11, that is to say, a person competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and it would be an extraordinary result to hold that this section applies to the case of a minor. Moreover, as was pointed out by Mr. Bonnerjee, although it is unnecessary for us to decide the point, it is certainly open to argument that, when section 64 of the Contract Act speaks of "voidable" contracts, it refers to such contracts as are spoken of as voidable in section 19 of the same Act. But I express no final opinion on this point. If we were to accede to the appellant's argument as to the application of section 64, the protection, which the law has so carefully thrown around minors in relation to matters of this nature, would be virtually destroyed, or I might almost say shifted to protect the very parties who prey upon the weakness and folly of the young.

Then, we are asked to exercise the discretionary powers vested in us under sections 28 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act. That is a matter for the discretion of the Court; the learned Judge in the Court below has exercised his discretion adversely to the [390] appellant, and I see no reason which would justify us in differing from that conclusion. On the contrary I do not think that in a case of this class where a man, who has been told that the person with whom he is dealing is a minor, still chooses to lend him money, "justice requires" that it should be returned to him.

The last point was that the minor when he had attained majority ratified the bargain, but there really is no evidence to support this view, and I agree with Mr. Justice JENKINS upon the point. I have now dealt with the many points which have been urged for the appellant; in my opinion they all fail, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Prinsep, J.—I agree in dismissing the appeal with costs for the reasons just given by my Lord, the Chief Justice.

Amee Ali, J.—As the questions raised in this case are of some importance, I desire to add a few observations. It was urged in the first place that assuming the letter of the 15th of July 1895 was received by Kedar Nath Mitter, it did not amount to a notice such as would compel him to make any enquiry with reference to the statement contained therein. It was further urged that notice to Kedar Nath would not affect the defendant in the case; and that, as a matter of fact, Kedar Nath acted fraudulently towards Brahma Dutt, the defendant.

In considering these questions it is necessary to bear in mind some of the salient facts of the case. It has been abundantly proved, amongst other things, that the defendant is a money-lender, who, at the time of the transaction under enquiry, was not in Calcutta, and that all his business here was managed by his monib gomasta Dudraj. This man admits in his deposition that the defendant's entire business was in his charge, and that throughout the transaction Kedar Nath acted on behalf of his master. He admits further that he had known Kedar Nath for about twelve years, and that during that period a considerable amount of business had been done for him by the latter. The evidence of Dudraj clearly shows that he was on intimate terms with Kedar Nath Mitter. Dudraj states that when the question of the plaintiff's minority was broached before him, he told Kedar "to remove all doubts about the man's infancy," whilst Kedar says [391] that "he obtained the declaration of the plaintiff concerning his age and the Exhibits 10 and 11 for the greater security of the interest of my client" meaning the defendant. Throughout the evidence of Kedar Nath or Dudraj there is not the faintest ground for the suggestion that the former was acting fraudulently towards the defendant or his gomasta. Not only is there no ground in support of that suggestion, but the evidence given in the case directly contradicts it.

As regards the contention that the letter of the 15th of July 1895 did not amount to a notice, according to my apprehension of the subject, any information which puts a person upon enquiry is a notice. Apart from what is admitted by Dudraj and Kedar Nath Mitter, namely, that the plaintiff himself stated to the latter, that there was a question about his majority, I entertain no doubt whatever, upon the evidence, that Kedar Nath did, on the 15th of July, receive the letter which was addressed to him by Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose on behalf of the mother and constituted guardian of the infant. I do not attach the smallest credence to Kedar Nath Mitter's denial of the fact; and, if he did receive that letter, it undoubtedly did put him upon enquiry. The information conveyed to him in that letter was as clear and explicit as it could well be. And what did Kedar Nath, who was the defendant's attorney, do upon receipt of that letter? If he had been acting as he ought to have done, he would have told the plaintiff that, if he had attained his majority he should go and get his guardian discharged. Instead of doing that, he goes and induces the plaintiff to make a declaration of the character already described. Instead of going to the mother or the mother's brother for further information on the subject of the plaintiff's minority he obtains some affidavits from two persons, one of whom cannot be regarded as otherwise than his creature. Nanda Lal Ghose is an attorney's clerk, who is or was in the habit of bringing work to Kedar Nath, as he says. We all know what that means. This Nanda Lal Ghose is said to be an uncle of the plaintiff, but it is in evidence that he was litigating with the plaintiff's mother, that he has lost all his property, and for a considerable number of years has held no communication with the plaintiff's family. It was upon these declarations that Kedar [392] Nath proceeded, as he says, to get this money advanced to the plaintiff. There can, therefore, be no doubt that, so far as Kedar Nath was concerned, he was not misled by any statement made by the plaintiff regarding his age. The plaintiff himself stated to Kedar that there was a doubt about his age, and that his mother was questioning his majority. The mother's attorney wrote to Kedar Nath on the subject, so that when he advanced the money to the plaintiff he advanced it with his eyes open.

The contention that notice to the attorney is not notice to the defendant is, I must say, wholly unsupported by authority. There is a presumption that the solicitor or attorney does his duty. It was Kedar Nath's duty to convey to the defendants the information which was given to him in that letter of the 15th of July, and if he failed to do so, the defendant must take the consequences.

In Boursot v. Savage, (1866) L. R., 2 Eq., 134, the same question that has been attempted to be raised in the case before us was presented for decision. In that case one Holmer, a solicitor, was one of the trustees under a certain indenture of trust. By an indenture in which he forged the names of his co-trustees Holmer assigned to the defendant Savage certain leasehold hereditaments covered by the trust. Upon the discovery of the fraud the beneficiary sued for the cancellation of the indenture of assignment. At the trial it was proved that Savage had no knowledge of the forgery or fraud committed by Holmer; but it was not disputed that he had acted in the transaction as the defendant's solicitor. On the question of notice to Savage in respect of the trust, it was contended by his Counsel that Holmer had acted as solicitor for both parties, and that when the fraud commenced the connection of solicitor and client was broken off. Dealing with this contention KINDERSLEY, V.C., at pages 141 and 142 of the report, expressed himself as follows: "Supposing, however, that actual knowledge of the existence of a trust cannot be imputed to the defendant Savage, still I think he is affected by constructive notice. He employed Holmer as his solicitor in the transaction of the purchase; and, according to the doctrine of Equity, a purchaser [393] has constructive notice of that which his solicitor, in the transaction of the purchase, knows with respect to the existence of the rights which other persons have in the property." He then goes on to say: "It is a moot question upon what principle this doctrine rests. I confess my own impression is that the principle on which the doctrine rests is this: that my solicitor is alter ego; he is myself; I stand in precisely the same position as he does in the transaction, and therefore his knowledge is my knowledge; and it would be a monstrous injustice that I should have the advantage of what he knows without the disadvantage. But, whatever be the principle upon which the doctrine rests, the doctrine itself is unquestionable. It is insisted, however, that the doctrine cannot apply to this case because Holmer was committing a fraud, and the client is not to be affected with constructive notice of a fraud committed by his solicitor. But if the client would be affected with constructive notice of a trust, the existence of which is known to his solicitor, in the case where there is no fraud, the fact that the solicitor is committing a fraud in relation to that trust cannot afford any reason, why the client should not be affected with constructive notice of the existence of the trust. It is the existence of the trust, and not the fraud, of which he is held to have constructive notice, and the constructive notice of the existence of the trust must be imputed to him, whether there is a fraud relating to it or not."

I am not aware that that case has been overruled or dissented from in any subsequent case. On the contrary in the case of Bradley v. Riches, (1878) L. R., 9 Ch. D., 189, L. J. FRY gave expression to the same view, in other words that the knowledge of the solicitor was the imputed knowledge of the client.

But I go further and hold upon the evidence that the present case does not rest upon constructive notice. For Dudraj admits that a day or two before the execution of the deed he was informed that there was a question as to the plaintiff's age, and I regard that as sufficient information to put him upon enquiry. If the [394] enquiry is not sufficient, if it turns out that he did not take proper steps to satisfy himself, and if, afterwards, it is established by judicial investigation that the fact of which he purported to be satisfied was not the true fact, he must take the consequences.

Then it was argued that the plaintiff was estopped under section 115 of the Evidence Act by his representation in respect of his age. To hold that an infant may be estopped in regard to contracts by conduct or misrepresentation would be practically to sweep away all the limitations the law has imposed on the capacity to contract; and a person labouring under a disability would be enabled to enlarge by his own act his legal capacity to contract. * In the Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, (1854) 9 Exch., 422, it was held that a person under a disability to contract was not liable upon the contract, nor for a wrong arising out of or directly connected with the contract, and which is the means of effecting it and parcel of the same transaction. The same principle was followed in Bartlett v. Welles, (1862) 1 B. & S., 836.

It follows, therefore, that when the present law declares that an infant shall not be liable upon a contract, or in respect of a fraud in connection with a contract, he cannot be made liable upon the same contract by means of an estoppel under section 115. I, therefore, agree that there is no estoppel whatsoever in this case founded upon any representation or alleged representation on the part of the plaintiff.

As regards section 64 of the Contract Act, I agree that the contracts there referred to are contracts by persons who have the capacity to contract or who are not labouring under any disability from contracting. As at present advised I agree with the decision of this Court holding that the contract of an infant is voidable at his option, but that must be understood as meaning that it is voidable to his advantage and not to his disadvantage. No reason has been shown in this case for the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of this Court. Undoubtedly a Court of Equity has the power, if the minor has derived any benefit by [395] means of a fraudulent representation—to order compensation, to use a common maxim—to compel a person seeking equity to do equity. In the present case I see absolutely no foundation whatever for the defendant's invoking the equitable jurisdiction of the Court. I agree, therefore, in dismissing this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

LORDS HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

The Land Mortgage Bank of India.....Defendants

versus

Abul Kasim Khan and others.....Plaintiffs.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Mortgage—Construction of Mortgage—Operative words in a Mortgage deed.—General language.

A mortgage deed having specifically charged the property originally offered as security, extended the operation of the mortgage by general language to include all interests in the mehals, villages, and lands, comprised in the sanad of a talukhdari estate. It was now questioned whether one of the villages comprised in the sanad was part of the mortgaged property. The operative words, uncontrolled by anything in any recital, declared all the above subject to the mortgage. The deed was, accordingly, held to include the village in question, effect being given to the operative words in their ordinary meaning.

APPEAL from a decree (25th July 1889) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing a decree (31st March 1888) of the District Judge of Faizabad.

This suit was brought on the 30th May 1887 by the representatives of Umres Singh, a talukhdar, deceased in 1880. They claimed the right of possession against the appellant, the Land Mortgage Bank, of the village Bazidpur in the Faizabad District, alleging that the Bank had no title thereto, as the result of a judicial sale in execution of a decree obtained by the Bank against Umres Singh upon a mortgage, dated the 23rd August 1871. The plaintiffs, respondents, alleged that Bazidpur [396] was not entered in the schedule of the mortgaged property that accompanied the mortgage deed, and that this village had been wrongly attached and sold on the 3rd March 1877, in execution of a decree obtained by them in 1875 for Rs. 1,22,131 against Umres Singh. The defence was that an entire taluk named Meopur Baragaon, comprising the village Bazidpur, in question, was included in the mortgage of 1871; not only the mauzas specified in the schedule to the mortgage having been mortgaged but also all other mauzas appertaining to that taluk, which included Bazidpur. Also that the sale, after contest on application to have it set aside, had been confirmed by the Deputy Commissioner of the Faizabad District on the 3rd April 1877. On the 17th September 1878 the appellants sold the village to the other defendants in the present suit.

In evidence was the mortgage deed of the 23rd August 1871, executed by Umres Singh in favour of the appellants, by which he conveyed, subject to the mortgage, all the estate known by the above name, the particulars being given in a schedule annexed to the deed. It was added in the deed that the estate was granted to Umres Singh by sanad under the hand of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh; and the deed conveyed, also, all other, if any, the mouzas, mehals, villages, lands, and shares of and interests in the same, comprised in the said sanad. Also was in evidence the decree of the 1st June 1875 in favour of the Bank for the above sum, and declaring their lien on Meopur Baragaon till payment.

The District Judge decided that the deed of the 23rd August 1871 mortgaged all the villages in the taluk and not merely those specified in the schedule. But he held the suit to be barred by limitation.

On the plaintiffs' appeal, the Judicial Commissioner was of opinion that there was no bar by lapse of time. But his judgment was that Bazidpur was not intentionally included in the mortgaged property, and was therefore excludable by his decree.

On this appeal,—

Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Appellants, argued that Bazidpur was included in the mortgage by the general language of the deed of 1871.

[397] Mr. A. Cohen, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the Respondents argued that as the earlier language of the deed differed from the later, and as a reference to what had been mentioned in the preliminary arrangements did not make it appear that the parties to the mortgage intended to effect the inclusion of Bazidpur, their intention should be taken to be against the inclusion of the village. The principle of construction in the case of general language following and exceeding more detailed description was that the object and intention of the parties must be regarded.

There was here a resemblance to the cases of discrepancy between recital and conveyance; and in the latter cases where the recital clearly indicated what was intended to be conveyed, and operative words of a general character went beyond that recital, the operative words were construed with a restriction. They cited Jenner v. Jenner, (1866) L. R., 1 Eq., 361; Rooke v. Lord Kensington, (1856) 2 K. & J., 753.

Mr. J. D. Mayne was not heard in reply.

Their Lordships' judgment was then given by Lord Macnaghten.—The learned Counsel in this case have very properly agreed that if their Lordships should be of opinion that the village of Bazidpur is included in the mortgage, the appeal must succeed. It appears to their Lordships perfectly plain that the village is included. After conveying by specific description the property originally offered in security, the mortgage deed throws in as an additional subject of conveyance "all other (if any) the mauzas, mehals, villages, lands, and shares of and interest in mauzas, mehals, villages, and lands comprised in the said sanad." It is admitted that this village was comprised in the sanad; it follows therefore that it passed by words, which include everything that the sanad comprised. There is no contradictory recital. After noticing the original application for the loan, the narrative winds up by saying that the Bank have agreed to make the advance on having repayment of the sum advanced and interest thereon secured "in manner hereinafter appearing." That recital points to the operative part of the deed as complete in itself, without [398] anything in the preamble to control or confuse the natural and ordinary meaning of the language used. There is surely nothing so very strange in finding that a mortgage deed as finally settled contains something more than the security originally proposed. The reference to the sanad in the original proposal seems to suggest the course which the negotiations must have taken. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed, and the suit dismissed with costs in the Courts below. The respondents must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

The 17th November, 1898.

PRESENT :

LORDS ASHBOURNE, HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN AND MORRIS, AND SIR R. COUCH.

The Rivers Steam Navigation Company.....Defendants
versus
Choutmull Doogar and others.....Plaintiffs.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Carriers' Act (III of 1865), sections 6, 8, and 9—Negligence—Accident, Loss by—Burden of proof in a suit for damages for non-delivery.

The plaintiffs sued a company, who were common carriers, for damages for the non-delivery of goods entrusted to them for carriage, destruction of the goods by fire having taken place on board the company's flat when moored off the place of destination. How the fire originated was not shown. The company did not prove absence of negligence on their part nor was there placed before the Original Court a case inconsistent with their negligence.

The Judicial Committee dismissed an appeal from the decree of the Appellate High Court, which proceeded on the 9th section of the Carriers' Act (III of 1865), that Court having taken the non-delivery as placing the burden of proving absence of negligence on the carriers.

There were facts showing that no adequate means had been provided by the defendants for extinguishing a fire on board, and that the watch was inefficient. The defendants, accordingly, had failed to exonerate themselves.

APPEAL from a decree (29th January 1897) of the Appellate High Court, reversing a decree (26th February 1896) of the [399] High Court in its original jurisdiction. The plaintiffs, who now appealed, were merchants trading at Calcutta and at Serajgunge. The company defending the suit were common carriers by inland navigation. The suit was to recover the value of 432 drums of jute received on board their flat Khyber by the Company in November 1893 at Serajgunge, to be delivered to the plaintiffs at Calcutta. The flat arrived there ; but whilst moored off Jagarnath Ghat (where the jute had to be delivered) on the morning of the 7th December 1893, the flat and its cargo were destroyed by fire, the origin of which did not appear.

The forwarding note contained the following :—

“The Company will not be under liability for damages, or compensation, in respect of loss or damage to goods . . . except such liability as they are, or may be, subject to under the provisions of any law for the time being in force, or of any contract other than this, for the time being in existence between the company and the shipper.”

The question raised and decided on this appeal was whether the appellants were liable as common carriers by river for the loss of the goods.

The circumstances of the loss are stated in their Lordships' judgment, and also appear in the report of Choutmull Doogar v. The Rivers Steam Navigation Company, (1897) 1. L. R., 24 Cal., 786. The plaintiffs filed this suit in the Court below on the 5th January 1895, charging that the defendants were liable as common carriers for the loss of the jute. The defendants in their written statement alleged that the goods were received by them to be carried, on the terms of the forwarding note, and that they had been lost without any negligence on their part.

By the Carriers' Act (III of 1865), it is provided as follows :—

Section 6. "The liability of any common carrier for the loss of or damage to any property delivered to him to be carried, not being of the description contained in the Schedule to this Act, shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by any public notice, but any such carrier not being the owner of a railroad or tramroad, constructed under the provisions of Act XXII of 1863 may by special contract, signed by the owner of such property so delivered as last aforesaid or some person duly authorised in that behalf by such owner, limit his liability in respect of the same."

[400] Section 8. "Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained every common carrier shall be liable to the owner for loss of or damage to any property delivered to such carrier to be carried when such loss or damage shall have arisen from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier or any of his agents or servants."

Section 9. "In any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss, damage, or non-delivery of goods entrusted to him for carriage, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that such loss or damage or non-delivery was owing to the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, his servants, or agents."

The suit was heard by SALE, J., in the original jurisdiction of the High Court. The principal issue was whether the loss was due to the negligence of the defendant Company, and whether the forwarding note protected them. On the latter point the Judge held that the defendant Company were relieved from liability for loss not occasioned by their negligence. On the issue of fact he held that the Company had proved that the loss was not so occasioned, thereby discharging the burden imposed upon them by the Carriers' Act.

Upon the evidence he came to the conclusion that the fire did not originate from anything on the flat, and that all reasonable precautions had been taken to prevent the cargo from taking fire from outside. He was also of opinion that the appliances on board for extinguishing fire were fairly sufficient, and that the inability of the crew to put out the fire was caused by the rapidity with which it spread. The Judge accordingly dismissed the suit with costs.

On appeal the Appellate High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ.) reversed the above judgment on the ground that the defendants had not discharged the burden cast upon them of showing that the loss was not due to their negligence. The decree was that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 3,324, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. with costs.

On this appeal—

[401] Mr. Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Mr. J. F. Clerk, appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. A. Phillips, for the Respondents.

The argument for the appellants was that the defendants had proved that the loss was not caused by their negligence or default or by any act or omission on the part of their servants.

Counsel for the respondents were not called upon.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Lord Morris.—Their Lordships do not require to hear Counsel in support of the decision of the High Court, as they are of opinion that there has been no case shown to alter the judgment that was pronounced by that Court.

It appears that the jute in question was put on board the appellants' vessel, and put on board, so far as can be ascertained, in a proper manner, in a proper flat, properly arranged, and under proper circumstances. It appears that upon the night in question, about half-past twelve, from some rather incomprehensible cause or other, the jute caught fire, and the whole cargo was burnt.

The plaintiffs do not rely upon any special construction of the forwarding note other than that which is relied upon by the defendants, who contend that they have brought themselves within the protection of the Carriers' Act; that is, that they are exempt, if they satisfy the onus which is imposed upon them of showing that there was no negligence on their part.

The plaintiffs have also given up any question as to holding the defendants liable on the ground of having deviated from the agreement, and therefore the question comes to the simple and—in form, at all events—narrow one, whether the defendants have exonerated themselves by showing that there was no negligence on their part.

A fire took place, and it is the common case that it did not arise from spontaneous combustion. It, therefore, must have arisen from some cause either external to the flat or internal in the flat. If it occurred from a fire within, it would appear that the onus is not discharged by the defendants, because they had [402] the control of the flat. If the fire took place inside, they must have done something or other, or something must have happened on the vessel inside of the flat, which led to the fire. They are, therefore, driven to suggest causes for its occurring from something external to the flat; and it certainly is a very remote, and rather a fanciful, suggestion that it arose from some spark coming from certain dinghies or smaller boats that were in the neighbourhood.

In the first place, on the evidence of the captain and of the serang, the fires were put out in those small boats about 9 P.M. It was suggested that a man throwing the end of a cigar or lighting a pipe might have caused the fire. But that seems most improbable, because the flat was guarded by the corrugated iron at the top and bottom, and by a purdah or thick canvas all round about it, and it would have taken the fire a very considerable time to reach the jute if it had arisen externally. Therefore it appears that the fire must have originated from some cause inside. If the cause was inside, as has been said, the onus is not discharged, because the whole of the flat was under the control and management and care of the defendants.

Again, they were bound to watch; that is their own case; and accordingly they allege that they did watch, and that about 12 o'clock, just shortly before the fire, two persons named Tamiz-ud-din and Omed Ali were the watchmen; that Tamiz-ud-din was to watch on the starboard side and that Omed Ali was to watch upon the port side. Tamiz-ud-din did not watch on the starboard side. If he had watched, and the fire had arisen from any external cause, he would have perceived it almost at once, and if he had not been for a very considerable time engaged in rather a curious sort of investigation (he appears, namely, to have been watching an accumulation of jungle upon an anchor that was hung up and no way concerned in the anchoring of the vessel, or in directing its course, or in keeping it where it was) he would have seen the fire arise, and he could have given outcry at the time, and notice that would have led in all probability to its being extinguished. The fire, however, had taken such hold of the jute that it had gone too far by the time he noticed it, a [403] notice which really arose not from his looking at the matter at all, but by the fires being reflected by the water, which he appears to have been watching, instead of watching that which he was put there to watch, namely, the flat.

Then the absence of the other witness, as described by the Chief Justice of the High Court, is, to say the least of it, unfortunate. It is very unfortunate, because he might have shown that Tamiz was much longer absent than seven or eight minutes—a most peculiar time for him to select, as if anybody could distinguish between seven or eight minutes and a quarter of an hour, or 17, or 18, or four or five minutes, when their attention was not directed to investigating it at the time.

At all events the observation of Tamiz-ud-din was for such a substantial time withdrawn from the matter which it was his proper business to watch, that all the misfortune occurred, practically speaking, by reason of his not watching. If he had been walking up and down on the starboard side, as he ought to have been, he would have observed this fire coming against the purdah; or he would have observed the fire from within, and not have waited to observe it from the glare in the water. It appears that the defendants have not at all exonerated themselves from the onus cast upon them of showing that the fire originated from causes over which they had no control, and could not have been expected to have had any control; and the evidence would really go to show that the fire must have originated from within the flat, and therefore from a place for which they were liable for its being in a proper position, and free from any inflammatory article that would have set the jute on fire when it could not have got on fire of itself.

In addition to that it also appears that when the fire did take place there was an utter absence of any power of extinguishing it, except by the primitive mode of the crew throwing buckets of water upon it. There were two pumps, and they were both useless—the pump in the fore part of the vessel was useless because the captain was alone there, and he could not work the pump by himself, and the men could not get there. Why had he not the men at his disposal? What is the use of having a [404] pump if you have nobody to work it? Then there was a pump aft; and that pump could not be worked because it appears that the jute was piled up close to the bulkhead, and that the hose was too short; so both the pumps become utterly useless, and the conflagration goes on until, not alone is the jute destroyed, but the vessel sinks.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that there is no reason for disturbing the conclusion come to by the High Court upon both grounds.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment of the High Court should be affirmed. The appellants will pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

TESTAMENTARY JURISDICTION.

The 24th March, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the Goods of P. J. Avdall, Deceased.

Letters of Administration—Administrator-General's Act (II of 1874), section 12—Verification of Petition—Court Fees Amendment Act (XI of 1899).

The Administrator-General as a public officer is exempted from verifying otherwise than by his signature any petition presented by him under the provisions of Act II of 1874.

In the goods of McComiskey, (1893) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 879, followed.

The form of affidavit prescribed by Act XI of 1899 indicates that it does not apply to an application by the Administrator-General.

THIS was an application by the Administrator-General for letters of administration to the above estate. The sole question raised was whether the signature of the Administrator-General was a sufficient verification to the petition, or whether he was required to make an affidavit. The petition of the Administrator General was as follows :—

[405] First.—That Paul Johannes Avdall, the deceased abovenamed, who was an Armenian inhabitant of the Town of Calcutta, and who was an Insurance Broker, departed this life at No. 29, Pollock Street, in the Town of Calcutta, on the 11th day of January 1899 intestate, leaving property and effects within the jurisdiction of this Hon'ble Court to be administered unto and leaving, as your petitioner is informed and believes, a brother named Peter Johannes Avdall and a sister named Elizabeth Sarkies, who, your petitioner is informed and believes, is the widow of Carapiet Johannes Sarkies, deceased, and who your petitioner is also informed and believes is seriously ill, his only next of kin him surviving.

Second.—That the amount and value of the assets left by the said deceased which are likely to come to your petitioner's hands, in case letters of administration be granted to him, will not, as your petitioner verily believes, exceed the sum of Rs. 6,000, and that the same consists of the property, estate and effects appearing in the Schedule hereunder written :—

Schedule of assets left by the deceased.

	Rs.
I. Household furniture and effects, carriages and horses in Calcutta of the estimated value of	2,000
II. Amount of commission due to the deceased abovenamed by Messrs. Walker, Goward & Company of the Strand Road in Calcutta estimated at	4,000
TOTAL	6,000

Third.—That your petitioner is informed and believes that the said Peter Johannes Avdall, who, your petitioner is also informed, is the brother of the said deceased, and who resides at No. 4 Shurruf Duftry's Lane in Calcutta, is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing his affairs, and your petitioner is also informed and believes that the said Elizabeth Sarkies, the sister of the deceased abovenamed, is seriously ill and unable to sign her consent at foot of this petition.

Fourth.—That more than a month has elapsed since the date of the death of the said Paul Johannes Avdall, deceased, and, as your petitioner is informed and believes, none of the next-of-kin of the said deceased have applied for a grant of letters of administration to his estate.

Fifth.—That no previous application has been made to this Hon'ble Court, or to any other Court for grant of probate of any will of the deceased abovenamed, or for letters of administration of the property, assets, credits and effects of the deceased abovenamed, as appears from the certificate of the Registrar of this Hon'ble Court herewith produced.

Sixth.—That your petitioner is desirous of obtaining an order that letters of administration, as in case of intestacy, to the property, assets, credits and [406] effects of the deceased abovenamed be granted to your petitioner with effect throughout the Province of Bengal.

Your petitioner therefore humbly prays your Lordships for an order that letters of administration as in case of intestacy to the property assets credits and effects of the deceased abovenamed be granted to your petitioner with effect throughout the Province of Bengal.

The petition was verified only by the signature of the Administrator-General, without affidavit.

Sale, J.—This is an application by the Administrator-General for letters of administration. The petition contains a schedule of assets, from which no deduction is claimed. The only question is whether the signature of the Administrator-General should be accepted as a sufficient verification under section 12 of the Administrator-General's Act II of 1874, or whether he should be required to make an affidavit in the form prescribed by Act XI of 1899. The form of affidavit prescribed by this Act in itself sufficiently indicates that it was intended to be used by applicants other than the Administrator-General. The Administrator-General, as a public officer by section 12 of Act II of 1874, is exempted from verifying otherwise than by his signature any petition presented by him under the provisions of the Act. See In the Goods of McComiskey, (1893) 1. L. R., 20 Cal., 879. This section, unless expressly repealed, cannot be treated as having ceased to be operative.

Under the circumstances an order for grant of letters of administration may be made on a certificate being produced from the Registrar that the administration duty has been paid and a statement to that effect being inserted in the petition.

Attorney for the Petitioners : Mr. Camell.

PRESENT :—

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the Goods of Omda Bibbe.....Deceased.

Letters of Administration—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), section 3, Schedule 1, Art. 11, section 19,H.—Court Fees Amendment Act (XI of 1899)—Practice—Payment of ad valorem fee on Probate or Letters of Administration.

In an application for probate or letters of administration the ad valorem fee prescribed by Statute should be prepaid to the satisfaction of the Court. Such payment must be made to the Registrar and certified by him or by the Taxing Officer where an exemption is claimed and allowed. This certificate should be produced to the Court with the application and affidavit of valuation.

IN this case an exemption from the total amount of the ad valorem fee payable to the Court was claimed, but no certificate from the Taxing Officer was produced to the Court at the time of the application for letters of administration.

Sale, J.—In the High Court the fee mentioned in article 11 of the first Schedule to the Court Fees Act is, under section 3 of the Act, payable to the Registrar. In case of difference as to the fee or the amount thereof payable, the question is by section 5 of the Act referred to the Taxing Officer. These sections have not been repealed by the amending Act XI of 1899. By that Act the High Court, when an application is made to it for probate or letters of administration, is required to cause notice to be given to the chief controlling revenue authority, that is to the Board of Revenue. The object is not to delay the grant, which may be made as soon as the Court is satisfied that the ad valorem fee payable on the valuation of the assets furnished in the prescribed form has been paid. The fee is required to be prepaid to the satisfaction of the Court. Such payment should be made to the Registrar and certified by him to the Court. This certificate or a certificate from the Taxing Officer, where exemption is claimed and allowed, should be produced to the Court with the application and the affidavit of valuation.

This petition may, therefore, be returned to the applicant in order that it may be re-submitted with a certificate from the Taxing Officer.

Attorney for the Petitioner : Mr. N. C. Bose.

.PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE SALE.

In the Goods of A. S. Gubboy.....Deceased.

*Letters of Administration—Bond, Form of—Succession Act

The Indian Succession Act, section 256, requires that an administration bond should be taken in every case. It may, however, be varied, by special order of the Court, in the case of a limited or special administration and follow the English form.

THIS was an application for letters of administration in limited form, and it was prayed that, having regard to the limited nature of the grant asked for, an administration bond might be dispensed with :—

Sale, J.—This is an application for a grant of letters of administration of the property and credits of Aaron Shalome Gubboy, deceased, limited for the purpose of reconveying the premises comprised in a mortgage to the mortgagor.

It is stated in a petition verified in the usual way that the "deceased died without leaving any properties or effects to be administered unto," and that he had no beneficial interest in the mortgage the premises comprised in which are to be reconveyed.

It appears that this mortgage has been treated as belonging to the estate of the brother of the deceased, and that the ad valorem fee on the amount secured thereby has been paid.

It is said that having regard to the nature of the limited grant prayed for, no assets can come into the hands of the administrator, and that this is a case in which an administration bond may be dispensed with. But the law does not admit of this being done. Section 256 of the Indian Succession Act requires a bond to be given in every case, but in such form as the Judge shall from time to time by any general or special order direct. It is only open to the Court to make a special order as to the form of the bond.

In England an administration bond is also required to be given in all cases, and the bond in the case of a limited or special administration provides that the administrator "will [409] exhibit a true and perfect inventory of the said estate and effects limited as aforesaid and render a just and true account thereof whenever required by law so to do." Coote, p. 663. This form may, it seems to me, be adopted in the present case, and I direct that this may be done.

Parties—Co-contractors—Right of some of several co-contractors to sue alone—Refusal to join in the suit as plaintiff, Effect of.

Where two parties contract with a third party, a suit by one of them making the other a co-defendant ought not to be dismissed, merely because the plaintiff has not proved that the co-defendant had refused to join as a co-plaintiff.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by O'KINEALY and GUPTA, JJ., on the 30th June 1898. The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows :—

The question raised in this reference is that where two parties contract with a third party, can a suit by one of the two, making the other a co-defendant, be dismissed under our procedure, because the plaintiff had not proved that the co-defendant had refused to join as plaintiff.

This very point was raised in the case of Tarini Kant Lahiri v. Nund Kishore Patronovis, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 588, and with reference to it the Judge said : " It may be that the proper course would be to ask him to join as a plaintiff, but it is a matter of perfect indifference to the substantial defendant whether the co-sharer is joined as a plaintiff, or joined as a defendant. The tenant is concerned to have all [410] parties interested in the rent made parties to the suit, so that he may not be liable in a subsequent suit for rent. If the third defendant were to complain that he has been made a defendant without being asked to join as a plaintiff, there might have been ground of complaint, and the mistake might be undone by amending the plaint, or it might be a ground for giving him his costs, but it is not a ground for dismissing the suit at all."

This decision was followed by another Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Bissesswar Roy Chowdhry v. Brojo Kant Roy Chowdhry, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 221.

In the case of Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosunna Roy, (1889) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 160, a Divisional Bench of this Court, on the authority of Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co., (1879) L.R., 11 Ch.D., 121, decided that some of the parties interested as plaintiffs cannot sue alone unless the co-sharers have refused to join or have otherwise acted prejudicially to the plaintiffs, and the suit was dismissed on this ground. That case was followed in the case of Soshee Shekhareswar Roy v. Giris Chandra Lahiri, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 659.

It must be borne in mind that under our Code no person can be made a plaintiff without his consent. In England this consent must be given in writing ; so that the rules point to consent and not to refusal. Under section 32, the Court has the greatest powers for transferring parties, and under section

* Reference to the Full Bench in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1469 of 1896.

34 all objections in regard to parties must be taken at the earliest opportunity, or else they are regarded as waived. In all these points the rules of our Court conform more or less to the rules of the Supreme Court in England, and their dismissal for want of a co-plaintiff is unknown. See Roberts v. Holland, (1893) L. R., 1 Q. B., 665 (669).

We, therefore, refer this second appeal to a Full Bench for disposal.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, Babu Gyanendra Nath Bose, and Babu Biraj Mohun Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

[411] Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty—It is not necessary for the plaintiff to make out that the co-contractor refused to join. In this case the co-contractor was made a defendant, and if she liked, she could have got herself added as a plaintiff—see the cases of Tarini Kant Lahiri v. Nund Kishore Patronovis, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 588; and Bissesswar Roy Chowdhry v. Brojo Kant Roy Chowdhry, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 221. The case of Soshee Shekhareswar Roy v. Giris Chander Lahiri, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 659, was not correctly decided. The case of Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosunna Roy, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 160, is distinguishable, and that was not a rent suit. A suit ought not to be dismissed if the plaintiff does not make out a refusal: see Roberts v. Holland, (1893) L. R., 1 Q. B., 665; Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Giridhar Dutt, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 755; Chuni Singh v. Hera Mahto, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 633; and Guni Mahomed v. Moran, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 96.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Respondents.—The principle laid down in Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosunna Roy, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 160, is correct: see also Indian Contract Act, section 45. One of the several joint promisees can sue alone only when some special circumstance is shewn—see Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co., (1879) L. R., 11 Ch., D., 121. The rule in India has always been the same. See Ramsebuk v. Ram Lal Koondoo, (1881) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 815 (822); Jagadamba Das v. Haran Chandra Dutt, (1868) 6 B. L. R., 526 note: 10 W. R., 108; Uma Sundari Das v. Ramji Haldar, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 242; Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhry, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 760; Bindu Bashini Das v. Peari Mohun Bose, (1891) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 107; and Jagdeo Sing v. Pudarath Ahir, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 285 (289). Having reference to [412] section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the suit is also not maintainable—See the case of Baidya Nath De v. Ilum, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 917.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty in reply.

The opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by MACLEAN, C. J., (PRINSEP, O'KINEALY, BANERJEE and HILL, JJ., concurring).

Maolean, C. J.—The question raised on this reference is whether, where two parties contract with a third party, a suit by one of them, making the other a co-defendant, ought to be dismissed because the plaintiff has not proved that the co-defendant had refused to join as co-plaintiff. Upon this question, there is some diversity of opinion in the decisions of this Court. In the case of Tarini Kant Lahiri v. Nund Kishore Patronovis, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 588, it was held that such non-joinder was not sufficient ground to justify the dismissal of the suit, and that view has been given effect to by another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Bissesswar Roy Chowdhry v. Brojo Kant Roy Chowdhry, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 221. It has been considered that the opposite view was taken by another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosunna Roy, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 160, and in the case of Soshee Shekhareswar Roy v. Giris Chandra Lahiri, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 659. The case of Dwarka Nath Mitter v. Tara Prosunna Roy, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 160, was a case of an exceptional nature, and upon a minute examination of its facts, it is at least questionable whether it intended to lay down any such general proposition as that for which it has been cited as an authority governing the present case. As a general rule all co-contractors ought to be joined as plaintiffs, but at the same time where, as here, there are three co-contractors, say three co-sharers, two of them co-plaintiffs, and the other a co-defendant (being all the parties interested under the contract), the suit ought not in my opinion to be dismissed simply because it has not been shown that the co-sharer defendant has refused to join as a co-plaintiff. If so, in each such [413] case there would have to be a preliminary issue as to such refusal, and the inconvenience of that is shown by the proceedings in the present case, where one Judge has decided there was such refusal, and another Judge has decided the very opposite. In cases of this class the defendant—the active defendant, not the co-sharer defendant—should, as soon as the trial is commenced, direct the Court's attention to the supposed non-joinder; the Court would then call upon the defendant co-sharer to say whether he was willing to be a co-plaintiff: if he say "yes," he can then be shifted from the ranks of the defendants to the side of the plaintiffs and be made a co-plaintiff; and if, as the result of that shifting, the active defendant satisfy the Court that he ought to have an opportunity of considering the new position, the Court can adjourn the trial, upon such terms as to payment of any costs thrown away, as it may deem just: but if the co-sharer defendant decline to be made a co-plaintiff then the trial can proceed with him as a co-defendant. I certainly do not think the suit ought to be dismissed, simply by reason of such non-joinder when at any rate, all the parties interested are before the Court, which has ample power to do what I have said under section 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In order to avoid the throwing away of costs, and to ensure the saving of time, an objection as to non-joinder ought to be taken in the written statement, and when so taken the plaintiff should use his best endeavours to get the other co-sharer to join, and if successful, apply at once to have him joined as a co-plaintiff, and if unsuccessful, he would then be in a better position to satisfy the Court, when the objection is raised at the trial, that he has done his best to have him made a co-plaintiff.

We are asked, however, what is to happen if the co-sharer defendant be not represented, or present, at the trial? I think the answer is simple. His absence would indicate that he took no real interest in the dispute, and would raise a strong inference that he did not wish to be made a co-plaintiff, in which case the trial could proceed with him as a co-defendant.

As regards the other question whether the point in relation to section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been decided by the Lower Appellate Court, looking at the first judgment of [414] the Subordinate Judge, it is so very doubtful, that in my opinion that question ought to be regarded as still open, and as one to be dealt with on the remand.

The case must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge, and the costs will abide the result.

Prinsep, J.—I agree in the judgment which has just been delivered.

O'Kinealy, J.—I agree.

Banerjee, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in the view taken by him in this case.

Hill, J.—I also agree.

Their Lordships are not impressed by this argument. The filing of a suit is not a thing which the landlord is, under the Act, required or authorised to do. It is an application to the Court for relief against an alleged grievance, which the plaintiff is entitled to submit, not by reason of any provision of the Tenancy Act, but under the general law."]

Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), sections 2 and 7—Bengal Act VII of 1868, section 8—Certificate of Sale—Evidence of sufficiency of service of notice—Act XI of 1859, s. 28.

Section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 does not apply to a certificate of title granted to a purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate issued under section 7 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, for arrears of rent alleged to be due to an estate under the Court of Wards, but it is limited in its application to the two descriptions of certificates of title therein referred to, namely, certificates granted under section 28 of Act XI of 1859, and those granted under section 11 of Bengal Act VII of 1868.

Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and Bhola Nath Maity v. Mohinuddin Mahomed, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350 note, approved.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by BANERJEE and [415] PRATT, J.J., on the 8th July 1898. The reference was in the following terms:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for cancellation of a certificate under Bengal Act VII of 1880, made on the 2nd of April 1890, in favour of defendant No. 1, and of a sale in execution of the certificate at which certain immoveable property of the plaintiff was purchased by defendant No. 2, and for confirmation of the plaintiff's possession of such property. The material allegations of the plaintiff are that the certificate is invalid, because the arrears of rent in respect of which it was made were not really due, the party in whose favour it was made was not in separate receipt of rent of the tenure in question, and the officer by whom it was signed was not the Collector of the District; that no notice of such certificate was issued; that the plaintiff was kept out of knowledge of the certificate and of the proceeding, and sale in execution thereof by the fraud of defendant No. 2; and that the plaintiff came to know of the sale on the 29th of July.

The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation; that the suit was not maintainable as the plaintiff did not proceed in accordance with section 8 (b) of Bengal Act VII of 1880; and that the certificate and the sale in execution thereof were valid and not tainted with fraud.

* Reference to the Full Bench in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 335 of 1897,

The Courts below have found for the plaintiff and decreed the suit. In second appeal it is contended for the defendant No. 2, first, that the suit is barred by limitation; and, secondly, that the suit is not maintainable as the plaintiff did not proceed according to section 8, clause (b) of Bengal Act VII of 1880.

In support of the first contention, it is urged that as the sale was confirmed on the 28th of May 1894 and the suit was instituted on the 29th of July 1895, that is, after more than one year, the time allowed by article 12, clause (b) of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, which governs the case, the suit is barred by limitation, and that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in excluding the time during which the plaintiff's appeal to the Commissioner was pending, the [416] said appeal having failed not "from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature" within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act, and the deduction of time allowed by that section being claimable only in favour of a proceeding resorted to by the plaintiff under a bond fide mistake of fact, and not in favour of one resorted to under a mistake of law even though bond fide. On the other hand, it is contended for the plaintiff-respondent, that the plaintiff is not only entitled to the deduction of time allowed by the Lower Appellate Court under section 14 of the Limitation Act, but is further entitled under section 18 of that Act to reckon time from the 29th of July 1894, the date on which he became aware of the fraud of the defendants by which, as found by the first Court, he had been kept out of the knowledge of the sale now sought to be set aside.

If the finding of the first Court on the question of fraud had been affirmed by the Lower Appellate Court, the plea of limitation would no doubt have been completely met. But the Lower Appellate Court has based its decision upon the question of limitation on the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act, without adverting to those of section 18 or affirming the finding of the first Court on the question of fraud. So that if that decision is incorrect, and if the suit does not fail on the ground involved in the second contention of the appellant, it will be necessary to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court, in order that it may determine whether section 18 of the Limitation Act does not save the suit from being barred.

Turning now to the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant upon the question of limitation, we are of opinion that the second branch of that contention, namely that the deduction of time under section 14 of the Limitation Act is not available for a party who resorted to the previous infructuous proceeding under a mistake of law though bond fide, is not sound. There is nothing in the language of the section to warrant this view, and we think it would be unreasonable to restrict its operation in the manner contended for [417] seeing that a bond fide mistake of law upon a doubtful point of jurisdiction or procedure is as much entitled to the benefit of the section as a bond fide mistake of fact. As for the case of Ramjiwan Mal v. Chando Mal, (1888) I.L.R., 10 All., 587, cited for the appellant, it is sufficient to say that it has been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Brij Mohan Das v. Mannu Bibi, (1897) I. L. R., 19 All., 348. Nor do we think that the mere fact of the Commissioner having rejected the appeal on the ground of limitation is sufficient to disentitle the plaintiff to the deduction of the time during which that appeal was pending, if, in the opinion of the Court which has to determine the question whether this suit is barred by limitation, that appeal was not really out of time, but failed "from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature" within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act. But in this case the appeal to the Commissioner was clearly out of time as well under section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 as under section 16 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, the only provisions of the law under which such an appeal could lie; and though under section 5 of the Limitation Act, the appeal could be admitted for sufficient cause though out of time, it was for the Court to which the appeal was made to say whether there was any sufficient cause for admitting it. As no such sufficient cause was shown before the Commissioner, the appeal to him must be taken to have been barred by limitation, and it, therefore, failed for a reason other than "defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature" within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act.

The ground upon which the Lower Appellate Court has overruled the plea of limitation is therefore not sound, and if the suit is not open to the objection raised in the second contention of the appellant, it will be necessary to remand the case to the Court of Appeal below to determine whether the plaintiff is, as has in effect been held by the first Court, entitled to reckon time under section 18 of the Limitation Act from the date when he became aware of the sale of which he had been kept out of knowledge by the fraud of the defendant No. 2.

[418] This brings us to the consideration of the second contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant. It is argued that a suit like the present for cancellation of a certificate under Bengal Act VII of 1880 can be entertained only if the preliminary step required by section 8, clause (b) of the Act, has been taken, or good cause is shown why it was not taken; and as this has not been done, the suit is not maintainable. The first Court in its judgment on the 4th issue which raised this point has found that no notice (that is notice under section 10 of the Act) was served, nor was any sale proclamation published, and so the plaintiff was not bound to proceed under section 12 as required by section 8, clause (b) of the Act, and he was not debarred from maintaining the suit; and the correctness of that finding of the first Court was not questioned in the Lower Appellate Court, nor was it questioned before us. And if that finding be correct, the conclusion based upon it, namely, that the plaintiff was not bound to proceed under section 12 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 and was not debarred from maintaining this suit, must also be correct—See Saroda Charan Bandopadhyaya v. Kisto Mohun Bhattacharjee, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 516. But the learned Vakil for the appellant argued that, as a certificate of sale had been granted to the auction-purchaser, defendant No. 2, it was under section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, which is by section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 to be construed as one with the last mentioned Act, conclusive evidence that all necessary notices have been duly served, and that it was not open to the Courts below to inquire whether the notice in question was served or not; and in support of this argument the case of Rajon Kanto Roy v. Champa Dasi, (1898) 2 C. W. N., (S. N.) celi, is cited. That case no doubt supports the contention for the appellant, but it is opposed to two earlier cases, not referred to in it, namely, Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350; and Bhola Nath Marti v. Mohinuddin Mahomud, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350 (note); and we must, therefore, refer the matter to a Full Bench. We should add that our own opinion is in favour [419] of the view taken in the two earlier cases, for the reasons given in those cases.

The question for the determination of which this case is referred to a Full Bench is, whether section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 applies to a certificate of title granted to a purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate issued under section 7 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 for arrears of rent alleged to be due to an estate under the Court of Wards, or whether it is limited in its application to the two descriptions of certificates of title therein referred to, namely, certificates granted under section 28 of Act XI of 1859, and those granted under section 11 of Bengal Act VII of 1868.

As the question arises in a second appeal, according to the rules relating to Full Bench references, the whole case must be referred for decision to a Full Bench.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, Babu Jnanendra Nath Bose, and Babu Biraj Mohun Mazoomdar, for the Appellant.

Babu Shyma Prosunna Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee.—The question is whether section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 applies to a certificate of title issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880; in other words what is the meaning of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880? Practically, therefore, the question is, under what section is the certificate granted—whether it is under section 28 of Act XI of 1859, read with section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, or under section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure? It is clear from the language of section 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 that section 316 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply. I, therefore, submit that the certificate in question, which on the face of it purports to have been granted under section 28 of Act XI of 1859, was rightly granted. Section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 incorporates Act XI of 1859 and Bengal Act VII of 1880 and Bengal Act VII of 1868 into one Code. The case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal, (1886) I.L.R., 14 Cal., 1, shows that sections 311 and 312 of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to sales under a certificate issued under Bengal Act VII of 1880; from this it would follow that section 316 of the Code also will not [420] apply. See also the case of Monindra Nath Mookerji v. Saraswati Dasi, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 125. It has no doubt been recently held in the cases of Mohibul Huq v. Shew Sahay Singh, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 85, and Mahomed Abdul Hye v. Gajraj Sahai, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 283, that sections 33 and 34 of Act XI of 1859 are not applicable to sales under Bengal Act VII of 1880, but the terms of those sections are quite different from those of section 28 of Act XI of 1859. There is nothing in the terms of section 28 of Act XI of 1859 which would contradict the view that it is applicable to sales under Bengal Act VII of 1880. The case of Rajoni Kanta Roy v. Champa Dasi, (1898) 2 C. W. N., (S.N.) celi, supports my contention.

Babu Shyma Prosunna Mazumdar for the Respondents.—Section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 enacts a provision of a stringent character, and the scope of the section ought not to be extended beyond what has been expressly mentioned by the Legislature. The heading of the certificate in this case may show that it was granted under section 28 of Act XI of 1859, but that cannot be conclusive. The body of it is substantially in the form prescribed under section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not in the form prescribed under Schedule A of Act XI of 1859. Then there is a vital distinction. In the case of a certificate under Act XI of 1859 the title of the purchaser accrues from the date fixed for the last day of payment, whereas in this case the title purports to accrue from the day of the confirmation of the sale. It was never intended by the Legislature that Act XI of 1859, Bengal Act VII of 1868, and Bengal Act VII of 1880, should be read together as one Act. The qualifying words in section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 “so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof,” are important and ought not to be lost sight of. Section 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 makes the notice imperative. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe in the case of Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 775: L. R., 23 I. A., 45, that the forms required by the Act are matters of substance. See also the cases of Saroda Charan Bandopadhyaya v. Kisto Mohun Bhattacharjee, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 516; Uzir Ali v. [421] Kartick, (1897) 2 C. W. N., 363. As for the three Acts being read together as one, see the remarks of PIGOT and RAMPINI, JJ., in the case of Gujraj Sahai v. The Secretary of State for India, (1899) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 414. The policies of the two sets of Acts are different. The notice under section 10 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is to be issued in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code; see Rakhal Chandra Rai Chowdhuri v. The Secretary of State for India, (1886) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 603, whereas in Act XI of 1859, or Bengal Act VII of 1868, notices and other processes are required to be served in accordance with the special provisions contained therein. The cases of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and Bhola Nath Maiti v. Mohinuddin Mahomed, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, note, are rightly decided. The case of Rajoni Kanta Roy v. Champa Das, (1898) 2 C. W. N., (S. N.) ccli., cannot be regarded as an authority, inasmuch as it loses sight of the important saving clause in section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, and also because it does not notice the previous cases. The case of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 1, proceeds upon a different principle. The remarks of PETHERAM, C.J., in the case of Monindra Nath Mookerji v. Saraswati Das, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 125, would show that a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1880 would require to be confirmed under section 314 of the Civil Procedure Code. The case of Mahomed Abdul Hye v. Gajraj Sahai, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 283, and the case of Mahibul Huq v. Shew Sahay Singh, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 85, cited by the other side support my contention.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee in reply.

The following judgments were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Maclean, C. J.—In this case I agree with the view expressed by the two referring Judges, which is in accord with [422] that expressed in the two cases of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and Bhola Nath Maiti v. Mohinuddin Mahomed, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, note. Agreeing as I do with the reasons upon which those decisions are based, no useful object will be attained by my merely repeating them. The question then must be answered in the negative, and the case must be remanded, as is suggested in the reference, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the case is brought within section 18* of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877.

The costs will abide the results of the re-trial.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion. The difficulty in this case has arisen from the attempt to consolidate, by reading as one Act, three different Acts of a different character, and passed after some interval of time, relating to the recovery of public demands. To provide against any possible confusion that may arise from such circumstances the words "so far as is consistent with the tenor" of the Acts specified in section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, have been used in that section; and accordingly it has now fallen upon us to decide what is the real meaning and effect of section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, as applied to proceedings taken under the Act of 1880. The conclusion that I have arrived at, after giving full consideration to the matter, is that the terms

* [Sec. 18 :—When any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, or,

(b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby, or, in the case of the concealed document, when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production.]

of section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, must be limited to sales held in respect of arrears of public revenue provided for by Act XI of 1859, and to none other, and that it does not apply to sales held to realize public demands under section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1880.

O'Kinealy, J.—I agree with the decision in the case of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and think that the certificate in this case is not one under section 28 of Act XI of 1859.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question for the determination of which this case has been referred to a Full Bench is, "whether section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 applies [423] to a certificate of title granted to a purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate issued under section 7 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, for arrears of rent alleged to be due to an estate under the Court of Wards, or whether it is limited in its application to the two descriptions of certificates of title therein referred to, namely, certificates granted under section 28 of Act XI of 1859 and those granted under section 11 of Bengal Act VII of 1868."

Upon that question, besides certain cases which have only an indirect bearing, there are three cases having a direct bearing, namely, the cases of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and Bhola Nath Maht v. Mohinuddin Mahomed, (1894) I.L.R., 21 Cal., 350, note, referred to, and the case of Rajoni Kanta Roy v. Champa Das, (1898) 2 C. W. N., (S. N.) colli. Of those, the first two affirm the view indicated in the latter alternative of the question, while the last mentioned case answers the former alternative in the affirmative; and the question is, which of these two views is correct.

I am of opinion that the view taken in the two first mentioned cases is correct. Section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 enacts that "Every certificate of title which may be given to any purchaser under the provisions of section 28 of the said Act XI of 1859, or of section 11 of this Act, shall be conclusive evidence in favour of such purchaser and of every person claiming under him, that all notices in or by this Act or by the said Act XI of 1859 required to be served or posted, have been duly served and posted." This being then, "an enactment" to use the language of ERLE, C.J., in the case of Nothard v. Pepper, (1864) 17 C. B. N. S., 39 (50), altering the law as to evidence and creating statutory evidence whereby the rights of parties may be defeated "must be construed strictly, and the plain language of the section would limit its application to the two descriptions of certificates therein expressly mentioned. But then it is contended that though section 8, standing alone, might bear that construction, yet the effect of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, under which the sale in question was held, would be to make section 8 of the Act of 1868 applicable to this case. In support of this contention certain [424] cases have been referred to as showing, in the first place, that section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the only other provision of law under which the certificate in question could possibly be held, regard being had to section 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, to have been granted, is inapplicable to this case; and as showing further, that certain sections of Act XI of 1859 and of Bengal Act VII of 1868, namely, section 27 of the former and section 2 of the latter, have, notwithstanding that they are not in terms applicable to such cases, been held to be applicable to sales under Bengal Act VII of 1880. And it is argued that, if that is so, there is no reason why section 28 of Act XI of 1859 should not be held applicable to this case, and the certificate of sale in question should not be held to have been granted under that section and to come within the scope of section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868.

With reference to the first branch of this contention, I do not think that there is any good reason for holding that section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure is inapplicable to this case, and that the certificate of sale in question could not have been granted under that section.

Section 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 says that a certificate of public demand may be enforced and executed by all or any of the ways and means mentioned and provided in and by the Code of Civil Procedure for the enforcement and execution of decrees for money, and all the practice and procedure provided by the said Code of Civil Procedure in respect of sales in execution of decrees and in respect of certain other matters specifically mentioned, shall apply to every execution issued to enforce such certificate. That would make the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for the granting of a certificate of sale applicable. But then it is said that that view is opposed to the decision of this Court in the cases of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 1; and Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawan Ojha, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 9. I do not think that that view is opposed to those two decisions. It is true that, in both those cases section 312 of the Code of [425] Civil Procedure, in so far as it relates to a suit or an application for setting aside a sale, has been held to be inapplicable to a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act VII of 1880), but that does not go to show that the granting of a certificate of sale to the auction-purchaser could not have been under the Code of Civil Procedure. The passage in the judgment in the earlier of the two cases cited upon which reliance was placed is that in which the learned Judges say: "But it seems to us that the words in respect of sales in execution of decrees do not include any proceedings instituted after the sale for setting it aside." Though that may be so, it does not follow that the procedure for a sale in execution, down to its completion by the grant of a sale certificate, would be inapplicable to a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1880. The learned Judges do not say that the words of section 19 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 do not include "any proceedings instituted after the sale," but they are careful to qualify the words "proceedings instituted after the sale" by the words "for setting it aside." There is, in my opinion, a real distinction between the proceedings leading to the sale and to its completion by the grant of a certificate of sale to the auction-purchaser, and separate and antagonistic, though simultaneous, proceedings instituted by a judgment-debtor or by a decree-holder or by a third party to have the sale set aside; and it was in regard to these latter proceedings that it was held in the case relied upon, that the Code of Civil Procedure was inapplicable to a sale under Bengal Act VII of 1880, and that the proper procedure is to be found in other enactments.

The second case relied upon merely follows the case to which reference has just been made. In my opinion, therefore, there is no real conflict between the view taken in the case of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and the two cases of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 1, and Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawan Ojha, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 9.

I may add that even if section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not applicable to the present case, still it would [426] not follow that a certificate granted to an auction-purchaser at a sale held under Bengal Act VII of 1880 comes within the scope of either section 28 of Act XI of 1859, or section 11 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, which is the position which the appellant must make out before the irrebuttable presumption under section 8 of Bengal Act VII of 1868 can be raised in his favour. Now it is conceded, as it must be, that the certificate of sale in question cannot come within the scope of section 11 of Bengal Act VII of 1868. It must, therefore, be shown to come under section 28 of Act XI of 1859 before the presumption just referred to can arise.

This brings me to the consideration of the latter branch of the contention, namely, that as certain other provisions of Act XI of 1859 and Bengal Act VII of 1868 have, by virtue of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, been held to be applicable to sales under this last mentioned enactment, section 28 of Act XI of 1859 should, for the same reason, be held to be applicable to this latter class of sales. The cases which have been relied upon are the two cases of Sadhu Saran Singh v. Panchdeo Lal, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 1, and Ram Logan Ojha v. Bhawani Ojha, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 9, just referred to, and the case of Monindra Nath Mookerji v. Saraswati Dasi, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 125, in which it was held that section 27 of Act XI of 1859 was applicable to a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1880. But because certain sections of the earlier enactments have, by virtue of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880, been held to be applicable to sales under the latter enactment, it does not follow that the section we are now dealing with, namely, section 28 of Act XI of 1859, should be held to be similarly applicable. Whether it is so applicable or not would depend upon the language of the section, and its consistency with the tenor of the enactment to which it is sought to be made applicable. Now referring to section 28 of Act XI of 1859, I find it extremely difficult to hold that the effect of section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 is to make it applicable to a sale under the latter enactment. Section 28 provides that immediately upon a sale becoming final and conclusive, the Collector or [427] other officer shall give to the purchaser a certificate of title in the form prescribed in Schedule A annexed to the Act, and the form given in the schedule shows that it is intended to apply only to a sale for arrears of public revenue, and not to a sale for any other demand recoverable under any other Act.

Can it, then, be said that merely because Bengal Act VII of 1880 is by section 2 of that Act to be construed as one with Act XI of 1859, a sale of the kind to which the form of certificate referred to in section 28 of Act XI of 1859 can have no application, must, nevertheless, be held to be a sale to which that section applies. I think this question must be answered in the negative.

I may observe that section 2 of Bengal Act VII of 1880 has been held not to have the effect of making sections 33 and 34 of Act XI of 1859 applicable to sales in execution of certificates for recovery of public demands, and that section 2 of Bengal Act I of 1895, the present Public Demands Recovery Act, does not embody the rule of construction contained in section 2 of the former Act. See Mohibul Huq v. Shew Sahay Singh, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 85, and Mahomed Abdul Hye v. Gajraj Sahay, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 283.

For these reasons and the reasons given in the referring order, I think that the contention of the appellant upon the question referred to us must fail, and the case must be remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for a decision upon the question of fraud.

Hill, J.—I am of the same opinion, and all that I wish to say is that I have heard nothing here to-day to induce me to alter the opinion on either of the points raised, which I expressed in the case of Pulin Chandra Roy v. Akbar Hossein, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 350, and that I adhere to it.

Res Judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), Section 13—Suit for rent—Suit for establishment of title.

A decision in a suit for rent brought by a plaintiff against a person who is alleged to have been his tenant in respect of certain land, does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought by the same plaintiff for establishment of his title to the land, not only against the alleged tenant but also against the person whose title as landlord the tenant defendant had set up in the rent suit.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ., on the 11th January 1899, with the following OPINION:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant, to obtain a declaration that the plaintiff had a mohatran and karmi njara right to the land in suit, and that the defendant No. 1 was a kursa ryot under him, and to recover khas possession upon ejectment of the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff stated in his plaint that he had previously brought a suit for rent against the defendant No. 1; that the defendant No. 1 in that suit denied the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between him and the plaintiff, and alleged that a third party, who was made a defendant in this suit, was his real landlord; and that the rent suit having been dismissed the plaintiff brought the present suit.

The defence raised various points, of which it is necessary to notice only one for the purposes of this appeal, namely, that the suit was barred under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The First Court overruled the objection of the defendant that the suit was barred as res judicata, and on the merits it found for the plaintiff, and accordingly a decree was made in favour of [429] the plaintiff, declaring his right to the land in dispute. And as the plaintiff did not press for khas possession, a further declaration was given in favour of the plaintiff that he was entitled to recover rent from the defendant No. 1 at the rate of Rs. 6 a year.

* Reference to the Full Bench in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 217 of 1897.

On appeal by the defendant the decree of the First Court has been reversed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed on the ground that it was barred as res judicata by reason of the decision in the rent suit brought by the plaintiff against the defendant No. 1.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff appellant, that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong, and that the judgment in the rent suit cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit for two reasons, first, because the question which directly arises in this suit, namely, the question of the plaintiff's title to the land in dispute, was not raised in the former suit, and could arise, if at all, only incidently in that suit, and secondly, because the former suit was not one between the same parties as those in the present suit, the alleged landlord whose title the tenant defendant set up in the previous suit being a party to the present suit, but not having been made a defendant in the previous suit.

No doubt the case of Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 38, which is referred to in the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court, is in favour of the defendant. But with all respect for the learned Judges who decided that case we are unable to assent to the view taken by them. We are of opinion that the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is correct, and that the decision in the rent suit cannot operate as res judicata in the present suit.

The learned Vakil for the respondent argued that quite apart from the case of Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 38, the present suit had been rightly held by the Lower Appellate Court to be barred as res judicata, because the prayer for ejectment having been abandoned by the plaintiff in the First Court, the only question that remained to be decided as between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 1 was whether the plaintiff [430] was entitled to claim any rent from the defendant No. 1 as his tenant, and upon that question the decision of the former suit must be held to operate as res judicata. We do not, however, consider the argument sound. The only question that arose for determination in the previous rent suit was whether the relation of landlord and tenant subsisted between the parties to that suit during the period for which rent was then claimed, and the question which arises for determination in the present suit, after the abandonment of the claim for ejectment, is whether the land in dispute belongs to the plaintiff, and whether if it is found in the presence of the defendants other than the tenant defendants, who are the only persons whose title was set up by the latter, that the land belongs to the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim rent from the tenant defendants. This question is clearly different from the question which arose in the former suit. If, therefore, the case of Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar, (1882) 12 C.L.R., 38, had not stood in the way, we should not have felt any hesitation in deciding the question of res judicata in favour of the plaintiff; but as the case just referred to is in point, and as we are unable to assent to the view taken in that case, we must refer for the decision of a Full Bench the question whether a decision in a suit for rent brought by a plaintiff against a person who is alleged to have been his tenant in respect of certain land, operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit brought by the same plaintiff for establishment of his title to the land, not only against the tenant but also against the person whose title as landlord the tenant defendant had set up in the rent suit. And as this question arises in a second appeal the whole case must be referred to a Full Bench.

We may add that this question was on a previous occasion referred to a Full Bench, but it became unnecessary for the Full Bench to decide the question by reason of the action taken by the parties. The case we refer to is that of Alimuddin Biswas v. Kafiluddi, (1898) 2 C. W. N. (s.n.) clvii.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh and Babu Mohendra Kumar Mitter for the Respondents.

[431] The Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., PRINSEP, O'KINEALY, BANERJEE, and HILL, J.J.) delivered the following judgments:—

Maclean, C.J.—The question submitted to us ought to be answered in the negative. The issue determined in the previous suit (a rent-suit) was, whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed at the time when that suit was instituted between the present plaintiff and the then defendant, and whether the then defendant was liable for the amount then claimed as rent for a certain period. That issue was decided against the present plaintiff, and as it is conceded that nothing has occurred in the interval to change the position of the parties, that question must be treated as res judicata as against the plaintiff, and in the defendants' favour. But the relief sought in the present suit is absolutely different from the relief sought in the previous suit. The present issue is, whether the land in dispute belongs to the plaintiff, and, if so, whether the plaintiff is entitled to compensation from the tenant defendant for the use of the land. That is put clearly in the reference, and I agree with the view expressed by the referring Judges, that, having regard to the nature of the relief sought in the previous suit, and the relief sought in the present suit, it is impossible to say that the plaintiff is barred in this suit from establishing his title to the land both against the alleged tenant and also against the person whose title as landlord the tenant defendant had set up in the rent-suit.

I do not propose to refer to the case of Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 38, because it has not been relied on by the learned Vakil who argued the respondents' case.

The appeal must be allowed, and the case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for trial on the merits, and the costs both of the hearing before the Division Bench and of this reference must abide the result.

Prinsep, J.—The question referred for our decision is, whether the proceedings in the former suit are a bar to the present suit by reason of section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the former suit, the present plaintiff sued the tenant defendant for arrears of rent, claiming that the defendant was his tenant. [432] The defendant pleaded that he was not the plaintiff's tenant, but the tenant of a third party who was entitled to the land. That suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has now again sued the defendant tenant, joining with him the person who was in the former suit set up as the defendant's landlord, and he has asked for a decree declaring his title to the land with consequential relief in somewhat complicated terms. First of all, he has asked for consequential relief by ejectment of the defendant tenant who disputed his title in the former suit, and he has also asked for alternative relief in the shape of rent from the defendant. In the course of the suit it would seem that his legal advisers, on his behalf, withdrew the claim for ejectment, and, therefore, by his suit, as it is now presented to us, the plaintiff is seeking for a declaration of his title to the land and for the recovery of rent from the defendant tenant who had successfully disputed his right to receive rent from him in the former suit.

At first sight, it would seem that this claim is barred, inasmuch as it was made the subject of the previous suit and was adjudicated upon, for it is not stated that at any time since the decision in the former suit fresh relations of landlord and tenant have been created between the parties so as to prevent the findings in that suit being applied to them now. But the suit, so far as the adjudication of the plaintiff's title is concerned, cannot, as I understand the law, be considered as res judicata in the present proceedings, inasmuch as the parties are not the same, the plaintiff having, in this case, joined with the tenant defendant who disputed his title, the person under whom that tenant professed to hold, and his object in bringing this suit is to remove the cloud which was cast upon his title by the former proceedings, and he could not effectually do so except by making, as his adversary in this suit, the person who professes to hold the title as against him. Ordinarily, he would not be entitled to consequential relief in the form of a decree for rent, because it had already been decided in the former suit between him and the tenant that he was not entitled to such rent. We have, however, to apply the terms of section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, under that section, the plaintiff can, in my opinion, obtain a [433] decree in the form which he seeks. Section 157 enables the plaintiff in a suit for the ejectment of a trespasser, such as the present suit, to ask instead of his ejectment, that the trespasser or the person whom he seeks to eject may be declared liable to pay, for the land in his possession, a fair and equitable rent to be determined by the Court, and that, as I understand, is the form which the suit now before us has assumed.

It seems to me, therefore, that the present suit is not barred, and that the plaintiff, if he establishes his right, can obtain a decree in this form.

O'Kinealy, J.—I agree with the opinion expressed by the learned Chief Justice. In 1885, the plaintiff brought a suit for rent against the defendant No. 1, and in that suit, it was decided on issue raised, by a Court of competent jurisdiction, that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist. That, I think, was res judicata that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between these parties in 1885, but I agree in considering that that would not dispose of the matter, for on the day after that decree, the plaintiff could have brought an action in ejectment and have succeeded if he could have made out his title to the property and that the cause of action was not barred. He can do the same now, and if the pleadings be read as constituting an action in ejectment, the suit is good, and not barred by res judicata. It has been pointed out, that if the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the action, he may, under section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, claim in the alternative a fair and equitable rent to be determined by the Court. I think, therefore, that the case must be disposed of on these lines.

It seems to me that there has been a misconception in regard to the case of Gopal Das v. Gopi Nath Sircar, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 38. In that suit Gopi Nath Sircar brought a suit against the tenant, and lost; he then brought a second suit against the same tenant and another person, who, in the first suit, was said to be the landlord, but he was made only a pro forma defendant and no relief was asked for as against him. We held, and held rightly, that when the title of the plaintiff to rent is in issue in both suits that would [434] be res judicata, and the effect of the decision is not got rid of by the plaintiff putting on the record as a party a person who is not really one.

Banerjee, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice. I have nothing to add to what he has said in his judgment and to what I have said in the order of reference, except this, that a right to claim rent may arise under section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon the establishment of the plaintiff's right to the land in dispute, notwithstanding that his right to receive rent from the first defendant was found to be not established in the previous suit for arrears of rent, and that the judgment in the previous rent-suit cannot therefore operate as res judicata, not only as against the claim for establishment of title and recovery of possession, but also as against the claim for rent under present circumstances.

HILL, J.—I also agree with the learned Chief Justice. It appears to me that so far from its being sought in the present suit to re-open an issue already tried and determined by a competent Court, the former finding has been assumed by the plaintiff in this suit to be correct, and has been made the foundation of the relief which he now seeks.

Partition—Estates' Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876), sections 112 and 128—Incumbrance created by a co-sharer before partition—Effect of partition by Collector, where the land so incumbered fell exclusively into the share of another co-sharer.

[435] On partition by the Collector under the Estates' Partition Act (Bengal Act VIII of 1876) when any land of an undivided joint estate, which was incumbered by any co-sharer, is allotted to any other co-sharer, the latter takes it free from the incumbrance so created.

Khan Ali v. Pestonji Eduljee, (1896) 1 C. W. N., 62, distinguished.

The cases of Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. Saadat Lall, (1864) Sp. Vol. W. R., 271, and Ahmedoolah v. Ashruff Hossein, (1870) 13 W. R., 447; 8 B. L. R., Ap. 73 note, have been overruled in effect by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Bijnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdry, (1873) L. R., 1 I. A., 106.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff to recover khas possession of a share in certain plots of land after ejectment of defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the lands in dispute appertained to mehals Nos. 1285 and 402, which were jointly held by him and the defendants Nos. 6 and 7; that the defendant No. 7, the proprietor of mehal No. 402, had an eight annas share, and the plaintiff and defendant No. 6, as proprietor of mehal No. 1285, had a four annas share each, in the disputed lands; that there was a partition of the two estates by the Collector by which the disputed lands were allotted to defendant No. 6 and the plaintiff; and that therefore he (the plaintiff) was entitled to recover possession of the said lands from the defendants. The contending defendants 1 to 5, pleaded inter alia that the disputed lands were held by them as mirasdars under the proprietors of both estates, and therefore they were not liable to ejection, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Court of First Instance decreed the suit holding that inasmuch as by the butwara proceeding the disputed lands fell exclusively into the share of the plaintiff, he would be entitled to get them free of all incumbrances. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he reversed the decision of the first Court, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and Mr. Justice RAMPINI, sitting alone, confirmed the decision of the Lower Appellate Court. The material portion of his Lordship's judgment was as follows :—

"Now, it would seem to me that if the miras and ulsargo titles set [436] up by the defendants 1 to 5 were granted by the plaintiff as well as by defendants 6 and 7, the plaintiff is unquestionably entitled to no relief, and if I were of opinion that he is entitled to relief on the assumption that the title under which the defendants 1 to 5 hold the land was created by the defendant No. 7 alone, I would consider it necessary to remand the case for a clear finding as to who created the grant or grants in favour of the Bardhan defendants.

"But I do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to any such relief as he seeks for in this case, even supposing that the grant or grants in favour of the defendants 1 to 5 were made by the defendant No. 7 alone. In the first place, there is no express provision of the law under which, on allotment of the lands of the estates, the Bardhan defendants' lease of the disputed plots of land, which are specific plots of land, will attach to the share of the estates allotted to the defendant No. 7. If the defendant No. 7 had created in favour of the Bardhan defendants an incumbrance on his share of the estates, the case would have been very different. But in this case the Bardhan defendants hold specific plots of land, and there seems no reason, as far as they are concerned, why they should exchange their plots of land for any others. The learned pleader for the appellant relies on section 128 of the Estates' Partition Act, and on the case of Hem Chunder Ghose v. Thako Moni Debi, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 533. But section 128 of the Estates' Partition Act, as pointed out by the Munsif, does not expressly apply; for, as above observed, the defendant No. 7 did not give his share or a portion of 'it in putni or other tenure of lease.' The Munsif, therefore, falls back, as he says, on 'the equitable principle underlying it.' But I do not think the Munsif or I can make a law to suit the circumstances of this case, when the Legislature has not seen fit to do so. The case of Hem Chunder Ghose v. Thako Moni Debi, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 533, is also not to the point. That is a case in which there was a mortgage of a share of a property, and it was held that on partition the mortgage lien attached to the share allotted to the mortgagee. In that case there was no mortgage of specific plots of land, as in the case out of which the present appeal arises.

"A case much more to the point is that of Khan Ali v. Pestonji Eduljee, (1896) 1 C. W. N., 62, in which there was a lease of a particular plot of land, and it was held that 'the mode in which the lands were allotted on partition between the ascertained sharers did not affect the right to any specific property.' No doubt in that case the plaintiff was required to pay a small sum of money to his other co-sharers in respect of his having obtained a more valuable property. But it does not appear that the lease granted by his other co-sharers was taken into consideration in estimating the value of his share of [437] the property, and the decision did not proceed on this ground, but on the ground stated above.

"The cases of Nuthoo Lall Choudhry v. Saadat Lall, (1864) Sp. Vol. W. R., 271, and Ahmednollah v. Ashruff Hossain, (1870) 13 W. R., 447; B. L. R., Ap. 73 note, would also appear to be in favour of the respondents.

"It is said there is no provision of the Estates' Partition Act exactly applying to a case like this. However this may be, it is impossible for me now to interfere with the Collector's partition, and I would, I think, be doing so, if I were to grant the plaintiff the relief she asks for in this case."

The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

Babu Lal Mohun Das for the Appellant.

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J.), was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant to recover khas or direct possession of a 4 annas share in certain plots of land, after ejectment of the defendants 1 to 5 therefrom, on the allegation that the plaintiff has become entitled to the aforesaid share in the disputed lands free of all incumbrances by reason of the said lands having been allotted to her and to defendant No. 6 under a partition held by the Collector. The defence was a denial of the plaintiff's right to eject the defendants 1 to 5 and 8, who claimed to hold certain of the disputed plots of land as permanent tenure holders and the remaining plots in proprietary right.

The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal by the defendants, that decree was set aside and the suit dismissed. Against the decree of the Appellate Court dismissing her suit, the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to this Court and her second appeal having been dismissed by Mr. Justice RAMPINI, she has preferred this appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent.

The facts of the case as found by the Lower Appellate Court, so far as they are necessary to be referred to for the purposes of this appeal, are as follows :—Plaintiff and defendant [438] No. 6 are proprietors of estate No. 1285, and defendant No. 7 is proprietor of estate No. 402. Certain lands of the two estates, amongst which are included the lands now in dispute, were held jointly, the plaintiff and defendant No. 6 owning a 4 annas share each, and defendant No. 7 the remaining 8 annas share, and the defendants 1 to 5 and 8 holding the share as mirasdars : but it is not clear whether they hold under all the co-sharers or under defendant No. 7 alone. On a partition of the lands by the Collector the disputed lands were allotted to the plaintiff and defendant No. 6, so that in addition to a 4 annas share, which each of them held previously, they became entitled to another 4 annas share each ; and it is in respect of this additional 4 annas share obtained by the plaintiff that the present suit is brought.

These being the facts of the case, the question for determination in this appeal is, whether, if the miras tenure was created by defendant No. 7 alone, the plaintiff obtained the lands in dispute free from the tenure created by the defendant No. 7 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

Mr. Justice RAMPINI has answered this question in the negative and affirmed the Lower Appellate Court's decree dismissing the suit.

We are of opinion that the question should be answered in the affirmative, and the case sent back to the Lower Appellate Court to dispose of the appeal after determining the question of fact whether the tenure set up was created by all the co-sharers in the lands or by defendant No. 7 alone.

If the miras tenure was created by defendant No. 7 alone, the case might fall within the scope of section 128 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, and the tenure would hold good only as regards the land allotted to the share of defendant No. 7. But the point is not quite free from doubt. Mr. Justice RAMPINI is of opinion that that section does not apply to a case like this. One reason urged in support of this view is that section 128 applies only to a case in which "a share or a portion of a share," that is an aliquot part of a share, is let out, and that it does not apply to a case like the present in which the share of the lessor in certain definite plots [439] of land is let out. The words "portion of a share" in the section are however wide enough to include a case like the present, a co-owner's share in any definite plots of land included in a joint estate being as much a "portion of a share" as an aliquot part of a share is, though the illustrations to the Section no doubt lend support to the opposite view. Another objection to the applicability of section 128 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 was that the defendant No. 7 was not "any proprietor of an estate held in common tenancy and brought under partition," he having been the owner of estate No. 402, which had some lands in common with estate No. 1285, which was the only estate brought under partition. But the objection is sufficiently met by section 112 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876, which makes "all the provisions of the Act in respect of the allotment between the shareholders of one estate" applicable to a case like the present.

But even if section 128 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 be not applicable to this case, still we think that, according to the general principles of equity, the miras tenure in question, if it was created by defendant No. 7 alone, could not affect the lands allotted to the share of any other co-sharer upon a partition by the Collector, but could hold good only in respect of lands allotted to the lessor's share. For though defendant No. 7 had power to grant a lease of his undivided share in any joint lands, he could not by so doing affect the interest of the other sharers; and those who took the lease, took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce partition and thereby convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a portion held in severalty charged with the payment of a proportionate amount of revenue. This principle has been recognised and given effect to by the Privy Council in the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdry, (1873) L. R., 1. I. A., 106, which was a case relating to a mortgage by a co-owner of joint property. Their Lordships say:—"It is clear that the mortgagor had power to pledge his own undivided share in these villages. But it is also clear that he could not by so doing affect the interest of the other sharers in them, and that the persons who took the security, took it subject to the right of those sharers to enforce partition [440] and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty."

It might be urged that when any lands of an undivided joint estate, which are incumbered by any co sharer, are allotted to any other co-sharer, the latter should take them subject to, and not free from, the incumbrance, the incumbered condition of such lands being taken into account in the allotment of lands to the different shareholders. That might be so in the case of a private partition. But in a partition by the Collector under Bengal Act VIII of 1876 that cannot be the case, as by sections 6 and 7 of the Act, the valuation and apportionment of the lands and the assessment of revenue upon the different separate estates created by the partition, must proceed upon the basis of the rents payable by the actual cultivators and not by any tenure-holders, except in cases in which the tenure has been created or recognised by all the co-proprietors.

This distinguishes the case of Khan Ali v. Pestonji Eduljee, (1896) 1 C. W. N., 62, relied upon by Mr. Justice RAMPINI, which related to a partition by the Civil Court, from the present case. As for the cases of Nuthoo Lall Chowdhry v. Saadat Lall, (1864) W. R., Sp. Vol., 271, and Ahmedoolah v. Ashruff Hossein, (1870) 13 W. R., 447: 8 B. L. R., 73 note, also relied upon in support of the judgment appealed against, they must be taken to have been overruled in effect by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Byjnath Lall v. Ramooddeen Chowdry.

We, therefore, reverse the decision appealed against and set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court for the determination of the question whether the miras tenure set up by the defendants 1 to 5 was created by the plaintiff and defendant No. 7, or by the latter alone. If the plaintiff or her predecessor in title is shown to have been a party to the creation of the tenure or to have recognised it subsequently, her suit for khas possession must be dismissed. If not, she will be entitled to a decree. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed. Case remanded.

[441] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 4th May, 1898.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Hemanginee Dasse.....Plaintiff

Kumode Chander Dass.....Defendant.*

Decree—Form of decree—Decree for maintenance—Receiver, Appointment of, in case of default—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sections 67, 99, 100.

To avoid any difficulty in executing a decree for maintenance out of property charged with payment of the allowance and make a fresh suit unnecessary in case of default in payment of the instalments a Receiver should be appointed under the decree itself with directions, in case of default in payment of the maintenance, to take possession of the estate and sell the same, and out of the sale proceeds to pay the allowance for maintenance.

THIS was a suit for maintenance and suitable accommodation for residence out of the properties in the hands of the defendant belonging to the estate of the plaintiff's husband. A preliminary decree having been made the matter was referred to the Registrar to enquire and report what would be a suitable allowance for her maintenance and suitable accommodation for her residence. On the Registrar making his report thereon the matter again came up on further directions on the report, and a question was then raised as to whether, having regard to sections 67, 99 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, the sale of the property to be charged with the payment of the allowance of maintenance to the plaintiff could, if necessary, be proceeded with under the decree creating the charge without having to institute another suit.

Mr. H. Mitra for the Plaintiff :—Directions for payment should be made in the decree. It is necessary to take directions for payment, because it has been held that a decree for maintenance cannot be executed. It is necessary to guard against any difficulty that may arise in case the maintenance be not paid. [JENKINS, J.—I could give you liberty to apply and the matter may be met by the appointment of a Receiver under the liberty to apply.] [442] Let the Receiver be appointed now, but not to take possession until default.

* Original Civil Suit No. 791 of 1894.

Mr. Dunne for the Defendant:—I do not consent to that. There must be a decree directing payment to be made and fixing the dates of payment, and there must be a charge on the property for the payment of the maintenance.

Jenkins, J.—The costs of suit and costs of allotment should be a charge on the estate. There will be an order for payment of the maintenance and arrears in terms of the report; with liberty to apply in case of default of payment of maintenance for two consecutive months.

Subsequently the Registrar was consulted and furnished the following minute as to decrees for maintenance:—

“Where a charge was created on the property of a judgment-debtor by a money decree to secure the amount payable thereunder, the plaintiff afterwards obtained an order in the form of the usual decree for an account and sale in a mortgage suit,—Belchamber’s Practice, 336, and the cases there cited. This practice, which obtained prior to the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was continued, as not affected by that Act, until 1893; Meherunnessa Bibi v. Rohilla Khatun, (1890) Suit No. 89 of 1888, July 31st, 1890, per WILSON, J.—This is an unreported case, and was followed in the following unreported cases, Sarodo Prosad Ghose v. Chunder Kant Mukerji, (1891) Suit No. 340 of 1889, Dec. 9th, 1891, per TREVELLYAN, J.; Nundo Lal Roy v. Rodrigues, (1892) Suit No. 114 of 1890, March 17th, 1892, per TREVELLYAN, J.

“It was also followed in the case of Gouri Sunker Pandey v. Abhoyeswari Debi, (1893) Suit No. 41 of 1892, per SALE, J. The decree in this case, dated 29th May 1893, was a consent decree by which it was ordered that ‘the defendant do within three months pay to the plaintiff Rs. 20,905, and Rs. 1,500, with interest, and that these sums, with interest, if not paid within the time allowed for that purpose, shall immediately become due and realizable by execution.’ It was also ordered that ‘the defendant do pay to the plaintiff Rs. 1,46,717-15 by annual instalments, with interest’ as therein provided. And it was further ordered ‘that in default of payment of any of the annual instalments, with interest, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to execute the decree in respect only of the annual instalment falling due and remaining unpaid, with interest, and realize the same, with the costs of execution, irrespective of any proceedings for realization of the sums of Rs. 20,905 and Rs. 1,500.’ And it was further ordered that [443] ‘the properties set forth in a Schedule annexed to the decree (all being out of Calcutta) shall stand charged with the payment of all the sums payable under the decree.’

“The decree itself does not provide for the sale of the properties.

“Default having been made in payment of the two sums of Rs. 20,905, and Rs. 1,500, which were payable within three months, the plaintiff obtained an order, dated 22nd September 1893, directing that, unless payment be made of these two sums within six months, the properties charged under the decree, or a sufficient portion thereof, be sold.

“That order was reversed on appeal, on the ground of non-jurisdiction. The judgment of the Court [PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS and MACPHERSON, JJ.] dated 25th July 1894 is as follows:—‘We are of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. No portion of the property in question is within the territorial jurisdiction of this Court and this Court has, therefore, no power to sell it.’

“The plaintiff next obtained an order, dated 17th August 1894, for transmission of a copy of the decree to the Judge of the Assam Valley district for execution, some of the properties charged under the decree being within that district. A copy of the decree was accordingly transmitted to the Judge of the Assam Valley district, and was by him transferred to the subordinate Judge of Dhubri, to whom the plaintiff applied for execution. The defendant appeared and objected on the ground that the judgment-debtor was precluded from proceeding against the property charged under the decree, except by a fresh suit under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act. The objection was disallowed, and the plaintiff obtained an order for execution. From this order an appeal was preferred to the High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction. It was contended, on behalf of the appellant, that the Transfer of Property Act was applicable, and that, under sections 99 and 100 of that Act, no order for sale could be made until a suit was brought under section 67. Contra, it was contended, that effect should be given to the consent decree as containing an agreement on the part of the defendant for sale of the properties. The Court was of opinion that the provisions of the Transfer of property Act were applicable to the case. It was also of opinion that the decree could have no higher operation than an agreement between the parties; but stress was laid on the fact that the decree did not provide for the sale of the property. The result is thus stated—'As the case stands the plaintiff can realize the instalments by execution by sale and attachment of any property of the defendants, but if he wishes to sell and attach the property charged he must bring a suit. The appeal must be allowed.' Aubhoyessury Dabee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 859.

"An application was then made for transmission of a copy of the decree to the Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs for execution in respect of properties [444] within that district charged under the decree, and the decision reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge of Dhubri was considered. That decision is referred to in the judgment as follows: 'That seems to me to be a ruling to the effect that no step in execution can be taken for the purpose of realizing any portion of the money due under the decree.—That being so, I have no option, but to refuse the present application.'—SALIE, J. (unreported, Nov. 3rd, 1896).

"This order, too, was reversed by the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction—MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON and TREVELYAN, JJ." (unreported, Dec. 21st, 1896). The following is quoted from the judgment of the Chief Justice:—'I refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether the plaintiff is a mortgagee within the meaning of section 99'—Then, referring to the decision reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge, Dhubri—'All that the Judges intended to decide was that, if the plaintiff wished to sell, he must institute a suit: they did not decide that, under the circumstances an order for attachment, as opposed to an order for sale, could not be made.'

"The rulings in this case are, in effect, that, under the circumstances, this Court, in its original jurisdiction, had no power to direct a sale of the properties charged under the decree, all being out of its territorial jurisdiction; that in respect of the two sums payable within three months the property charged might be attached in execution by the Court having jurisdiction, but could not be sold without a fresh suit to be brought under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act.

"The following cases were cited in the course of these proceedings:—

"Shurroop Chunder Gooho v. Ameerrunnissa Khatoun, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 703; Maseyk v. Steel, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 661; Kartick Nath Pandey v. Tilukdhari Lall, (1888) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 667; Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 699; Ashutosh Banerjee v. Lukhi Moni Debya, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 139; Vigneswara v. Bapayya, (1892) I. L. R., 16 Mad., 436; Jadub Lall Shau Chowdhry v. Madhub Lall Shaw Chowdhry, (1893) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 34; and Azimullah v. Najm-un-nissa, (1894) I. L. R., 16 All., 415.

"It will be seen that these cases, except the first, are subsequent to the Transfer of Property Act, which came into effect on the 1st of July 1882.

[445] "The following are later cases:—

"Chundra Nath Dey v. Burroda Shoondury Ghose, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 813. The operative part of the decree of the District Judge of Mymensingh is as follows:—'The suit is decreed ex parte. The plaintiff to obtain the amount of his claim and costs of the suit with interest at 6 per cent. per annum until the date of realization, and the mortgaged property to remain liable for the satisfaction of the debt.' On appeal to the High Court it was held, on the objection of the judgment-debtor, 'that section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act was applicable to the case, and that the mortgaged property could not be sold, unless a suit under section 67 of the Act be brought, and the procedure prescribed by the Transfer of Property Act followed. The property, however, could be attached, as there is nothing in section 99 prohibiting such attachment.'

" Mqtangini Dassee v. Chooney Money Dassee, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 908. The head note is: 'Where a decree, after declaring the amount payable to the plaintiff in respect of future maintenance, and that it should be a charge on certain immoveable property which formed a specific item in the general estate of a testator, went on to direct that for the purpose of securing the payment of the future maintenance, a deed should be executed in favour of the plaintiff, charging such immoveable property, on her executing a release of all her rights and interest in the general estate—Held, that such a charge was properly enforced by a suit brought on the deed, and that it could not be given effect to by proceedings in execution.'

" These cases are referred to in Chundra Moni Dassi v. Mutty Lal Mullick, (1898) 2 O.W.N., 33. In that case it became unnecessary to decide the question whether a decree creating a charge may be enforced according to the practice established prior to the Transfer of Property Act, but that question was treated as still open. Part of the judgment is as follows: 'It seems to me impossible, on the materials at present before me, to decide whether there has been any default in paying the instalments, and, if so, to what extent. If default had been admitted, or not disputed, there would, according to the original practice of this Court, have been two methods open to the plaintiff for the purpose of enforcing payment. She might either have adopted the course referred to at page 386 of Belchambers' Practice, and applied for an order in the nature of a decree for an account and sale, or else have instituted a suit for the purpose of enforcing the charge. My attention has been drawn to certain cases in I.L.R., 22 Cal., the effect of which is to raise at least a question as to whether the practice referred to at page 386 of Belchambers' Practice can now be adopted. No doubt the cases to which I refer are distinguishable in some [446] important respects from the present case, and it may become necessary when the proper occasion arises to consider and determine the effect and bearing of these cases upon the procedure which undoubtedly has been adopted in this Court in respect of charges made by decrees on properties situate within the jurisdiction of the Original Side of this Court, and which has been followed since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act.'

" A decree for maintenance, may, if necessary, provide for the immediate sale of property and payment into Court of a sum sufficient, when invested in Government securities, to produce an income equal to the allowance payable periodically for maintenance. This course has been sometimes followed in administration suits. But there are instances where the decree has made the payment of maintenance a charge on immoveable property and has reserved liberty to apply. This, having regard to the rulings in the case of Gouri Sunker Pandey v. Abhayeswari Devi, is, it would seem, not sufficient. A decree, when it makes the payment of maintenance a charge on immoveable property should, when such property is 'within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court,' proceed to direct that, in default of payment the property charged, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold by the Registrar, or by a Receiver to be appointed of the property charged with, in either case, all necessary directions, and liberty should be reserved to the parties to apply.

" Assuming that a decree is made in this form with all necessary directions for the sale of the property charged for the purpose of providing for the regular payment of the allowance for maintenance, the question is whether the directions of the decree can be carried out or whether, having regard to sections 99 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, the only course open would be to proceed under section 67. Section 100 provides that 'where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law, made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property; and all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgagor shall, so far as may be, apply to the owner of such property,' &c. Is a charge created by a decree for securing the payment of an allowance for maintenance payable thereunder periodically, such a charge as is contemplated by section 100? Can it have been intended that a person to whom a monthly or quarterly or annual sum is payable for maintenance under a decree, and to whom no interest is payable, should, because the decree makes such payment a charge on immoveable property be estopped from proceeding under the decree for the sale of such property and be required to bring a fresh suit? Such a person would be placed at a disadvantage as compared with a mortgagee who has advanced money for consideration, who may realize his claim by a single suit and who, though bound to allow the debtor six months' time to redeem, is fully compensated by having the right to charge interest until realization of his claim.

[447] "The question may also be considered from another point of view. A decree containing directions for the sale of property within the jurisdiction of the Court, would be binding on the parties who, therefore, could not object to its being carried out. It would have the effect of preventing the application of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as fully as a contract for the purpose entered into by the parties."

R. BELCHAMBERS.

17th December, 1897.

Thereupon, on 7th March 1898, an application was made before JENKINS, J., for a decree in terms of the Registrar's minute.

Mr. Mitra for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Chakravarti for the Defendant.

And the following decree was, on 4th May 1898, accordingly drawn up:—

Suit for a declaration that the plaintiff, as the widow of Herumbo Chunder Dass, deceased, is entitled to proper maintenance and suitable accommodation for residence out of the properties in the hands of the defendant belonging to the estate of Herumbo Chunder Dass, deceased, for suitable allowance for such maintenance and suitable accommodation for such residence; for a declaration that such allowance forms a charge on the said properties; for possession of certain stridhan ornaments and articles forcibly and wrongfully taken possession of by the defendant; or to receive the value thereof, &c.

This cause coming on, on the 25th day of November last, the 25th day of April last, and on this day for further directions on the report of the Registrar of this Court, dated the 30th day of March last, and filed on the 21st day of April last, before the Hon'ble LAWRENCE HUGH JENKINS, one of the Judges of this Court, in the presence of Counsel for all the parties, it is declared that the sum of Rs. 35 a month is a fit and proper sum to be allowed to the plaintiff for her maintenance during the term of her natural life. And it is further declared that the eastern portion of the family dwelling house, No. 102, Machooabazar Street, in the plaint in this suit mentioned with the alterations suggested by the said Registrar in his said report at a cost not exceeding Rs. 1,200 would be a suitable accommodation [448] for the residence of the plaintiff. And it is ordered and decreed that the defendant do out of the estate of Herumbo Chunder Dass, deceased, in the plaint in this suit named, pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,345-12-0 for arrears of maintenance up to the 31st day of October last, and do out of the said estate monthly, and every month commencing from the first day of November 1897, pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 35 a month for her maintenance, and do out of the said estate pay the costs of the alterations to be made to the eastern portion of the said family dwelling house within the limit aforesaid, and allow the plaintiff to occupy the said eastern portion of the said family dwelling house as her residence during the term of her natural life. And it is further ordered and decreed that the said monthly sum of Rs. 35, and the arrears of maintenance, and the costs of the alterations to be made to the said eastern portion of the said family dwelling house within the limit aforesaid, and the plaintiff's costs of this suit hereinafter mentioned, form a charge on the properties, belonging to the estate of the said Herumbo Chunder Dass, deceased, incumbered since the institution of this suit, and on the equity of redemption of the properties belonging to the said estate incumbered before the institution of this suit, and also on the sale proceeds of the properties belonging to the said estate sold by the Receiver appointed in suit No. 271 of 1888 (hereinafter referred to as the said properties) subject to any incumbrances which affected the said property before the institution of this suit, and which now attach to the said sale proceeds. And it is further ordered and decreed that the Receiver appointed in the said suit No. 271 of 1888 be appointed Receiver of the said properties, but that he do not take possession of the same or realize the rents thereof, until the further order of this Court. And it is further ordered and decreed that the said Receiver do sell the said properties, or a sufficient portion thereof for the purposes of this decree if and when necessary, the necessity for carrying out the directions to be determined by the Court. And it is further ordered and decreed that in the event of the said monthly sum of Rs. 35 being in arrears for two consecutive months, or in default of payment of the said arrears of maintenance, or the costs of the alterations to [449] be made to the said eastern portion of the said family dwelling house within the limit aforesaid, or the plaintiff's costs of the suit, this plaintiff be at liberty to apply to this Court on notice to the other parties, that the said Receiver do take possession of the said properties, and sell the same or a sufficient portion thereof as hereby directed, and do out of the sale proceeds pay all arrears of maintenance payable to the plaintiff and the costs of the said alterations within the limit aforesaid, and the plaintiff's costs of this suit and invest the balance or a sufficient portion thereof in Government Promissory Notes to provide for the payment of the said monthly sum of Rs. 35, payable to the plaintiff, and hold the same and residue, if any, subject to the further order of this Court. And it is further ordered and decreed that it be referred to the Taxing Officer of the Court to certify the amount of Court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff, if she had not been permitted to sue as a pauper, and to tax the plaintiff her other costs of this suit on scale No. 2, and it is further ordered and decreed that the defendants do out of the said estate pay the amount to be certified as aforesaid to the Government Solicitor, and to the plaintiff, her other costs of this suit, to be taxed as aforesaid with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date of taxation until realization. And the parties are to be at liberty to apply to this Court from time to time as may be necessary.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 310A—Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act (V of 1894)—Power of a Court to set aside a sale if the deposit provided for in section 310A be not paid within thirty days.

[450] Held (by the FULL BENCH) :—Where the judgment-debtor has not within thirty days from the date of sale deposited in Court a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder, but has deposited in Court within the prescribed period a sum calculated by some officer of the Court as the sum to be deposited in respect of such 5 per cent. and of the sum specified in such proclamation of sale, and there is nothing to show that there was any mistake of the Court by which the judgment-debtor was induced to deposit an insufficient amount, the sale ought not to be set aside.

THIS appeal arose out of an application to set aside a sale. Within thirty days from the date of the sale, the judgment-debtor, under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, deposited a sum less than the due amount required under the sale proclamation : the said amount was calculated to be due by the officer of the Court. But after the expiry of the limitation prescribed by section 310A, he deposited also the balance to the credit of the decree-holder. This amount the judgment-debtor contended, being the sum equal to 5 per cent. on the purchase-money he was not bound to deposit, inasmuch as the decree-holder was the purchaser, and as such he was not entitled to get that amount. On behalf of the decree-holder it was contended that the sale could not be set aside as the entire amount specified in the sale proclamation had not been deposited within the prescribed period of limitation. The Court of First Instance held that the payment of a sum equal to 5 per cent. on the purchase-money was a condition precedent to the reversal of a judicial sale, and the fact that in the present case the decree-holder himself was the purchaser would not take the case out of the operation of the section ; and as it appeared on the face of the proceeding that the judgment-debtor did not pay the amount specified on the proclamation within the statutory period of limitation, it rejected the application and confirmed the sale. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decision of the lower Court and set aside the sale. [451] The material portion of his judgment was as follows :—

"On the first point, by section 306 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the purchaser, whether decree-holder or other person, is required to pay down in cash $\frac{1}{2}$ of his bid, and there is a note to that effect in O'Kincaid's Code under this section, Title 'Decree-holder.' But section, 294 rather seems to lay down that a decree-holder selling off is not required to deposit any part of the purchase-money, and it is learnt from the Nazir that it is the practice. So it is somewhat in appellant's favour that he could not deposit 5 per cent. on purchase-money which was never paid.

"On the second point it is found that the amount stated in the sale proclamation was a sum which was calculated to the advertized date of sale with costs and interest to that date. But as a fact the sale did not take place till 12th November, some four or five days after; therefore it may have been necessary to make a further calculation. This Court has always held that it is inequitable to visit the laches of the Court itself or its officers on the parties and that is the view of the High Court in the unreported case No. 1467 of 1897, a copy of which is filed in the record.

"This Court has considered the rulings quoted by other side, and does not find they are against the appellant's contention. Hence it seems to this Court that under the last paragraph of section 310A, Civil Procedure Code, as a matter of equity and good conscience, the mistake was one of the Court itself, through its officer, and ought not to be visited on the appellant, and the order is, therefore, set aside, and the sale set aside but without costs, as it was appellant's mistake."

From this decision the decree-holder appealed to the High Court. On the appeal coming on for hearing the case was referred to a Full Bench by MACLEAN, C.J. and BANERJEE, J., on the 14th December 1898, with the following OPINION :—

Maclean, C.J.—There are two points raised on this appeal (1) Whether, if the decree-holder be the purchaser under a sale in execution, he is entitled to the 5 per cent. on the purchase money provided for in sub-section (a) of section 310A. (2) Whether if the deposit provided for by that section be not paid in within the thirty days as provided in the same section, the Court can set aside the sale.

On the first point I am of opinion that the decree-holder, if the purchaser, is entitled to the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money. Although he happens to be the decree-holder he is none the less the purchaser; and I can see no intention to exclude such a purchaser from the 5 per cent. benefit under the section. The 5 per cent. is undoubtedly given partly, I do not [452] say entirely, as some solatium to the purchaser for the loss of that which is, perhaps, a good bargain; and I fail to see why the decree-holder, if the purchaser, is not as much entitled to that solatium as an outside purchaser. If we were to accede to the respondent's contention we should have to read into the section after the word "purchaser" the words "if such purchaser be not the decree-holder." I can see no justification for such a construction.

As regards the second point the Lower Appellate Court finds as a matter of fact—the Judge says it was admitted—that the present respondent deposited some 48 rupees less than the amount required under the sale proclamation under section 310A. It has been contended before us that the deficit was only 11 rupees or so, and not 48, but in the view I take, whether it were the larger or the smaller sum is quite immaterial. The judgment-debtor has to deposit (1) a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money; (2) the amount specified in the proclamation of sale. The calculation of the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money (in this case 1,000 rupees) was a matter of the simplest arithmetic; the amount specified in the proclamation of sale was patent. Admittedly the judgment-debtor did not make the deposit within the prescribed period (the 30 days); if he did not, has the Court any jurisdiction to set aside the sale? Section 310A affords a special indulgence to the judgment-debtor; it gives him, if I may say so, yet one more chance of saving his property. But he can only avail himself of that special indulgence if as a condition precedent he make the deposit within the thirty days. If he do not do so, what power is there in the Court to extend the period and to deprive the purchaser of the rights he has acquired under his purchase? I can see none; nor have we been referred to any, either under any statute or as inherent in the Court itself. If he may extend the period for three days, why not for thirty, and so on? The Legislature has not thought fit to vest any discretion in the Court to extend the time, and if not, how can the Court arrogate to itself the power to do so?

If then the matter were res integra I should have felt no hesitation in saying that, unless the requisite deposit were made within the thirty days, the Court had no power to set aside the sale. But [453] it is said this view conflicts with certain decisions of this Court, and we are referred, in the first instance, to the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255. The first comment upon that case is that it is one under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the language of which differs materially from section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code. In the former section the words are "the amount recoverable under the decree with costs," whilst in the latter the words are "the amount specified in the proclamation of sale." The former words are not, quâ the amount, nearly so precise as the latter, and rather suggest that some enquiry may be necessary to ascertain the actual amount; and apparently the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255, proceeded upon the footing that, as section 174 provides no machinery for ascertaining the amount but that in practice the amount was calculated in what is called "the office," (I presume that means by the Court,) the amount so calculated was to be taken as the amount payable under the section. That may or may not be so, but, at any rate, that case can be no authority for the present, in which the judgment-debtor has only to look at the proclamation of sale to ascertain the amount due to the decree-holder. In the case of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Pershad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255, there would appear to have been an order of some sort made by the Munsif.

In the case of Kabilaso Koer v. Raghunath Sukan Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 481, the Court would appear to think that before a sale can be set aside the provisions of section 174 must be strictly complied with. I am not prepared to say that a decision upon the construction of section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be regarded as a safe guide to enable us to ascertain the meaning of section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code. Great reliance, however, is placed upon the case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Bazle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609. In that case, apparently it was held that although the judgment-debtor had not deposited the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money, as he had deposited the amount calculated by the Court as the amount to be deposited, the sale ought to be set [454] aside. Speaking with the utmost respect for that decision, I am unfortunately unable to appreciate the principle upon which it is based. So far as the report shows, there is nothing to indicate that the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser had anything to do with the ascertainment of the amount by the Munsif or what power the Munsif or any of his officers had to fix the amount; and if the amount were fixed behind the back of the decree-holder and auction-purchaser, the result would be that the amount fixed, perhaps by some absolutely irresponsible person in the Munsif's Court, is to be treated as the amount to be deposited instead of the amount stated with every distinctness by the act of the Legislature. This seems to me to be legislating not construing what the Legislature has said.

Now what is the finding in the present case? The District Judge says "the appellant deposited the amount calculated to be due by the officer of the Court." What officer? Who is the officer of the Court? The expression "the officer" would appear to indicate that there is some special officer whose duty it is to make these calculations. Where is then anything in the section which says the amount is to be calculated by any officer of any Court, or that any officer of any Court has any power to calculate the amount and decide what is the amount to be deposited? If a judgment-debtor instead of calculating the amount himself chooses to go to some irresponsible officer of the Court and that officer makes a wrong calculation, I fail to see why that circumstance should be regarded as a ground for extending the time for making the deposit under section 310A. I can appreciate that different considerations might arise if the Court in the presence of the parties had by an order fixed the amount, but that is not the present case. It is conceded that the judgment-debtor in this case did not pay in the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale within the thirty days, and that being so, the Court, in my opinion, ought not to have set the sale aside. The appeal consequently must be decreed with costs.

As, however, this view clashes with that expressed in the case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Bazle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609, [455] the case must be referred to a Full Bench. The question for the decision of which this case is submitted to a Full Bench is, whether if a judgment-debtor do not within thirty days from the date of sale deposit in Court (a) a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money, and (b) the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder, but has deposited in Court within the prescribed period a sum calculated by some officer of the Court as the sum to be deposited in respect of such 5 per cent. and of the amount specified in such proclamation of sale, the Court can pass an order setting aside the sale under section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Babu Srinath Dass, and Babu Purno Chunder Shome, for the Appellant.

Sir Griffith Evans, Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, and Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, for the Respondent.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe.—Section 310A of the Civil Procedure Code is different in its language from section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; the former section speaks of "amount specified in the sale proclamation," whereas the latter speaks of "amount recoverable under the decree with costs." Now the question is, whether miscalculation by an officer of Court will entitle the judgment-debtor to pay in the money so calculated, under section 310A after thirty days, and to ask to set aside the sale. I submit not. Under section 310A, the judgment-debtor is bound to pay the amount specified in the sale proclamation; and unless he deposits that amount he is not entitled to get a sale set aside, even if there be a miscalculation by an officer of Court. The words in section 310A of the Code being more precise than in section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that section must be strictly construed. An act must be construed according to the natural meaning of the language used, and not on the presumption that it was intended to leave the existing law unaltered. See Narendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Das, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 563; I. R., 23 I. A., 18, and also the cases of Girish Chundra [456] Basu v. Apurba Krishna Dass, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 940; and Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 267 (270).

The cases of Ugrah Lall v. Radha Persad Singh, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 255, Abdool Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitter, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 216, have no application to the present case, as they are under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Bazle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609, has a direct bearing, although that was decided upon the principle laid down in section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 310A of the Code the judgment-debtor is to look into the sale proclamation, and he is to deposit the amount therein specified. He is not to go to an officer of the Court for any calculation.

It makes no difference if the decree-holder is the purchaser. The judgment-debtor is bound to pay 5 per cent. on the purchase-money. The amount is the solatium or compensation for a possibly good bargain.

Sir Griffith Evans for the Respondent.—The judgment-debtor has substantially complied with the terms of the Statute. The question really is what is the underlying principle of section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, and what is the effect of an act of a ministerial officer of the Court. As to the effect of an act of a ministerial officer of the Court, see the case of Abdoul Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitter, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 216 (219). The practice has always been, whether right or wrong, to go to the execution clerk and ask of him the amount which the judgment-debtor is to pay. The judgment-creditor does not dispute the existence of this practice, and no evidence has been taken on this point. A party ought not to suffer for an act of Court. See the case of Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte De Paris, (1871) L. R., 3 P.C., 475. A man, if he does all that he can do, will be taken to have done all, if by mistake of the Court something is left [457] undone: see Waterton v. Baker, (1868) L.R., 3 Q.B., 173. The sale proclamation is not given to the judgment-debtor, so he has to go to an officer of the Court to make a calculation. One must construe an act intelligently and not as a grammarian. The object of section 310A is to give the judgment-debtor a chance to recover back his property. What does an act of Court mean? It ought not to be limited to the act of the presiding officer only. The case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Bazle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609, is in my favour, and the principle laid down in that case is correct.

Mr. Woodroffe, in reply.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, GHOSE, HILL and JENKINS, JJ.)

Maclean, C.J.—This appeal must succeed. I stated my reasons so fully when the matter was before me as a member of the referring Bench, that, on the present occasion, I only propose to add one or two very brief observations. I do not wish it to be understood, from the terms of my previous judgment, nor do I think my language is susceptible of that construction, that I intended to lay down, as an absolutely hard and fast rule that, if the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money and the amount specified in the proclamation of sale were not paid within the thirty days, the Court was powerless to set aside the sale. There may be circumstances in a particular case which would render such a rule quite inequitable. Nor am I prepared to say that, if the judgment-debtor has been misled by a mistake of the Court, the consequences of that mistake ought to fall upon him. I do not propose to lay down what constitutes a mistake of the Court. I confine myself to saying that there was certainly none in the present case. The question submitted must be answered in the negative.

We are now asked, at this late stage of the proceedings, to remand the case, in order that what actually took place when the judgment-debtor deposited the money, may be ascertained. We ought to be very careful in acceding to such a request, and [458] thus reopening the whole matter and re-starting the whole litigation.

The respondent never suggested this course either before the Subordinate Judge or before the District Judge or before the Division Bench. But, even if the respondent could prove what he suggests, that some information was given him as to the amount of the purchase-money, and of the sum mentioned in the sale proclamation by some officer of the Court, and that he relied on this information, it would not avail him. He must show, at the least, that it was the duty and within the province of the Court officer to give the information, and that it was incorrect. It is not suggested that any information was supplied in accordance with the rules which govern applications for information, and which are to be found in chapter IV of the General Rules and Circular Orders. It is only in compliance with these rules that information can, or ought to, be given.

I may perhaps add, that, as regards the case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Basle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609, it now transpires that the amount was fixed by an order of the Munsif himself, in the presence of and with the assent of the pleaders of both parties. That makes a very material difference.

As to the 5 per cent. on the purchase-money that point has not been argued, and I adhere to what I have previously said.

The appeal must be allowed with costs.

Macpherson, J.—I am of the same opinion. No evidence was taken in the case, but accepting as correct all the facts as stated in the respondent's petitions of the 13th and 17th December, respectively, the Court would not, in my opinion, be justified, on those facts, in setting aside the sale. Those facts certainly do not show that the appellant did all that he possibly could in order to comply with the requirements of section 310A, and that it was due to the mistake of the Court that an insufficient amount was deposited. It is not necessary to consider in the present case, whether the case of Abdool Latif Moonshi v. Jadub Chandra Mitter, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 216, to which I was a party, was correctly [459] decided. That was a case under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it will be time enough to consider whether that case was correctly decided when the question directly arises.

Ghose, J.—I agree in thinking, having regard to the facts of this case, that the question referred to the Full Bench must be answered in the negative. The principle upon which the case of Makbool Ahmed Chowdhry v. Basle Sabhan Chowdhry, (1898) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 609, was decided is this; that if the Court which has to deal with an application under section 310A, declares, though incorrectly, what is the amount that ought to be paid in by the judgment-debtor, and the judgment-debtor in accordance therewith deposits that amount, it would be manifestly unjust to hold that by reason of the shortness of the deposit, the judgment-debtor has lost the remedy given to him by that section, the mistake being a mistake of the Court. I still adhere to that principle. The facts of this case are, however, different. Here, the Munsif did not in any way declare what the amount was that should be paid; nor does it appear that the officer of the Court from whom the applicant is said to have received certain information in regard to the amount to be deposited, was the officer who was charged by the Court with the duty of supplying that information. And I think that in this case no facts have been proved, or found, upon which the Court should be justified in giving the applicant relief under section 310A.

Hill, J.—I also think that the questions referred to the Full Bench must be answered in the negative, and as I quite agree with what has fallen from the learned Chief Justice now, as well as generally with the reasoning on which the order of reference proceeds, I do not think it necessary to add anything.

Jenkins, J.—I too agree as to the terms in which the questions referred to the Full Bench should be answered. In my opinion it is essential to the respondent's success that it should be established that he has been prejudiced by the act of the Court and that the mistake that has been made is attributable to that act. What constitutes an act of the Court must depend on the circumstances of each case. It is clear, I [460] think, that a mere casual act by an officer of the Court cannot be treated as the Court's act. For an act to be clothed with that character it appears to me, generally speaking, that it must be the act of the prescribed officer acting in accordance with the prescribed rules of the Court. The scope of possible proof put forward by Sir Griffith Evans on the part of the respondent, to my mind, falls far short of that. On that ground I think that no remand should be granted, while if we deal with the case exclusively on the materials before the Court, then we can in my opinion only come to the same conclusion as that which has been expressed by the Division Bench. As the point is raised on sub-section (a) of section 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure, it appears to me that a man is no less a purchaser, and the money paid by him is no less the purchase-money because he also chanced to be the decree-holder purchasing with the leave of the Court, and for this reason I am of opinion that the judgment-debtor was bound to deposit the 5 per cent. mentioned in section 310A, sub-section (a).

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Gobinda Nath Shaha Chowdhry and another.....Plaintiffs
versus Surja Kanta Lahiri and others.....Defendants.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule (ii), Article 144—Putnidar and Darputnidar. dispossession of—Adverse possession—Relinquishment by the putnidar, effect of.

The land in dispute along with other lands were let out in putni and darputni by the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs. During the continuance of the said leases the land in dispute was taken possession of and held adversely by the defendants or their predecessor. The putni and darputni were relinquished by the putnidar and darputnidar in favour of the plaintiffs on the 29th June 1891, and they, on the 28th June 1893, [461] brought a suit for recovery of possession of the disputed land from the defendants. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation.

Held, that article 144, Schedule II. of the Limitation Act applied to the case, and that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within twelve years from the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiffs.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs on the 28th June 1893 for recovery of possession of certain lands. The plaintiffs' allegation was that they were the purchasers of a moiety share of a pergunnah, certain mouzahs or which had previously been recorded as putni and darputni taluqs in the name of one William Sheriff. At a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the said taluqs were purchased by Ram Gopal, defendant No. 9, free from all incumbrances. After continuing in possession till 29th June 1891 he said Ram Gopal surrendered the putni and darputni to the plaintiffs by registered deeds of relinquishment. Thereupon the plaintiffs went to take possession of the lands in dispute, but were opposed by the principal defendants. The defence inter alia was that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation, the putnidars and darputnidars not having been in possession of the said lands within twelve years before suit. The Court of First Instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the District Judge upheld the decision of the first Court on the ground that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the possession of the defendants had extended over more than twelve years before the date of the institution of the suit, notwithstanding that the date on which the relinquishment took effect was within 12 years. Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sreenath Das and Babu Kishory Lal Sarkar for the Appellants.

[462] Babu Mohiny Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1889 of 1896, against the decree of B. C. Mitter, Esq., District Judge of Faridpur, dated the 24th of July 1896, affirming the decree of Babu Chandra Kumar Roy, Officiating Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 24th of January 1895.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

'This appeal arises' out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellants to recover possession of a certain land.

The defence raised various points, of which it is necessary to notice only one, namely, limitation.

The first Court dismissed the suit, and the decree of the first Court has been affirmed by the Lower Appellate Court, which has based its judgment only upon the ground of limitation.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiffs that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law in holding that the case is barred by limitation. The facts of the case as found by the Lower Appellate Court are shortly these : The land in dispute, along with other lands, had been let out in putni and darputni by the plaintiffs' predecessor in title, but whilst the putni and darputni were in existence, the defendants or their predecessors took possession of the land in dispute adversely to the putnidar and darputnidar, and they have continued in possession.

Subsequently, that is on the 29th June 1881, the putni and darputni were relinquished by the putnidar and darputnidar in favour of the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs brought the suit on the 28th June 1893 to recover khas possession of the land in dispute. Upon these facts the Lower Appellate Court has held that, as the possession of the defendant had extended over more than twelve years before the date of the institution of the suit, it is barred by limitation, notwithstanding that the date on which the relinquishment took effect was within twelve years before suit.

In second appeal it is contended that this view is wrong, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to reckon time from the date when the relinquishment took effect, that being the date on which the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff within the meaning of article 144 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, which governs this case.

In support of this contention Nuffer Chanāra Pal Chowdhry [463] v. Rajendra Lal Goswami, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 167; Gunga Kumar Mitter v. Asutosh Gossami, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 863; Sarat Sundari Dabia v. Bhobo Pershad Khan Chowdhuri, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 101; and Chinto v. Janki, (1892) I. L. R., 18 Bom., 51, have been relied upon.

We are of opinion that the contention urged on behalf of the appellants is not sound, and that the cases cited are all distinguishable from the present. As the putni and darputni here came to an end not by reason of any sale for arrears of rent but by voluntary relinquishment by the putnidar and darputnidar in favour of the zemindar, the case cannot come under article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. The article of the Limitation Act under which the case properly comes is, no doubt, article 144, and the period of limitation is twelve years, running from the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiffs.

The question then is when did the possession of the defendants become adverse to the plaintiffs.

It is contended that it must be on the date when the relinquishment in favour of the plaintiffs took effect. The term "plaintiff," according to section 3 of the Limitation Act, includes any person from or through whom the plaintiff derives his right to sue; and the present plaintiffs derive their right to sue for khas possession through the putnidars and darputnidars who were entitled to such possession, and who have relinquished their rights in favour of the plaintiffs. That such relinquishment operates only as a transfer of the tenure is clear, not only upon general principles, but also from the express terms of section 12 of Regulation VIII of 1819.

That being so, the time from which limitation runs must be the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the putnidars and darputnidars, who were dispossessed by them, and that date has been found by the Lower Appellate Court to be more than twelve years before the institution of the suit.

[464] It remains now to consider the cases cited. The first case, Nuffer Chandra Pal Chowdhry v. Rajendra Lal Goswami, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 167, was clearly one under article 121 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, and can have no bearing on the present case. In the second case cited, viz., Gunga Kumar Mitler v. Asutosh Goswami, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 863, the landlord had become entitled to possession not by virtue of relinquishment by the tenants, but by reason of the sale of the under-tenure for arrears of rent; and so that case also is distinguishable from the present.

In the case of Sharat Sundari Dabua v. Bhobo Pershad Khan Chowdhuri, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 101, it was held that limitation did not run in favour of a trespasser, and as against the zemindar, so long as the zemindari was in the possession of an ijaradar, because the zemindar upon the expiry of the ijara became entitled to possession in his own right, and not through the ijaradar. The same thing cannot be said in this case.

It cannot be said that the zemindar became entitled to khas possession by reason of the putni having come to an end otherwise than by the voluntary act of the putuidar. The case of Chinto v. Janki, (1892) I.L.R., 18 Bom., 51, was one of a mortgagor suing for redemption. The plea of limitation was there urged by a person who had taken adverse possession as against the mortgagee whilst the mortgaged property was in the possession of the mortgagee; and it was held that such adverse possession could not affect the right of the mortgagor to redeem, he not claiming through the mortgagee.

In the present case, as we have said above, the plaintiffs became entitled to khas possession by the relinquishment of the putnidars and darputnidars, and so they must be held to be affected by the adverse possession that was taken against the putnidars and darputnidars, whose rights they had acquired through their voluntary relinquishment.

It was argued that if the view taken by the Lower Appellate Court be correct, it would prejudicially affect the rights of the [465] landlord, because he would be affected by adverse possession before he became entitled to possession himself.

The answer to this argument is this, that the zemindar is not bound to accept any relinquishment by the putnidar. That was held in the case of Heera Lall Pal v. Nil Monee Pal, (1873) 20 W. R., 383, and in Judoo Nath Ghose v. Schoene Kilburn & Co., (1883) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 671.

Where a zemindar finds that the putnidar or other permanent tenant, after having allowed a trespasser to hold adverse possession of any land included in the permanent tenure for more than twelve years, offers to relinquish it, the zemindar can always refuse to accept the relinquishment; and if rent remains unpaid, he can bring the tenure to sale for arrears of rent, and the purchaser at such sale would be entitled to avoid any incumbrance created by the defaulting putnidar, and would not be bound by any adverse possession held against the latter.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the Court of Appeal below was right in holding that the suit was barred by limitation; and the appeal must consequently be dismissed with costs.

This judgment admittedly governs the analogous appeals, which will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 15th, 16th, 19th and 20th December, 1898 and 17th February, 1899.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

The East Indian Railway Company.....Defendants

versus

Kally Dass Mookerjee.....Plaintiff.*

Railway Company—Duty to carry passengers safely—Explosion in Carriage—

Negligence—Onus of proof—Ignorance or knowledge of law as a defence—

Its limitation—Damages, measure of—Costs.

[466] Held by the Appellate Court (affirming the decision of the Court below) :—In providing for the safety of their passengers it is the duty of a railway company to exercise such a degree of care, at the very least, as may reasonably be required from them under all the circumstances of the case ; and where an accident happens they must shew that it was not preventible by any care or skill.

If a railway-carriage be rendered dangerous to the passengers travelling therein by reason of the fact that there are fireworks in it, and if the carrying of the fireworks could have been prevented by the exercise of due care on the part of the railway company, they are liable for damages for negligence should an explosion of the fireworks occur.

Where loss of life and damage have resulted from the explosion of fireworks in a passenger carriage, the onus is on the railway company to show that they took due care to prevent the conveyance of fireworks in that manner, and not on the plaintiff to show that they did not.

Costs, in a case like the present, should be allowed as between attorney and client so as not to exhaust the damages or the larger portion thereof.

Per O'KINEALY, J. (in the Court below) :—In the absence of evidence that the defendants had taken steps to prevent passengers from taking fireworks into the carriage, the Court cannot presume that the fireworks were taken clandestinely into the compartment, notwithstanding the fact that such carriage of fireworks is an offence, and that every one is presumed to know the law.

* Appeal from Original Decree No. 29 of 1898, from the decision of Mr. Justice P. O'KINEALY in suit No. 723 of 1896.

[462] The maxim that every man is presumed to know the law is limited to the determination of the civil or criminal liability of the person whose knowledge is in question. It cannot legitimately be made use of where (as in the present case) the parties are different and distinct from him.

THIS was an action for damages by the plaintiff as the father and administrator to the estate of his son who died from injuries sustained in an accident that occurred on the defendants' railway on the 27th April 1896. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had contracted to carry the deceased safely by their railway but that they had acted so negligently and improperly that while the deceased was travelling in a third-class carriage belonging to the defendants, it took fire; and that the deceased, being severely burnt, fell through the floor of the said carriage, and ultimately died of the injuries received.

The plaintiff also alleged upon information and belief that the said fire was caused by the explosion of a number of fire-works which, through the negligence and improper conduct of the railway company's servants, and in violation of the rules of the defendants in that behalf, had been allowed to be carried by certain other persons in the said carriage. The plaintiff charged that the death of his said son was caused by the wrongful act or neglect of the defendants or their servants; and, as administrator to the estate of his said son, he claimed Rs. 8,000 damages, whilst, as damages for the loss to himself from the death of his said son, he claimed Rs. 7,000, alleging that the said son at the time of his death was of the age of twenty years only and was in Government employment at a monthly salary of Rs. 25.

In the lower Court.

Mr. A. Choudhury and Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee appeared for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hyde and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe appeared for the Defendants.

The judgment appealed from was as follows:—

O'Kinealy, J. :—In this case the plaintiff is the father and the administrator of the estate of one Atindra Nath Mookerjee, who was fatally injured on the 27th of April 1896, while travelling as a passenger on the East Indian Railway between the [468] stations of Secundrabad and Dadri. Atindra Nath Mookerjee died on the 5th of May 1896 of the injuries sustained by him, and the plaintiff charges that his death was caused by the neglect of the defendants. The relief claimed is of a two-fold character. The sum of Rs. 7,000 is claimed as damages for the loss resulting to the plaintiff from the death of his son, and a further sum of Rs. 8,000 is claimed by the plaintiff as damages for loss to the estate of Atindra Nath Mookerjee, such loss also having been occasioned by the neglect of the defendants. As to this latter portion of the relief claimed by the plaintiff I may say at once that no evidence has been given to show that any pecuniary loss or damage was caused to the estate of Atindra Nath Mookerjee by the neglect complained of, and I therefore dismiss this portion of the claim.

The case for the plaintiff is that on the 25th of April 1896 Atindra Nath Mookerjee purchased from the defendants a 3rd class ticket from Bally in the District of Hooghly to Rawalpindi and proceeded on his journey; that on the 27th of April while on that journey the 3rd class carriage in which Atindra Nath Mookerjee was being carried caught fire owing to the negligence of the defendants and he was severely burnt in different parts of his body; that he was further injured by falling through the burning floor of the carriage, and in consequence of these injuries he died on the 5th of May 1896.

Specific charges of the negligence and improper conduct, which the plaintiff brings against the defendants are set forth in the 2nd and 3rd paragraphs of the plaint. They are, first, that the fire was caused by a number of fire-works, namely, bombs, which through the negligence and improper conduct of the servants of the defendants and in violation of the rules in that behalf had been allowed to be carried in the carriage by certain persons other than Atindra Nath Mookerjee; secondly, that at the time the fire took place the doors of the carriage were locked owing to the negligence and improper conduct of the defendants, and that thereby Atindra Nath Mookerjee was prevented from escaping from the burning carriage; and thirdly, that owing to defective [469] arrangements in the connection cord and other appliances of the train to which the carriage was attached (such defective arrangements being the result of negligence and improper conduct on the part of the defendants) there was great delay in bringing the train to a stand and by reason thereof the escape of Atindra Nath Mookerjee from the burning carriage was prevented. Finally there is a general charge that the death of Atindra Nath Mookerjee was caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of the defendant Company and their servants.

The defendants do not admit the plaintiff's right to institute this suit, or that they entered into any contract of carriage with Atindra Nath Mookerjee. They deny that they or their servants were guilty of any negligence, or unskilful or improper conduct regarding him. They deny that the doors on both sides of the carriage were locked at the time the fire took place, and they also deny that the arrangements in reference to the connection cord or any other appliances of the train were in any way defective. The second paragraph of the written statement is as follows:—"The defendants admit that on the 27th of April 1896 certain fire-works or bombs exploded in a 3rd class carriage forming part of the train known as the No. 5 up Bombay mail at mile No. 926½ on their Railway between Secunderabad and Dadri stations, and several passengers in the said train were injured by the said explosion, but they deny that the said explosion was due to any negligence or improper conduct on the part of themselves and their servants or that their servants allowed or permitted the fire-works and bombs to be carried by any person in the said train as alleged in the second paragraph of the plaint."

From the evidence given at the hearing it appears that Atindra Nath Mookerjee, who was the son of the plaintiff, was a clerk in Government service in the Arsenal at Rawalpindi. He was on leave of absence in the month of April 1896 during which time he lived with his father at Agarparah in the District of the 24-Pergunnahs. On the 24th of April 1896 he proceeded to join his appointment at Rawalpindi. On that day he went to [470] Bally from Agarparah and stayed the night in the house of Sarut Chunder Chatterjee, the husband of the plaintiff's sister. On the next day Atindra Nath Mookerjee left for Rawalpindi by the train leaving Bally at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He obtained a 3rd class ticket for the journey which was purchased for him by Sarut Chunder Chatterjee. This afternoon train is called the No. 5 passenger train, and it preserves that name all the way from Calcutta to Tundla near Agra where the Indian Midland Railway joins the East Indian Railway. At that place the No. 5 passenger train becomes the No. 5 up Bombay mail, which name it retains from Tundla on to Ghaziabad if not during the whole of the journey on to Kalka. At Tundla there are extensive changes made in the No. 5 up passenger train. The changes that were made in the train by which Atindra Nath Mookerjee was travelling appear to have been as follows:—The engine which had taken the train from Calcutta to Tundla was taken off and another engine known as No. 96 class F was attached to the train. Two carriages, one belonging to the Great Indian Peninsular Railway and another to the Indian Midland Railway, were attached to the rear of the train ; a brake-van belonging to the Indian Midland Railway, which was found to be defective at Tundla, was taken off and another brake-van substituted and the train was furnished with a communication cord. One end of this cord was attached to a steam whistle on the engine and the other to a wheel in the guard's van at the rear of the train. When the train was finally made up at Tundla it consisted of the engine No. 96 with its tender, both of which were fitted with hand brakes, a brake-van also fitted with a hand brake, fourteen carriages of different classes belonging to the East Indian Railway Company, two carriages belonging to the other lines which I have mentioned above and the guard's van at the end of the train. Before this train left Tundla the communication cord was tested and found to be in good working order, and so far as I can gather from the evidence the train, when it left Tundla, was in a fit condition for the journey before it. On the 27th of April 1896 the train arrived at Aligarh about noon ; there it stopped 10 minutes, after which it proceeded on its journey to Secunderabad where it arrived shortly before [471] 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It then proceeded on towards Dadri, and it was on the way between these two stations when the fire broke out which caused the deaths of Atindra Nath Mookerjee and eleven other persons. At this time the train was running on a down grade of one in five hundred at a speed of 33 miles an hour.

Leaving aside for the moment the documents which have been put in evidence as throwing light upon the occurrence of the fire, three witnesses have been examined with reference to it on behalf of the defendants. These are William Henry Derry, a permanent way inspector in the employment of the defendants, who was travelling as a passenger in the train, William Gibson, the driver of the engine, and Carapiet John Hyrapiet, the guard of the train. There are also in evidence the statements of these witnesses made upon an officer's joint inquiry into the cause of the accident which was held at Ghaziabad on the 1st May 1896, and there is also the statement of Noor Ally, the brakesman of the forward brake-van who was also examined upon that inquiry. Derry seems to have been the first person who noticed the fire. He was in a second class composite carriage which was the fourth vehicle from the rear of the train. Two carriages belonging to the Indian Midland Railway and the Indian Peninsular Railway were the only carriages between him and the guard's van. He says that the first thing he noticed was a smell of oily burning jute ; that upon perceiving this he looked out of the carriage on both sides along the axle boxes thinking an axle box was running hot, but he saw nothing. About two minutes afterwards a volume of smoke passed the carriage in which he was sitting. He jumped up, and as he did so there was a loud explosion. He looked out and saw a ball of fire drop opposite the carriage in which he was on the right-hand side. He then goes on to say :—" I immediately opened the carriage door seeing there was something seriously wrong. With my face in the direction of the engine I stooped and caught the cord and pulled it towards me. I pulled the cord into the carriage with me as much as I could with the object of sounding the whistle. I pulled in eight or ten feet. I then released the cord as it was useless my hanging on to it, having done all I could. I [472] then looked to the guard's brake and saw him exhibit a red flag. I pulled in the cord that the slack might be on the brake-van side. I did not hear the whistle. When pulling in the cord I heard the noises of the passengers. When I saw the red flag I motioned to the guard to apply his brake and wind up the cord. He motioned back to me that he had done so. Seeing the confused state of the passengers I got out and walked to the rear brake-van on the foot-board telling the passengers not to be alarmed as the train was coming to a stand. I noticed the speed slackening when I got out of the carriage to go back. I saw the ball of fire at mile 925, telegraph post 16, gate No. 36. I went along the foot-boards back to the rear part of the brake. As soon as the train slackened speed sufficiently to allow me to run faster than it was moving, both I and the guard jumped out and ran ahead so that by the time the train had come to a stand we were practically opposite the burning vehicles. Before the train stopped the passengers were tumbling or jumping from the train. They were either tumbling or jumping I cannot say which it was. I cannot say exactly where the first person fell out of the train. I can say where he was picked up, about 925, telegraph post 20. The train came to a standstill at 926, telegraph post 15, nearly a mile from where I saw the fire."

Hyapiet, the guard, says :—" A loud report sounding from the front part of the train first attracted my attention. . . . As soon as I heard the report, I looked out and saw smoke issuing from the centre part of the train. I at once applied my brake and then pulled the communication cord. Then I took my red signal flag and waved it towards the driver. I opened the lobby door and put out the flag on the right side. I observed the permanent way inspector Mr. Derry beckoning me to put on my brake. He was in the third or fourth carriage from the rear brake. I observed men jumping out of the train. When I saw the men jumping out, I knew there was a serious accident, something radically wrong. I also then noticed men on the foot-boards. In the meantime the train slackened speed and came to a stand. It was just a few posts past mile 926. Before the train came to a standstill I jumped from the brake-van, ran towards the front part of the train, and saw the postal van and [473] a third class carriage on fire. I immediately detached the third class carriage from the rear part of train and signalled to the driver to pull up the train. Before uncoupling the rear part I had seen Mr. Derry. He was standing by. I saw the driver coming from the engine. He said something to Derry and then went back to the engine. Then I told the brakesman to detach the two burning carriages from the front portion of the train. He did so, and I signalled to the driver to pull up ahead."

"The whistle was opened wide. That was the first thing I noticed. I looked back without altering my position and saw the brakesman in the front brake showing the red signal. I immediately shut off steam and put the tender brake on, at the same time telling my second native fireman to put the engine brake on. When I had tightened up the tender brake I looked back upon that side of the train. I saw a number of people on the foot-boards of some carriages. I stepped to the left-hand side of the engine, reversed the lever, opened steam to the cylinders and steam to the steam-sanding gear. I then looked down on the left-hand side of the train and saw flames issuing from some of the carriages. As the engine slackened speed I jumped off and went back. Where I saw people standing on the foot-boards was towards the centre of the train. The brakesman was showing the red flag. I looked back on both sides of the train. I do not remember seeing the guard when I looked back. The place where I jumped off was on mile 926 near a culvert. I cannot tell exactly where by reference to the telegraph posts. After I got down, the train may have gone about ten yards. It was about 500 yards from the place where the whistle sounded to the place where the train stopped. I did not notice at the time what mile we were on when the whistle was sounded. I ascertained that afterwards, when we got to Ghaziabad, I enquired and got information from some one else. When I jumped off the engine and went back, I met the permanent way inspector Mr. Derry. I told him to detach the burning vehicles and I would draw the train up. He said he knew what to do and told me to go back to the engine and he would give me the signal. I met him seven or eight [474] carriages from the engine. I went back to the engine and having received the signal from both Derry and the guard, and seeing that the passengers were clear off the vehicles, I drew the front part of the train for about fifty yards when I got the signal to stop. The burning vehicles were then detached from the front part of the train. I received signals and drew that portion of the train another fifty yards when I again received signals to stop."

According to the evidence of Mr. Derry, the explosion occurred on mile 925 at telegraph post No. 16, gate No. 36, and the train stopped with the burning vehicles at mile No. 926, telegraph post 15, nearly a mile from the place where he saw the ball of fire. According to the evidence of Gibson, the train was drawn up to a standstill within 500 yards of the place where the whistle sounded. Assuming that he means 500 yards from the place where his brakes came into full action, even then the train must have proceeded about a thousand yards after the explosion occurred before the driver's attention was attracted, and this delay has not been clearly explained. I am inclined to think that neither Derry nor the guard acted with the promptitude their evidence would seem to show, but it must be remembered that from the explosion to the stopping of the train was hardly 2½ minutes. Allowance must be made for the surprise of the moment, and a very slight delay in taking action would account for a good deal of the time during which the connecting cord remained unused and the whistle silent. This delay may have been partly due to the fact that the guard stopped to apply the brake to his own van before pulling the communication cord, or it may have been partly due to interference with the communication cord by Derry and the other passengers in the train, when the accident occurred. Indeed the connecting cord itself may have become defective owing to the explosion, for though the whistle was undoubtedly sounded, it is not clear by whom the cord was pulled at the time or from what part of the train that was done. I can find nothing to blame in the action of the train officials from the time the explosion took place till the train came to a standstill. I think they did the best they could under the circumstances.

[475] What happened after the train stopped and the burning carriages were detached was as follows: The front part of the train was taken by the driver Gibson to Dadri Station. He says it was ten or twelve minutes past two in the afternoon when the train was brought to a standstill; that about twenty minutes after that he left for Dadri and reached there at about quarter to three. From there he sent two telegrams to Ghaziabad for additional carriages to convey the wounded passengers and for medical assistance. Having done this, he proceeded back to Dadri with a bhistee and some porters, arriving there at about a quarter to four. In the meantime what happened at the scene of the accident was this: The guard and some of the European passengers went back on the line towards Secundrabad for the purpose of picking up the wounded, but finding it impossible to carry them back to the train the guard and Derry with the assistance of the European passengers and some coolies shunted the guard's van back to gate No. 36 which Derry fixes as the place at which the explosion occurred. What took place with reference to assisting the injured persons is told by the guard Hyrapiet and by Derry. Hyrapiet says:—"After the first portion of the train left for Dadri I went with some military officers who were passengers in the train to search for the persons who had fallen out of the train. I found a man very badly burnt. He was lying near the fencing wires. This was about 150 yards from the brake-van and about 30 or 40 yards further from the burning carriages which were the 7th and 8th carriages from the rear of the train at the time of the accident." Hyrapiet then goes on to say:—"There was an officer with me, I think Captain Maclean, when I found out the first man. There was a Major Grant also there. This officer Maclean went with me when I went to search for the men. There were three coolies, but no other Europeans. I volunteered to carry the wounded man to the brake-van. The officer picked up the man and put him on my back and I carried him to the brake-van. I don't know the name of this wounded man. Captain Maclean accompanied me to the van. We got hold of a blanket, put the man into the blanket, and lifted him by holding the four corners of the blanket into the van. I was completely done up with the heat and the picking up of the man. I consulted the military [476] officers and decided that it was advisable to detach the van and push it along the line. I did this with the assistance of the coolies and the military officers. There was another man carried by a military officer in his arms. This other man was found over the fencing wires about 50 yards from the man I picked up. He too was carried to the brake-van. We hand-shunted the brake-van down the line and picked up the men who were lying on both sides of the line, and put them into the van. I picked up about 14 or 15 altogether. We shunted the brake-van down to gate No. 36; that was where I originally heard the report. I say that because there was a third class carriage door lying there. The report which I heard was the bursting of a third class carriage door. The doors and some of the splinters were lying there then. I cannot say if it was a door belonging to a third class carriage or to the combined postal and third class van. I cannot say if I found more than one door. There was a door and a lot of broken pieces. They were on one side of the line almost opposite the gate on the right facing Dadri; that would be on the east side of the line. There was a passenger completely charred and burnt almost shapeless just about a few yards from there. He was dead. I thought it best to leave the body there with a man in charge." Then he says:—"I forgot to say that I found four bamboo bombs which I locked up in my box and gave to the police. These were four pieces of bamboo about six or seven inches long, hollowed in the centre and the bamboos were burnt. They were slips of bamboo. From what I picked up I could say that the diameter of the bamboo was about 2½ inches. At that time I did not know what they were, but the military officer told me to look after them and lock them up in my box. I could not swear to the exact length of the pieces of bamboo. I should say it was between six and eight inches. I subsequently made them over to the police. These were picked up almost where the dead man was, a little past the gate almost close to where the carriage door was found." Then he says:—"An English-speaking Bengali clerk was picked up half way between the gate house and where the train stopped. I can't say if there were more Bengalis than one amongst those I picked up. I noticed a few [477] Marwaries were there. The Bengali lad was picked up clear of the rails. I cannot say exactly the particular spot. At that point the fencing would be about 18 or 20 yards from the rails." Having got all the wounded passengers into the van the guard tried to relieve the sufferings of the wounded, and with the aid of some coolies the van was shunted back to the rear portion of the train. By that time the driver had returned with the front portion of the train from Dadri, and oil was obtained from him for the purpose of putting upon the wounds of the injured persons.

Derry's account of the picking up of the wounded and dying is this : After he had sent the driver to Dadri he noticed that one of the passengers who had jumped out was being picked up by another passenger. He says :—" I went to his assistance. The guard was there too. The wounded man was brought into a second class carriage and I attended to him. One of the gentlemen passengers and myself then walked back to attend to the burnt people that were lying on the road. The brake-van was uncoupled and shunted back. This gentleman and myself went on ahead and the brake-van followed us. We walked back to gate No. 36 and gave water to the wounded and shade to those lying in the sun. My gangmen, line men, they were working close by, they came running up, they had blankets and we tied them to trees to give shade from the sun. I saw all the injured passengers ; amongst them I saw one young Bengali Babu. I cannot say what his name was. There was only the one Bengali injured. He was about 40 or 50 yards from the gate No. 36 on the Ghaziabad side. He was lying on the left-hand side in what we call the three foot way. That would be about 6 feet from the rail on the left-hand side of the line. He was conscious. I spoke to him, he spoke to me. I gave him some water and he said I had saved his life. I noticed all his body from above his neck down to his waist all was burnt. He was put into the brake-van along with the others." Before all the wounded were picked up, Derry went back and got oil from the driver which he sent back to the brake-van where the wounded were lying. He then attended to the line.

Atindra Nath Mookerjee himself made two statements with regard to the accident, one on the 28th of April, and the other [478] on the 30th. They were taken down by Inspector Fitzpatrick of the Government Railway Police, and these statements are to the effect that he was in the carriage where the explosion occurred ; that it was an explosion of fire-works which were being carried in the compartment in which he was, and the effect of the explosion was that the seats and planks underneath the carriage gave way and he was thrown down senseless. He says that he did not see the fire-works in the compartment, and was not aware of their presence until the explosion took place. There were some 12 or 14 passengers in the compartment with him. The two statements do not agree in respect to the place in which Atindra Nath Mookerjee was at the time of the accident, and when we consider his condition at the time they were made and the extreme suddenness of the accident, very little definite information can be expected from them. In the first statement he says that he was in a compartment in the front of the post-office van, in the second statement he says that the compartment in which he was travelling was behind the post office, and I am satisfied that the second statement is true. None of the witnesses who were examined at the trial can speak to the compartment where the explosion took place, but it is quite clear that when the train came to a standstill, the post-office van and the carriage to the rear of it were in flames. The front part of the post-office van, though filled with smoke, was not in a blaze at the time the train came to a standstill, nor was the rear of the 3rd class carriage immediately behind, although the front part was. We have the additional fact that there was a strong nearly head wind against the train, the effect of which would be to drive the fire to the rear instead of the front. Taking the whole evidence into consideration, I am of opinion that the explosion took place in the 3rd class compartment in the rear of the post-office van.

As to the cause of the explosion I have no doubt that it was caused by the fire-works which were carried by one or two of the passengers in the compartment. It was suggested for the plaintiff that the gas cylinder, which was carried in the postal-van, was defective, and that it was the gas in the cylinder which exploded and caused the accident; but I believe that the explosion [479] of the gas cylinder took place after the train came to a standstill and not before.

It was contended for the plaintiff that the evidence showed that the communication cord was defective and had failed to sound the whistle when pulled, and that in any case steps had not been taken in proper time to bring the train to a standstill. Now as I have already said I believe that there was a considerable delay in attracting the driver's attention, but I do not believe the cord was defective before the explosion. It was as I have said tested and found in good order at Tundla, and there is nothing to show it did not continue in good order till the explosion occurred. That the whistle was sounded by the communication cord being pulled Mr. Gibson swears to and I believe him. He impressed me as being on the whole a careful and accurate witness. Who was pulling on the cord when the whistle was sounded is not clear. If the communication cord was not defective before the explosion, which was the cause of the accident, no defect which could be attributed to the explosion would, I think, be sufficient to support this part of the plaintiff's case; but even if I am wrong on that view it does not seem to me that the plaintiff's case would be advanced in the least. Assuming the explosion to have taken place at gate No. 36, I think it is clear that Atindra Nath Mookerjee either fell out of or tumbled out of the train within half the distance from that gate to where the train came to a standstill, so that even if the train had been brought to a stand within half the distance in which it was, the effect so far as Atindra Nath Mookerjee is concerned would have been the same. There is no evidence before me to show that his death was due in any respect to injuries caused by his falling out of the train. It was solely due, as I gather from the evidence of the doctor, to the injuries which he received from the burning, that is to say, it was due to the injuries which he received while in the carriage at and after the explosion occurred, and so far as I can see no quickness in stopping the train could have prevented those injuries.

It was also said that the brake power upon the train was insufficient. As regards this, the evidence satisfies me that the brake [480] power was ample for the train, and that even had the train been fitted with the steam brakes, as it was contended for the plaintiff it should have been, there would not be more than 5 or 6 seconds gain in stopping the train, and I do not think that that additional gain would have in any respect saved Atindra Nath Mookerjee from the injuries he received and which were the cause of his death. It is true that the Agent of the East India Railway seems to have considered it a matter of regret that the engine had not been fitted with steam brakes, and that was relied on before me as an admission that the brake power was insufficient, but I am inclined to place more reliance on the evidence of the practical men who were called at the trial than to the remarks on this subject contained in the report to the Directors. It was also said that the engine itself was of an obsolete type and was insufficient, but I do not think the plaintiff has made out a case for relief on this ground. Neither do I think that the plaintiff has made out a case on the ground that the doors on both sides of the train were locked at the time of the accident. That, I believe, was not the case. It is true the evidence shows the carriage doors were provided with catches at the bottom to prevent the doors from flying open and these catches would in the ordinary course of things be fastened, but I cannot hold that the use of these catches which were provided for the safety of the passengers is evidence of neglect or default on the part of the Railway Company, merely because they may have been the cause of retarding the escape of the passengers from the burning train.

It was also contended by the plaintiff that great delay took place after the accident in helping the wounded and in providing the medical assistance, and it was suggested that this delay had contributed to the death of the plaintiff's son. I do not think the suggestion is well-founded. Besides, it forms no part of the case made by the plaintiff in his plaint, and I cannot, therefore, take it into consideration.

One important matter still remains, and that is as to the causes which led to the explosion. I gather from the evidence that the fire-works were taken on the train at Aligarh (which station was reached at noon on the 27th) by two passengers, father and [481] son, named Abud Ally and Golam Hussain. It appears that between Aligarh and the scene of the accident the passengers smoked in the compartment. That seems to be in accordance with the rules of the Company, and the evidence seems to point to this that the smoking was in some way the cause of the explosion. Golam Hussain appears to have been killed on the spot, and upon him was found a piece of paper. This piece of paper when taken from the body of Golam Hussain was given to the guard Hyrapiet and by him handed over to the Police. The Railway Police Inspector, who made the investigation into the cause of the accident, arrived at the place where it occurred in the morning of the 28th. He says in cross-examination that he found a ticket and an order from a zemindar of Sonpet ordering the fire-works. He ascertained, he does not say how, that they were what are called Sangolas, that is bombs tied up with rope, and catherine wheels. He then says: I don't remember if there was anything else.

Q.—Was a list prepared of what you ascertained were the fire-works carried at the time?

A.—I don't recollect. I say a list of fire-works was obtained. I think I saw that list.

Q.—When did you see it? How did you see it?

A.—I think it was found in the possession of the maker of the fire-works who was thrown out dead, and who still held this list and a bag and this order. I did not see the dead bodies. They were disposed of before I came.

And he goes on to say that he got his information from his Subordinate Police officers, Railway Police, and, he thinks, from Hyrapiet, the guard of the train. In answer to further questions on this point he said that catherine wheels vary from a foot in diameter to 6 inches, but he did not try to ascertain what the catherine wheels carried in the compartment were like, nor did he personally make any inquiries at Aligarh respecting them. He said inquiries were made under his orders but by whom he does not remember. Then he is asked:—

Q.—Did you make any inquiries as to how these fire-works were alleged to have been carried?

A.—Yes.

[482] Q.—How were they carried?

A.—They could not be noticed; they were concealed.

Q.—Did you inquire as to in what they were carried?

A.—The men were dead.

Question repeated.

A.—No. I could not find out whether they were in baskets or in cloths. As far as I can remember I could get no information as to this.

Q.—You said that they were being carried concealed. Do you say so because you could not ascertain from anybody if they had seen these fire-works?

A.—I say so because even those who were in the compartment did not see the fire-works, including Atindra Nath."

Further on he is again cross-examined on this point.

"Did you read the list of fire-works which you say was found ?

A.—I had it read if it was found. It was in vernacular.

(To the Court)—I can't read that vernacular in which it was written. I don't remember to have had it read to me.

Q.—Did you report that a lot of fire-works was being carried ?

A.—I may have done so.

Q.—Did you report that the order giving quantity and so forth had been found ?

A.—I may have done so.

Q.—What is your belief ?

A.—I can't remember at this distance of time what I wrote.

Q.—What is your belief as to the quantities sent ?

A.—The first idea was all the fire-works mentioned in the list found were being carried, but it was afterwards found that a part of them were carried by road and those in the train were samples. I said a lot, my idea was—(stopped) that means a large quantity."

In re-examination he says :—

"I said one of these men was the maker of the fire-works. It was from his shops the fire-works were going. The man we found on inquiry was ordered to supply them."

Then this is put to him.

"Q.—There were no traces of fire-works after the accident.

A.—The guard, I think, picked up the bits."

[483] I think that this witness and the guard Hyrapiet were inclined when they gave their evidence to minimise the quantity of fire-works which were carried in the passenger compartment on the 27th of April. In the report which Fitzpatrick made on the 28th of April he states that it is uncertain where and how the fire commenced ; that the injured persons who were then alive in hospital were too far gone in pain to give clear depositions as to where and how the fire originated. He then goes on to say :—"It is possible the post-office van was first set on fire by a naked light, carelessly thrown match, or a chilam. On the other hand the compartment in rear of the post-office van contained a lot of fire-works being carried from Aligarh to Sonpet against rule and regulation by two persons and whose names are Ahed Hussain, the son of Faizbux, and Golan Hussain, the son of Ahed Hussain, fire-work makers of Jalali, Aligarh. The order on Ahed Hussain for fire-works was given by one Kodar Ally Khan of Chikari, Sonpet, and the"—(the report is here torn but I take the word to be 'list' or 'order')—"giving quantity and so forth has been found, but both Ahed Hussain and his son are dead, so no prosecution against them can ensue. But whether the fire in the post-office set fire to the fire-works or vice versa remains to be proved by inquiry. This important point will be cleared up by the 30th when an officers' joint inquiry will be held."

Now it is clear from the evidence of this witness, and his report, that the first impression of those inquiring into the accident, was that there was a large quantity of fire-works being carried in the train that day, and that impression is supported by the extent of the damage caused by the explosion. The carriage panels were iron lined with wood, and the force of the explosion was sufficient to blow out the doors of the compartment to a distance of 10 feet from both sides of the line. The compartment was completely wrecked, and Hyrapiet in his evidence gives the state of the burning carriages at the time the train came to a standstill. He says in cross-examination :—"At the time when the train came to a stand no attempt was made to save the mail. We could not do anything. The fire had taken such a command over the things that we could not do anything, but the [484] whole thing was not ablaze. You could approach the two carriages at the ends—the post-office at the front end and the 3rd class at the Secunḍrabad end.” And Derry in his evidence also says that the two carriages were in flames at the time when the train came to a stand.

Now it seems to me that to do such amount of damage in so short a time there must have been a considerable quantity of these fire-works in that compartment, and the hearsay evidence, for it seems to be nothing more, upon which Fitzpatrick relies now as his reason for supposing that a part of the goods mentioned in the list had been sent by road, and that only a portion had been carried in the train is not satisfactory. He suggests that they must have been concealed, because Atindra Nath Mookerjee says he did not know whether the fire-works were in the carriage until he heard the explosion. But there was probably nothing to turn the attention of Atindra Nath Mookerjee to the luggage carried by any other passenger into the compartment.

The evidence as to the remains of the fire-works which were found after the accident also tends in my opinion to show that the quantity of fire-works carried in the compartment was considerable. Hyrapiet, the guard, says that he picked up four bamboo bombs which he locked up in his box, “slips of bamboos which were 6 to 8 inches long, the diameter of the bamboo would be about 2½ inches.” He picked these up on the 27th and locked them up in his box. In his evidence before the joint inquiry given on the 1st of May 1896, when nothing had arisen to cause a desire to minimise the quantity, he stated this—“I picked up on the side of the line three bamboos with holes in the centre called bombs, about 14 inches long, which had exploded, and other bamboos used as torches for illuminating marriage processions, all burnt. Derry in his evidence says that he picked up two or three fire-work bamboos, about 8 inches long and 1 inch in diameter, wrapped round with a peculiar twine, which had exploded. He says he picked up two or three on that day and more were picked up the next morning. And in his statement before the officers’ joint inquiry he said he saw several exploded bombs picked up near the gate-house No. 36, [485] he also picked up some himself the next morning. Further it is extremely probable that besides the exploded bombs, which were picked up on the line on the 27th and the 28th, assuming that all those on or near the line were picked up [which is not clear, as no search seems to have been made for them], other bombs and fire-works may have exploded and been consumed within the carriage.

On the whole the evidence leads me to the conclusion that a considerable quantity of fire-works was in the carriage at the time of the explosion. An expert witness, who is a pyrotechnist, was called for the purpose of showing that a small quantity of bombs would be capable of doing the damage which was done. I do not think this expert’s evidence is very satisfactory. But even if a small quantity of bombs would be sufficient to do the damage that was done that does not necessarily give any reliable indication of the quantity of fire-works which was carried in addition to the bombs.

The question then is whether the defendants are responsible for the fire-works having been taken into and carried in the compartment of the passenger carriage as they were on that day, a carriage in which it was the practice for the passengers to smoke and therefore to have fire of some kind or another.

There can be no doubt that from the moment those fire-works were introduced into that carriage the lives of the passengers were in danger. The result of the explosion shows that from that moment the compartment became practically a powder magazine. It, therefore, ceased to be from that moment a vehicle fit or proper to be used for the purpose of carrying passengers. The question is, are the defendants responsible for that, and to determine this question it is necessary to inquire, in the first instance, what is the duty of the Railway Company with respect to providing for the safety of their passengers.

In the case of Christie v. Griggs, (1809) 2 Camp., 79, the facts were these. The plaintiff was travelling to London as a passenger on a stage coach belonging to the defendant when it broke down and he was greatly bruised. The first Court imputed the accident to the [486] negligence of the driver, the second to the insufficiency of the carriage. The accident was caused by the axle-tree of the coach having snapped asunder, and Sir JAMES MANSFIELD, in directing the jury upon the question as to the sufficiency of the coach, stated that the defendant "did not warrant the safety of the passengers. His undertaking as to them went no further than this that, as far as human care and foresight could go, he would provide for their safe conveyance." In Readhead v. Midland Railway Company, (1867) L. R., 2 Q. B., 413, and on appeal (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 379, which was a similar case, the Court, while of opinion that a carrier does not warrant the safety of his passengers, laid down that the obligation to take due care should be attached to the contract between them; and they went on to say—"Due care," however, undoubtedly means, having reference to the nature of the contract to carry, a high degree of care, and casts on carriers the duty of exercising all vigilance to see that whatever is required for the safe conveyance of their passengers is in fit and proper order." In the case of Ford v. London and South-Western Railway Company, (1862) 2 F. & F., 730, the plaintiff was injured by the tender of the train being thrown off the line, and one of the causes was alleged to be the defective tyre of one of the wheels of the tender. ERLE, C.J., in his direction told the jury: "The action is grounded on negligence. Negligence is not to be defined, because it involves some inquiry as to the degree of care required, and that is the degree which the jury think is reasonably to be required from the parties, considering all the circumstances. The Railway Company is bound to take reasonable care to use the best precautions in known practical use, for securing the safety of their passengers." In the case of Burns v. Cork and Bandon Railway Company, (1863) 13 Ir. Law Rep., 543, the Court laid down the principle that "it is the duty of a carrier to provide for his passengers a vehicle which shall be free from defects as far as human care and foresight can provide, and perfectly road-worthy." In the case of Hyman v. Nye, (1881) L.R., 6 Q.B.D., 685, the defendant was a jobmaster from [487] whom the plaintiff hired a landau for a drive from Brighton to Shoreham and back. After having driven some way, and whilst the carriage was going down hill and slowly over a newly-mended part of the road, a bolt in the under part of the carriage broke. The splinter-bar became displaced; the horses started off; the carriage was upset; the plaintiff was thrown out and injured, and he brought an action for compensation. No fault could be imputed to the horses or to the driver. The learned Judge at the trial told the jury in substance that the plaintiff was bound to prove that the injury which he had sustained was caused by the negligence of the defendant, and if in their opinion the defendant took all reasonable care to provide a fit and proper carriage (which opinion I may point out is to be arrived at on evidence given before them, because the jury can only deal with the facts which are proved at the trial) their verdict ought to be for him. Being thus directed, the jury found a verdict for the defendant; and in particular they found that the carriage was reasonably fit for the purpose for which it was hired, and that the defect in the bolt could not have been discovered by the defendant by ordinary care and attention. The plaintiff obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and the rule was made absolute. Mr. Justice LINDLEY in his judgment, after referring to a number of authorities says: "A careful study of these authorities leads me to the conclusion that the learned Judge at the trial put the duty of the defendant too low. A person who lets out carriages is not, in my opinion, responsible for all defects discoverable or not; he is not an insurer against all defects; nor is he bound to take more care than coach proprietors or railway companies who provide carriages for the public to travel in; but in my opinion, he is bound to take as much care as they; and although not an insurer against all defects he is an insurer against all defects which care and skill can guard against. His duty appears to me to be to supply a carriage as fit for the purpose for which it is hired as care and skill can render it; and if whilst the carriage is being properly used for such purpose it breaks down, it becomes incumbent on the person who has let it out to shew that the break-down was [488] in the proper sense of the word an accident not preventible by any care or skill. If he can prove this, as the defendant did in Christie v. Griggs, (1809) 2 Camp., 79, and as the Railway Company did in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., (1867) L. R., 2 Q. B., 413; and on appeal, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 379, he will not be liable; but no proof short of this will exonerate him. Nor does it appear to me to be at all unreasonable to exact such vigilance from a person who makes it his business to let out carriages for hire. As between him and the hirer the risk of defects in the carriage, so far as care and skill can avoid them, ought to be thrown on the owner of the carriage. The hirer trusts him to supply a fit and proper carriage; the lender has it in his power not only to see that it is in a proper state, and to keep it so, and thus protect himself from risk; but also to charge his customers enough to cover his expenses."

The cases which I have cited are cases in which the dangerous condition of the vehicle was owing to a defect in some part of the vehicle itself; but it seems to me that the principles laid down in those cases are applicable to the case before me and are those by which I must be governed. A vehicle may become insecure and dangerous as well from having dangerous substances placed therein as from a defective wheel or axle or bolt, and may cease to be road-worthy from the one cause as well as from the other, and if the causes owing to which in the case before me the carriage in which Atindra Nath Mookerjee was being carried by the defendants became insecure and dangerous and unfit for the conveyance of passengers, were causes which could have been prevented from becoming effective by care and skill on the part of the defendants, then that care and that skill the defendants were bound to exercise.

It was stated on behalf of the defendants that they could not prevent the introduction of the fire-works into the train, and the case was likened to a person entering a carriage with a box of matches or a piece of dynamite in his waist-coat pocket. But there is no evidence to show that the defendants had taken any steps to prevent passengers from taking fire-works with them into the passenger trains, and I cannot take the case before me [489] as analogous to the case put in argument, the very statement of which shows how the explosives were concealed. There is nothing before me to show how the fire-works were taken into the train or that they were in fact concealed. The expressions found in some of the reports that the fire-works were carried against rule and regulation, or surreptitiously or clandestinely, are of no value as evidence in this case of the manner in which they were taken into the compartment, nor are the reasons given by Fitzpatrick for saying that the fire-works were concealed there. These expressions are at the most expressions to the effect that they were being carried without the knowledge of the Railway officials.

Even where it is shown that the explosives have been well concealed as in the illustration put in argument, I think it may fairly be said that, quite apart from the individual case, due care should have been taken by the defendants to impress upon their staff the necessity of being vigilant in preventing the carriage of fire-works, and also to bring home to their passengers that such an act would be severely punished, because the very fact of that having been done would, I have no doubt, tend to prevent even the secret carrying of explosives. It is not, however, necessary to pursue this hypothetical case. In the case before me I am asked to presume that the defendants took due care to prevent the carrying of these fire-works and that the person who carried them concealed them in such a way that they could not be discovered by the railway servants at Aligarh. I cannot presume these matters in favour of the defendants where the circumstances are such as to call upon them to show what care and caution they in fact did take.

I was told that every man must be presumed to know the law, that it must therefore be presumed that the man who took the fire-works into the train, especially as he was a maker of fire-works, knew he was committing a penal offence, that therefore it must be presumed he took every means to conceal his possession of these fire-works from the railway officials, and that in fact he was successful in doing so. I cannot rest the decision of a pure question of fact upon supposition of this character. No doubt every man must be supposed to know the law, and if [490] Golan Hussain were being sued or prosecuted for introducing these fire-works into the carriage, his plea of ignorance of the law would be no excuse for his conduct. But I think the maxim is limited to the determination of the civil or criminal liability of the person whose knowledge is in question and cannot be legitimately made use of in a case, such as the present, where the parties are entirely different and distinct from him. Even if he did know the law and knew he was committing a penal offence, there is no reason why I should assume further that he knew he must carefully conceal these fire-works from the railway officials. He may have acted on the belief (rightly or wrongly entertained) that the railway officials would not interfere with him, and that there was no necessity to conceal the fire-works.

That the introduction of a considerable quantity of fire-works into a railway carriage is not a thing which may not be prevented by the exercise of that due care which, according to the principles laid down in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., (1867) L. R., 2 Q. B., 413; and on appeal, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 379, and Hyman v. Nye, (1881) L. R., 6 Q. B. D., 685, the defendants are bound to take, is shown by the course taken by the defendants themselves after the accident. In the seventh paragraph of Mr. Dring's report to the Agent to the East Indian Railway Company, dated the 6th of May 1896, respecting the accident and the finding of the officers' joint inquiry, he says this :—"A notice has since been issued to the staff to exercise great care in passing the luggage of passengers, and I have already received advice that in two instances passengers have been detected carrying fire-works: one case at Mogul Serai in which a Native Deputy Magistrate is said to be the offender, and a second case at Burhan." The fact that within one week two cases of the carrying of fire-works were detected after the notice was issued to the staff to exercise great care, shows that the carrying of fire-works by passengers into the compartment in which they travel is a thing which may be prevented by the exercise of that high degree of care which the Railway Company are bound to exercise for the safety of their passengers; and if that be so, I am of opinion that where loss of life and damage has [491] resulted from the explosion of fire-works in the compartment of a passenger carriage it should be shewn that due care was taken by the Railway Company to prevent the fire-works being carried in that manner.

The question at issue then resolves itself into this: Was there due care within the meaning of those words as defined in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., (1867) L. R., 2 Q. B., 413; and on appeal, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 379, and Hyman v. Nye, (1881) L. R., 6 Q. B. D., 685, taken by the defendants for the purpose of preventing these two persons, Ahed Hussain and Golam Hussain, from taking these fire works into the compartment with them at Aligarh on the 27th of April 1896? Not a particle of evidence, upon this part of the case, has been given by the defendants. Their contention is that they are not bound to give any such evidence and they say that it lies upon the plaintiff to shew that they had not taken that due care and caution which they were bound to do to prevent the carrying of these explosives in the passengers' compartment. I do not think this contention is sound. If they had, previous to this accident, issued instructions to the staff to take care and prevent the carrying of fire-works, especially during the marriage season, or if as a matter of fact any precautions were in the habit of being taken in the Aligarh Station to prevent the carrying of fire-works in the passenger compartment, these are matters peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants themselves, who have the sole control of the traffic and alone know the methods by which that traffic is regulated. It is, therefore, in my opinion the duty of the defendants to produce the evidence on these matters to show that they had exercised due care and caution, and that it is not for the plaintiff to show that they did not. In the case of Christie v. Griggs, (1809) 2 Camp., 79, the plaintiff having proved that the axle-tree snapped asunder at a place where there is a slight descent, from the kennel crossing the road, that he was in consequence precipitated from the top of the coach, and that the bruises he received confined him several weeks to his bed—there rested his case. Best, Sergeant, contended strenuously that the plaintiff was bound [492] to proceed further and give evidence either of the driver being unskilful, or of the coach being insufficient. But it was held by Sir JAMES MANSFIELD that the plaintiff had made a prima facie case by proving his going on the coach, the accident, and the damage he had suffered. That was the course taken in Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., as I read the report in L. R., 2 Q. B., 413; and it is the course directed by that class of cases of which Scott v. London Dock Company, (1865) 3 H. & C., 596, is one of the best known examples. It appears that the train was a crowded train, but it had no more than its proper complement of passengers according to the guard, and it has not been suggested that there was any crowding or confusion at Aligarh Station under cover of which the fire-works might have been introduced into the carriage notwithstanding the vigilance of the railway officials. In fact, so far as the evidence before me goes, there is nothing to show that during the ten minutes' stay at Aligarh any passengers left the train, or that any entered the train except the two who carried the fire-works. There is no evidence before me to show that the defendants took any precaution whatever which might have resulted in preventing the introduction of these fire-works into the passenger compartment at Aligarh Station on the 27th April. Mr. Dring, the Traffic Manager, who was called as a witness, and who wrote the report I have above referred to as to the precautions taken after the accident occurred, was not asked a single question on this subject. I must therefore come to the conclusion that the defendants did not exercise that high degree of care in providing for the safety of their passenger Atindra Nath Mookerjee which the law imposes upon them, and that therefore they are liable to the plaintiff in this suit for the damages which he has sustained by the loss of his son.

With regard to the amount of damages I take the rule to be laid down in Narayan Jetha v. Municipal Commissioners of Bombay, (1891) I.L.R., 16 Bom., 254. There the Court says:—"As regards damages, in cases of this nature, distinct evidence of the loss sustained or benefit expected is not necessary. The jury may look [493] at all the circumstances of the case and especially at the position of the parents and age of the child, and call in aid their own experience in arriving at their conclusions."

Now in this case the father has no settled income. He is about 48 years of age and suffering from paralysis. He was a schoolmaster, but owing to the disease from which he is suffering he had to give up his appointment. He also seems to have made some money by writing books, but at present he derives no income from that source, and his illness has involved him in debt. He has two other children living, but they are both infants, and it was to his eldest son Atindra Nath Mookerjee that he seems to have looked for his main support in future. That that son would be so to the best of his ability no one knowing the customs of this country can doubt. As for Atindra Nath himself, he entered Government service in 1894. He was in temporary employment till the beginning of 1896, when he was appointed permanently as a clerk in the Arsenal at Rawalpindi, on a salary of Rs. 25 a month. From this time onward one may, I think, consider that his future career was fairly assured. He appears to have lived at Rawalpindi in the house of his uncle who is employed in the Commissariat Department there, and to have taken sick leave for two months in February 1896. He was on his way to rejoin his appointment when he met with the accident which resulted in his death. In examination-in-chief the plaintiff said that his son used to send him Rs. 20 or Rs. 22 a month. In cross-examination he said "from 1894 he went on remitting me Rs. 10, 15, or 20 at a time, but after being permanent he sent me money once or twice. He sent me last Rs. 20 or Rs. 22. I cannot say when it was." Now I am satisfied that if Atindra Nath had lived he would have been a substantial support to the plaintiff, and looking at all the circumstances I think Rs. 1,500 would be a fair sum which the plaintiff should receive as damages in this case. I say which the plaintiff should receive because in dealing with the costs of this suit I think I am bound to see that he shall receive that sum. If I give the costs of this suit to the plaintiff merely as between party and party, his attorney and client costs of this protracted trial would, in all probability, exhaust the larger portion of it. In similar cases where larger damages [494] were given than I feel disposed to give in this case, WESTROPP, C.J., ordered the defendants to pay the costs of the suit as between attorney and client. See Sorabji Ratanji v. G. I. P. Ry. Co., (1870) 7 Bom., (O.C.) 119, note, and Ratanbai v. G. I. P. Railway Co., (1870) 7 Bom., (O.C.) 120, note; and on appeal, (1871) 8 Bom., (O.C.), 130. I shall follow those precedents in this case.

There will be a decree for the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 1,500 with costs on Scale 2 as between attorney and client.

From this decision the defendant Company appealed.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Mr. Hill, and Mr. Hyde appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. Pugh and Mr. A. Chowdhry for the Respondents.

The Advocate-General.—Even on the findings of the learned Judge, the appellants are entitled to judgment; but they do not admit that the findings are properly arrived at.

Railway Companies are not insurers of their passengers; so that the facts alleged in the plaint do not constitute a breach of duty on the part of the appellants. Unless the plaintiff can put his case so high as to say that the defendants should search every passenger entering a carriage, he cannot succeed in this action. In order to make the defendants liable, there must be a neglect on their part to take some reasonable precaution; and the breach of duty alleged should be specifically stated. There must be also a scienter on the part of the defendants; but in both these respects the plaint is demurrable.

It is not for the defendants to disprove negligence on their part, it is for the plaintiff to prove it; and although a high degree of care is required of a Railway Company in the carriage of its passengers, that cannot mean an impracticable degree of caution. The fact that after accident some precaution was taken which was not taken before it is no evidence, by itself, of negligence before the accident—Hart v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Railway Company, (1869) 21 L. T. Exch., 261; and in order to make the [495] defendants liable, it must be shown what precaution they omitted which they ought to have taken.—Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Company, (1871) L. R., 5 E. & I. Ap., 45. The plaintiff must prove the neglect of some duty by the defendants, or want of due care, or knowledge on their part that something dangerous was being carried.

It was not possible for the Company's servants to examine the luggage of every passenger. Section 58 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, provides that every passenger shall, on request, deliver to the railway servants an account in writing containing such a description of the goods he is carrying as may be sufficient to determine what freight he may be charged for them. There is no power to search the luggage; and it is only in cases where there are grounds for suspicion, that a package may be opened. It was a criminal offence to take dangerous goods into a passenger compartment and in no case can the wrongful act of a third party make the Railway Company liable.

Mr. Hill on the same side:—The appellants did not contract to carry the deceased safely or securely, but only safely so far as reasonable care and foresight could avail. That does not mean the utmost possible foresight that a human being could exert. It means all that is reasonably and practically possible—See Nugent v. Smith, (1876) L. R., 1 C. P. D., 423 (437), and that was a case of the carriage of goods, which were completely under the carrier's control. The expression "utmost possible care" must be construed as the "utmost practicable care"—Moss v. Smith, (1850) 9 C. B., 94 (103).

As to the legal obligation on the appellants apart from contract:—The plaint alleges that they allowed fire-works to be carried: but the scienter is wanting. That being so, the legal obligation of the Company must be based on their knowledge or on reasonable grounds of suspicion. There is no guarantee to one passenger that another passenger carries no dangerous goods. Even if the law had cast that guarantee on the Company, it [496] would keep it within the bounds of justice, so as not to impose impracticable duties.—Readhead v. Midland Railway Co., (1867) L. R., 2 Q. B., 413; and on appeal, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 379. In order to constitute negligence, there must be a legal duty to exercise control, and a breach of that duty. But in all cases reasonable conduct is the ultimate test. The degree of control is the paramount factor in determining what is or is not negligence. That factor is not merely determinant as to the proof, but it even changes the nature of the obligation. The reason why the liability of a carrier is so much stricter as regards goods than as regards passengers is because of his greater control over goods. The fallacy in the reasoning of the learned Judge in the Court below lies in the expression "allowed fire-works to be carried," which must be taken to mean that the carriage of fire-works was preventible by the exercise of reasonable and practicable precautions.

A Railway Company must assume that passengers are not infringing the law. A passenger is entitled to take into the compartment anything except articles forbidden by law; and the Company cannot interfere except to prevent, under section 59 of the Railways Act, a fraud on itself. No power to inspect luggage is given unless the Company has reason to suspect the presence of dangerous goods; and no reason is suggested as against the Company in this case. It cannot be alleged that the Company were bound to know the real state of things. For they could only know it by doing an act which they were not entitled to do, viz., opening the passenger's luggage.

Whether the occurrence of an accident is per se evidence of negligence depends on the degree of control exercisable, and on the knowledge not merely of the danger, but the knowledge—derived from experience—as to the probability of an accident occurring if due care be not taken: mere knowledge of the danger is not enough—Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865) 3 H. & C., 596. Unless both these elements co-exist, the plaintiff must fail. It is not enough to show that the accident may have occurred through the negligence of the defendants' servants; the plaintiff must also show [497] something that the defendants might have done but omitted to do—Smith v. Great Eastern Railway Co., (1866) L. R., 2 C. P., 4 (10).

If this case had been tried by a jury, the question for them would have been whether negligence could be predicated, and if so whether it ought to be—Metropolitan Railway Company v. Jackson, (1877) L. R., 3 App. Cas., 193 (197). If the facts proved are equally consistent with negligence or the absence of negligence, the Judge must withdraw the case from the jury—Cotton v. Wood, (1860) 8 C. B. (N.S.) 568; Briggs v. Oliver, (1866) 4 H. & C., 403. In order to render the defendants liable, the plaintiff must show facts more consistent with negligence than with the absence of it—Toomey v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Co., (1857) 3 C. B. (N. S.), 146. The plaintiff must prove that the death of the deceased was attributable to some negligent act or omission of the defendants—Wakelin v. London and South Western Railway Co., (1886) L. R., 12 App. Cas., 41.

Again: the plaintiff must prove that the accident was one which the defendants ought to have foreseen—Cornman v. The Eastern Counties Railway Co., (1859) 4 H. & N., 781. No previous accident of this kind has been proved: therefore there was nothing to show that the defendants could reasonably have foreseen this accident. The onus of proving knowledge on the part of the defendants is also on the plaintiff—Welfare v. London, and Brighton Railway Co., (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 693, where the knowledge in question was the knowledge of the condition of the defendants' own premises.

If, however, the Court should think that the accident itself is evidence of negligence, then the plaintiff did away with his rights, because it follows that he must have known that the fire-works were taken into the carriage. All the reports admitted in evidence in the Court below are not evidence at all, and were inadmissible even though not objected to by the defendants' Counsel.

All that they show is that a certain [498] person made certain statements to a public official in the course of his duty; he was not a servant of the Company, but a Government servant; and therefore his admissions (if any) do not bind the defendants. But if the reports are to be taken as admissions, they must be taken as a whole; and if so, they shew that the fire-works were carried surreptitiously by a passenger. Carrying fire-works is a criminal offence; and we are entitled to assume that the person who took them knew the law, because he was in a trade governed by special regulations. The probabilities, therefore, are that he would be extremely careful to carry them concealed. So that, even if there be a prima facie presumption in this case against the defendants, that presumption is rebutted by the evidence and by the probabilities of the case. Everybody has a right to suppose that a crime will not be committed and to act on that belief—Baxendale v. Bennett, (1878) L. R., 3 Q. B. D., 525 (530); and even apart from any question of crime, it is surely reasonable for every man to assume that his neighbour will not do an illegal act, and to act on that assumption.

Further, there is no statutory obligation on the Railway Company to put up notices warning passengers of the penalties for carrying dangerous goods; and, at the time of this accident, the Company were not working under rules framed under the Railway Act of 1890, but under the Act of 1879, as there had not been time to supply copies in the vernacular of the regulations for which the Company, without being obliged to do so, had applied to the Government.

In Cliff v. Midland Railway Co., (1870) L. R., 5 Q. B., 258, the accident was preventible, for there the defendants had powers the exercise of which would have prevented the possibility of accident; and those powers were exercised after complaints had been made, and after a fatal accident had occurred. The jury found negligence; but the defendants moved for and obtained a new trial.

It makes no difference whether the legal obligation on the passenger is by law or by contract. In this case there was an obligation on the passenger not to take fire-works into the [499] compartment; and the defendants were entitled to rely on his performing that obligation—Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & I., Ap. 45 (60). A passenger cannot impose on the Company any obligation not laid upon them by law; nor can the wrongdoing of one passenger impose any greater obligation on them—Degg v. Midland Railway Co., (1857) 1 H. & N., 773 (781).

If the inspection of luggage is not reasonably possible, the Company are not to be expected to examine all the luggage—Richardson v. Great Eastern Railway Co., (1876) L. R., 1 C. P. D., 342 (344). And in India the duty of examination would be infinitely more difficult than in England, by reason of the numerous religious and caste prejudices. Notice of the presence of dangerous goods is not to be imputed to the Company—see Bevan on Negligence, 2nd edition, p. 1059, and the cases there collected.

In Baldwin v. London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co., (1882) L. R., 9 Q. B. D., 582, the defendants were held liable because they admitted a breach of duty in misdelivering the goods; otherwise, it was the duty of the plaintiff to inform them that the goods were such as to require special care.

Mr. Pugh for the Respondent:—The issue substantially is whether there was or was not such negligence as contributed to this accident. In the carriage of passengers, Railway Companies are bound to use the utmost care, and to do everything that human foresight can suggest to secure the safety of persons using their lines—Story on Bailments, 8th edition, section 601. There is both a common law and a statutory duty cast on them. Their duty as to explosives would be incumbent on them apart from any statute; and how can it be said that they acted consistently with their duty when they allowed gunpowder to be carried in a compartment where they allowed smoking?

Section 47 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, empowers the Company to make rules, and that power is given for the very purpose of meeting cases of this kind; but the defendants have [500] not shown that they took any steps to fulfil their duties in this behalf. Indeed, the section says that they shall make rules; but from the passing of the Act until 1895 they made no rules whatever. Their suspicion is enough for the exercise of the power of inspecting luggage; and a package of this kind cannot be looked upon as the ordinary luggage of a passenger.

True, want of knowledge of law will not excuse any man charged with a crime; but that is a very different thing from saying that every man is presumed to know the law—Martindale v. Falkner, (1846) 2 C. B., 706 (719); 15 L. J., Q. B., 91 (94), approved in The Queen v. Mayor and Corporation of Tewkesbury, (1868) L. R., 3 Q. B., 629 (635). And even if people are to be taken to know the law they cannot be expected to know the bye-laws. But the defendants ask the Court to presume still further that, if anything is done contrary to the law or to their bye-laws, it is done in a secret manner.

The evidence shows that the defendants took no precautions whatsoever at Aligarh with regard to the examination of passengers' luggage. When they did issue notices on the subject, the result was that two prosecutions followed. They suggest that no precautions were possible, so that they clearly acknowledge that none were taken.

Different considerations apply to cases where a duty is imposed—whether by common law, or by statute or contract—and cases where there is no duty—see the authorities collected and considered in Pollock on Contracts (5th edition), p. 416 et seq. The doctrine as to scienter has no application to the present case. The luggage of passengers was under the control of the defendants, so were the carriage into which it was taken, and the stations on the line; therefore the presumption of negligence arises. Even where the Company's trains run on another line, they are bound to make provision for the safety of a passenger who starts on their line—Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., (1880) L. R., 5 C. P. D., 157. The case of Wakelin v. London and South-[501] Western Railway Co., (1886) L. R., 12 App. Cas., 41, is distinguishable, because there was no breach of any duty, inasmuch as the premises on which the accident occurred were not under their control at the time.

Mr. Chowdhry on the same side:—The defendants' own evidence proves them guilty of negligence. All that the plaintiff had to prove was that the carriage took fire, that there were fire-works, and that the line and the train belonged to the defendants; and there is no question about any of these facts.

The reports made by the railway officials would be evidence against the defendants; they are reports made by the railway servants to their superior officers, and in them there was no suggestion of the surreptitious carriage of the fire-works until the Agent made his report after receiving all the other reports.

The unusual nature of the occurrence is an element in determining on whom the onus should fall, and it is unreasonable to throw the onus on the plaintiff. Not only was no evidence produced to contradict the railway inspector's report, but the Company even based their subsequent report on it, and, therefore, it ought to be taken as evidence against them, especially as they did not object to its going in.

Section 54 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, imposes a statutory obligation to exhibit the conditions for the carriage of goods; no evidence has been given that such a notice was exhibited.

The exception in section 72 of the Act applies only to the carriage of goods; therefore the common law as regards the carriage of passengers would be applicable to the Company.

Mr. Hill in reply:—The passage cited from Story on Bailments, section 601, lays down the law as it exists in the United States; but it is not English law and goes very much beyond the point at which English law stops, so far as the acts of a third person are concerned. A Railway Company is not liable for the acts of even its own servants, if those acts are not done in the course and scope of the servants' duty—Cobb v. Great Western Railway Co., (1894) L. R., App. Cas. 419.

C. A. V.

[502] The following judgments were delivered by the Court (MACLEAN C.J., and PRINSEP and AMEER ALI, JJ.): —

Maclean, C. J. -This is an appeal by the East Indian Railway Company from a decision of Mr. Justice P. O'KINEALY, dated the 8th of June 1898, by which he awarded a sum of Rs. 1,500 by way of damages to the plaintiff with the costs of the suit.

The plaintiff is the father and administrator of the estate of one Atindra Nath Mookerjee, who was injured, on the 27th April 1896, while travelling as a passenger on the appellants' line between the stations of Secundrabad and Dadri. Atindra Nath Mookerjee was so badly injured that he died on the 5th of May following. In the Court below, the plaintiff charged the defendants with negligence, on the ground that the communication cord was defective, that proper steps had not been taken in time to bring the train to a standstill, that the brake power of the train was insufficient, and, in that sense, defective, and that the carriage doors were improperly locked. All these issues, however, have been found in favour of the appellant Company; they have not been urged before us by the respondent, and it is unnecessary further to allude to them.

The evidence establishes that Atindra Nath Mookerjee, on the 25th of April 1896, took a third class ticket from Bally to Rawalpindi; that on the 27th April, while on his journey, the carriage in which he was travelling caught fire, that he was badly burnt, and injured by falling through the floor of the carriage, and subsequently died of those injuries.

There can be no reasonable doubt, upon the evidence, that the fire resulted from an explosion of fire-works carried by some fellow-passengers of the injured man in the compartment in question, and the plaintiff's case is that it was through the negligence and want of due care on the part of the servants of the appellant Company, and in violation of their rules, that the fire-works found their way into the carriage. This is denied by the appellant Company.

There has been much discussion, in the course of the argument, as to the actual quantity of fire-works in the carriage when the explosion took place, though it is common ground, that [503] any way, a certain quantity of fire-works or bombs did explode in the carriage, and that several passengers in the train were severely injured by that explosion. Both the passengers who were carrying the fire-works were killed, and any direct evidence as to the quantity is not forthcoming, though much light would, probably, have been thrown upon this particular point, if that which has been styled the "list" of fire-works, or "the order from the Zemindar of Sonepet," and which, with their railway tickets, was found upon the body of one of the men who were conveying the fire-works, had been produced. At one time it was in the hands of the guard, Hyrapiet, a servant of the Company, and was by him apparently handed over to the Police; but it has since disappeared. This is, at least, very unfortunate. Fitzpatrick, the inspector of the Railway Police at Tundla, speaks of the quantity of fire-works as a large quantity, and though that statement must be regarded as a matter of inference rather than of direct and positive knowledge on his part, upon the whole of the materials before us his conclusion strikes me as well-founded, and I am satisfied, that, when the explosion took place, there was a large quantity of fire works in the carriage.

It is contended for the Company that, if the quantity had been large, the fire-works must have been observed by the passengers in the carriage, and reliance is placed upon the two statements of Atindra Nath Mookerjee, to the effect that he did not see any fire-works. This is a matter of surmise and probability only, and is met by the counter suggestion that, whether the fire-works were carried in a basket or in bundles they would probably be placed under the seat, and a passenger, perhaps at the other end of the carriage, might not have observed them. But having regard to the condition of Atindra Nath Mookerjee when he made those statements, too much reliance cannot safely be placed upon them. The question of the actual quantity of fire-works is only material upon that of whether or not they were likely to escape observation, for whether the quantity were large or small, the fire clearly arose from their explosion.

It is proved then that Atindra Nath Mookerjee had paid for his ticket and was a third-class passenger by the defendants' [504] train, that he was travelling as such passenger in the train, that when so travelling a fire resulting from the explosion of a considerable quantity of fire-works carried in the carriage, in which he was travelling broke out in that carriage, that he was severely injured, and that he died of those injuries; and the plaintiff contends, upon that state of facts, that he has made out a prima facie case of negligence against the appellant Company, and that, having made out such prima facie case, the onus is cast upon the defendants of showing that they had taken every reasonable care and precaution to prevent such dangerous goods being carried in a passenger's compartment of their train, a compartment in which, admittedly, smoking is permissible. In other words the plaintiff's contention is that the facts proved or admitted by the Company raise a presumption of negligence, which the Company are bound to rebut.

We have been referred by the appellants to a very large number of cases ranging over a somewhat diversified field of inquiry, many of which appear to me to refer to questions of negligence of a class widely different from that under consideration, and in that view I do not think it would be very profitable to discuss them. The authorities establish that, in providing for the safety of their passengers, it is the duty of a Railway Company to show, at the very least, such a degree of care, as may reasonably be required from them, considering all the circumstances of the case. The care has sometimes been spoken of as "a high degree of care," and it has been said that the Company must show that the accident was one not preventible by any care or skill.

The present case appears to me to range itself under that class of cases where such a prima facie case has been established as to necessitate an answer on the part of the defendants, to satisfy the Court that they have taken all reasonable care and precaution in the matter. A fire in a train is not an ordinary circumstance; a fire in a train resulting from an explosion of a large quantity of fire-works is an extraordinary occurrence, one which raises, at least, a presumption of possible negligence on the part of the Company.

[505] Upon this class of case, which I may designate as the res ipsa loquitur class, there are many authorities, and the one very generally referred to, by reason of the principle formulated by Chief Justice ERLE, is that of Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865) 3 H. & C., 596. Of these cases the strongest in favour of the plaintiff is that of Kearney v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 6 Q. B., 759, whilst the appellants rely upon (amongst other cases) Welfare v. London and Brighton Railway Co., (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 693, and equally upon Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & L., Ap. 45, to which I will refer more particularly in a moment. The latest case in these Courts on this head is that of Choutmull Doogur v. Rivers Steam Navigation Co., (1897) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 786, which has recently been affirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, (1898) Ante., p. 398.

That, however, was a case of damage to goods not of injury to a passenger.

The appellants, however, contend that this class of case has no application to the present, inasmuch as the fire-works were not under their control, but under the control of one of their passengers.

This leads us to consider to what extent the Company has control over luggage carried by their passengers.

The men who were taking the fire-works—there is nothing to show whether they were being carried in baskets or in bundles or how they were being carried—took their tickets and, inferentially, entered the train at Aligarh Station, and there is no evidence to show that any care or precaution whatever was taken at that station to prevent passengers, who might be suspected of carrying dangerous goods, from taking them into a passenger compartment. The Company urge that they have no power to search a passenger's luggage, and that if they have to search every parcel [506] carried by every passenger it would become impracticable to work the passenger traffic of their line.

It is a strange thing to say that a substantial or indeed any quantity of fire-works can be properly described as passenger's luggage, but be that as it may, it would be difficult to say that fire-works are not dangerous goods within the meaning of section 59 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890), and under that section no passenger is entitled to take such goods with him, and any railway servant may refuse to receive such goods for carriage; and if any railway servant has reason to believe that such goods are contained in a package, with respect to which no notice of their nature has been given to the station master or other railway servant in charge of the place, such servant may cause the package to be opened for the purpose of ascertaining its contents. There is, therefore, under certain conditions, a power of search in the officers of the Company. There is not a particle of evidence adduced by the appellant Company to show that they took any precaution at Aligarh to prevent the men from taking the fire-works into the carriage. It is not suggested that there was any crowd at Aligarh Station; the train stopped there for ten minutes; and from the evidence of the guard the men would have to pass through a gate where their tickets were checked. For aught we know these fire-works may have been carried in an open basket, and the servant of the Company—the man at the barrier—may have allowed the men to pass through with the goods so exposed. If that were so, and there is no evidence to show whether it was so or not, it is admitted that the Company would be liable. This was the Hindu marriage season—a time at which, notoriously, fire-works were in demand for marriage festivities, and a time consequently when the Company might not unreasonably be expected to have been specially on the alert.' The circumstances under which the men were enabled to pass the barrier were facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the Company. They might have called the man at the gate who, if it were the fact, would have been able to say that there was nothing in the appearance of the baskets or bundles carried by the men calculated to lead him to suspect that they were carrying such dangerous goods; or they might have called others [507] of their servants at Aligarh to show that reasonable precautions against the carriage by passengers in the compartment of such goods were taken. But they call no one to show this. On the contrary, they contend that it is for the plaintiff to call these witnesses and make out his case of negligence.

When a similar argument was advanced in the case of Byrne v. Boodle, (1863) 2 H. & C., 722 (728), it was characterised by the late Chief Baron POLLOCK as "preposterous." It must be remembered that the railway station at Aligarh, the arrangements at the station, the line, the train and the carriages, are each and all under the control of the defendants, and I cannot bring my mind to think that, when the plaintiff had proved what he did, it was not incumbent on the Company to show that they exercised every reasonable care and precaution to prevent the fire-works being taken into the carriage. I am not prepared to accept the contention of the Company that they have no control over the luggage carried by their passengers.

With respect to the case of Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., there the accident arose under circumstances, and from a cause, quite outside the control of the Company, and it was consequently held that the latter were not liable. The reasoning of the various judgments in that case shows that that was the real ratio decidendi; but it would be materially extending the principle of that case if it were held to apply to the present.

It is however not so much upon the decision itself in that case that the appellants rely, as upon the observations of the late Mr. Justice WILLES, when the case was in the Court of Common Pleas, (1838) L. R., 3 C. P., 593. That learned and distinguished Judge says: "It is necessary for the plaintiff to establish by evidence circumstances from which it may be fairly inferred that there is reasonable probability that the accident resulted from the want of some precaution which the defendant might and ought to have resorted to." To my mind the plaintiff in this case has brought himself within this definition; he has established such circumstances as fairly warrant such an inference as is referred to. It is a fair [508] inference from the circumstances that there is reasonable probability that the accident resulted from the want of some precaution which might have been taken by the defendants at Aligarh Station, and which, if taken, might have resulted in preventing these fire-works being carried by a passenger into a passenger compartment. The defendants might have shown, what, if any, precautions were taken, but they have not condescended to do so.

For these reasons the judgment of the Court below must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed, and having regard to the length of time which the argument has occupied—I am not suggesting that it was too long—and upon grounds similar to those given by Mr. Justice O'KINEALY, with costs as between attorney and client.

Prinsep, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Ameer Ali, J.—Before dealing with the main and substantive question in this case, I desire to make a passing observation on the appellants' contention that the plaint does not disclose, with sufficient precision, the character of the negligence charged against the defendant Company. On this point it is enough to observe that if the allegation in the plaint was considered by the defendants as not reasonably explicit, it was open to them to require the plaintiff to supply the defect. No step, however, appears to have been taken, and the parties went to trial on the single issue of fact, viz., whether the defendants were or were not guilty of negligence so as to make them liable on the action.

Now, it may be regarded as settled law that in the case of carriers of passengers under statutory powers, there exists an express duty, independently of any implied contract, to carry them safely. This duty imposes on the carrier the obligation of exercising the utmost care and caution consistent with human foresight and diligence. I need only refer to the following cases among others in support of the proposition which I have enunciated—Collett v. London and North-Western Railway Co., (1851) 16 Q. B., 984; Marshall v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway Co., (1857) 11 C. B., 655; Austin v. Great Western Railway Co., (1867) L.R., 2 Q. B., 442.

[509] In Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., (1880) L. R., 5 C. P. D., 157, to which I shall have presently to refer in detail, THE SINGER, L.J., pointed out in the clearest terms that the benefit which a carrying company derived, directly or indirectly, from the carriage of passengers imposed upon it the corresponding obligation of taking due and reasonable care for their safety. A violation of the duty thus imposed on a carrying company, an omission on their part to take such due and reasonable care to insure the safety of their passengers whom they invite to travel by their carriages, is considered as negligence. Proceeding on this principle the learned Judge in the Court below has held in this case that the defendants had omitted in fact to take the care which was incumbent on them to prevent the introduction into the carriage in which the plaintiff's son was travelling of the dangerous articles, the explosion of which caused the accident. And it is with this finding that we are now concerned. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that the learned Judge in the Court below has wrongly thrown the onus on the defendants whereas it lay upon the plaintiff to prove negligence, that he has imposed an obligation on them not warranted by law, and that in considering the question of omission on their part he has overlooked the fact that it is the amount of control possessed by the Company over the act or acts complained of that determines their liability.

These, in substance, represent the principal objections urged against the lower Court's judgment. If I understand the matter aright there is no fixed rule as to onus; each case must depend on its own special facts; in some instances the situation of the parties and the nature of the accident, or the circumstances leading to it, may give rise to a legal presumption of negligence against the defendants; in others it may be necessary for the plaintiff to establish affirmatively actual negligence before the Company can be made liable.—Byrne v. Boadle, (1863) 2 H. & C., 722; Cotton v. Wood, (1860) 8 C. B. (N.S.), 568; Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865) 3 H. & C., 596; and [510] Kearney v. London and Brighton Railway Co., (1870) L. R., 5 Q. B., 411, furnish examples of the first class of cases. In Scott v. London Dock Co., (1865) 3 H. & C., 596, the majority of the Judges held that where the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care. In Kearney v. London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Co., (1870) L. R., 5 Q. B., 411, the plaintiff was injured by the fall of a brick, while passing under a Railway bridge extending over the highway. The bridge rested on perpendicular brick walls, having pilasters, and from the top of one of these pilasters the brick fell, shortly after the passing of a train. It was held that these facts raised a presumption of negligence against the defendants. In this case, COCKBURN, C.J., after stating the principle applicable to the case, said as follows :—

"The Company who have constructed this bridge were bound to construct it in a proper manner (there was no evidence, however, that it was not so constructed) and to use all reasonable care and diligence in keeping it in such a state of repair that no damage from its defective condition should occur to those who passed under it, the public having a right to pass under it. Now, we have the fact that a brick falls out of this structure and injures the plaintiff. The proximate cause appears to have been the looseness of the brick, and the vibration of a train passing over the bridge acting upon the defective condition of the brick. It is clear, therefore, that the structure in reference to this brick was out of repair. It is clear that it was incumbent on the defendants to use reasonable care and diligence, and I think the brick being too loose affords prima facie a presumption that they had not used reasonable care and diligence. It is true that it is possible that, from changes in the temperature, a brick might get into the condition in which this brickwork appears to have been from causes operating [511] so speedily as to prevent the possibility of any diligence and care applied to such a purpose, intervening in due time, so as to prevent an accident. But inasmuch as our experience of these things is that bricks do not fall out when brickwork is kept in a proper state of repair, I think, where an accident of this sort happens, the presumption is that it is not the frost of a single night or of many nights, that would cause such a change in the state of this brickwork as that a brick would fall out in this way, and it must be presumed that there was not that inspection and that care on the part of the defendants, which it was their duty to apply." The case was carried to the Exchequer Chamber where the judgment of the majority below was unanimously affirmed, (1871) L. R., 6 Q. B., 759.

Before I refer to the decisions relied upon by the appellants, I desire to call attention to the facts of the present case. The plaintiff's son was proceeding to Rawalpindi in the Panjab, by the defendants' line, with a ticket purchased by or for him at Bally. At Aligarh two passengers entered his compartment with some bombs and catherine-wheels. Between Secundrabad and Dadri further up the line the fire-works exploded with such fearful effect that the doors of the compartment were blown out, the carriage was set on fire, eleven out of the fourteen passengers in the compartment were so seriously injured that they died within a short time, and considerable damage was done to the rolling stock of the Company. The facts are abundantly clear upon the official reports of the Company's servants to their superior officers which have been put in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff with the consent of the defendants' Counsel. They would probably be evidence as to the actual facts stated in them under section 35 of the Evidence Act. It was contended that as in some of these letters phrases like "surreptitiously carried" or "clandestinely carried" occurred, they ought to be taken as evidence against the plaintiff, to disestablish the case of negligence. No fact is given which would justify the officer using the expression in saying that the bombs were carried clandestinely. So far as we can judge it was a mere hypothesis or opinion absolutely of no [512] evidential value. Besides, it is noteworthy that the expression does not occur in the earlier reports or letters, but only in the later ones when presumably the officers of the Company had awakened to a sense of the gravity of the situation and of the liability involved in the dispute. These facts which are more fully set forth in the lucid and exhaustive judgment of the learned Judge in the Court below, raise in my mind a strong presumption of gross carelessness on the part of the Company's servants, and cast upon the defendants the onus of showing that there was no neglect of reasonable precautions on their side, and that the explosives were really carried in a manner that avoided detection. These matters were within the cognizance of the defendants, but no attempt was made to discharge that onus. On the contrary it has been strenuously argued either that no precaution was possible, or that they do not know what precaution could be taken, which comes to the same thing.

Ex post facto evidence has no bearing on the question whether due or reasonable care was or was not taken, but when a contention of the character just referred to is vigorously pressed by a learned Counsel, the fact that subsequent to the accident steps have been taken which have in a great measure obviated the risk, becomes highly relevant. It is in evidence upon the reports that a special watch placed by the Company has succeeded in stopping in several instances the carriage of fire-works and in the conviction of offenders. In this connection I may observe that the suggestion of Counsel that these fire-works were, in order to avoid detection, carried tied up in a bundle, is not only not founded on any data but is also improbable. It appears from the depositions of the witness, that the bombs had bamboos eight to ten inches long stuck into them; we know what catherine-wheels are like. To suppose that these things would be carried tied up in a bundle, which would simply spoil the things, is absurd. However that may be, it is enough to say that the defendants have given no evidence as to how they were carried, or that they were in fact carried so concealed as to escape the notice of the Company's servants.

[513] Much stress was laid on Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & L., Ap. 45, and Welfare v. London and Brighton Railway Co., (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 693, as furnishing the guiding principle in cases relating to the liability of Railway Companies. In Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & L., Ap. 45, it appears that the Corporation of London was authorised to execute certain works over the line of the Metropolitan Railway Company. These works consisted partly in placing heavy iron girders upon the walls running along the line of railway, and were, therefore, works in the execution of which some danger was involved. The Railway Company had no control over these works, which were executed by contractors, engaged by the Corporation. By the negligence of the contractors one of the girders fell on a passing train and injured the plaintiff. It was held that it was not the duty of the Railway Company to assume that the contractors would be negligent or to take precautions against their possible negligence, and that the occurrence of the accident did not raise any presumption of negligence on the part of the Company.

In Welfare v. London and Brighton Railway Company, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 693, the plaintiff who was standing under a portico looking at a time table was injured by the fall of a timber and a roll of zinc from the roof which was undergoing repair. There was nothing to show that the defendants knew or had the means of knowing that the roof needed repairing, or that there was any obligation on their part to take steps to know the condition of the roof. It was held therefore that the plaintiff had failed to make out a case of negligence against the Company. The facts of these two cases differentiate them altogether from the case before us. In Wakelin v. London and South-Western Railway Co., (1886) L. R., 12 App. Cas., 41, negligence was established against the Company, but inasmuch as the plaintiff failed to show the connection between the negligence, and the cause of her husband's death, her action was dismissed. Lord WATSON stated his view in that case in the following words: "It appears to me that in all such cases the liability of the defendant Company must rest upon these facts, in the first place [514] that there was some negligent act or omission on the part of the Company or their servants, which materially contributed to the injury or death complained of, and in the second place, that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the injured or deceased person. But it does not, in my opinion, necessarily follow that the whole burden of proof is cast upon the plaintiff. That it lies upon the plaintiff to prove the first of these propositions does not admit of dispute. Mere allegation or proof that the Company were guilty of negligence is altogether irrelevant; they might be guilty of many negligent acts or omissions, which might possibly have occasioned injury to somebody, but had no connection whatever with the injury for which redress is sought, and, therefore, the plaintiff must allege and prove, not merely that they were negligent, but that their negligence caused or materially contributed to the injury." And Lord FITZGERALD said as follows: "There was evidence also intended to establish negligence on the part of the defendants in the absence of due and proper precautions for the safety of the public using that footpath. It seems to me that there was evidence of negligence, but it did not go so far as to establish that such negligence led to the death of Wakelin."

In the present case there can be no question that the negligence of the defendants, assuming that there was any, was the causa causans of the accident. It was urged on the authority of Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & I., App., 45, that, as the defendants have no control over the passengers or over what they introduce into the carriages as their personal luggage, the Company could not be liable for negligence. I have already pointed out that in Daniel v. Metropolitan Railway Co., (1871) L. R., 5 E. & I., App., 45, the Railway Company had no authority over the contractors. Is it correct to say that the defendants had no control over their passengers? Does not the whole argument proceed on a pure assumption of fact? Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Co., (1880) L. R., 5 C. P. D., 157, has more analogy to the present case. There the plaintiff, as it appeared in the Court of Appeal, had taken a return ticket at the railway station at Richmond, which belonged to the South-Western Company, for Hammersmith belonging [515] to the District Railway Company. The latter had running powers on the South-Western Company's line: and the plaintiff on his return journey from Hammersmith to Richmond in a carriage of the defendant Company was injured whilst alighting from the train. In the action brought by him it was contended on behalf of the District Railway Company that the contract with the plaintiff having been made by the South-Western Railway that Company were liable and not the defendants: and, secondly, that as the accident arose from the improper construction of the platform at Richmond, which was under the sole control of the South-Western, the District Railway Company were not liable. Both these points are thus dealt with by BAGGALLAY, L. J.: "The train by which the plaintiff travelled was in every sense their own; the locomotive and carriages belonged to them, the drivers, guards and other servants in charge of it were in their employment, and in their pay, the line over which it ran was in part their own, and over the other part they had running powers, and in respect of that portion of the line over which they had, and were exercising, running powers, they had the same duties and were under the same obligations relatively to their passengers, and to the public generally, as they had and were under in respect of the portion of the line which was their own. The plaintiff was admittedly properly travelling by their line; he had, in the sense in which the word is ordinarily used, been invited to travel by it." And he went on to add: "I should not have adverted to this subject [the question relating to the platform] had it not been suggested in argument that the accident was occasioned to the plaintiff, not by reason of any improper construction of the carriage in which the plaintiff travelled, but by reason of the improper construction of the platform, and that the construction and maintenance of the platform was under the sole control of the South-Western Company; but admitting the fact to be so, as it possibly is, it was the duty of the defendants either to adapt the foot-board or step of their carriage to the platform it would have to approach or to arrange for an alteration being made in the platform itself. To carry their passengers in carriages which were in any respect or for any purpose dangerous was, in my opinion, a misfeasance rather than a nonfeasance."

[516] Now, what was the position of the Company in the present case? The carriage in which the plaintiff's son was travelling was theirs, it was entirely in the charge and under the control of their servants; the platform at Aligarh was under their control, the gate or barrier through which the passengers had to pass to get on to the platform was held, it would appear from the evidence, by one of their servants; the law had vested them with the fullest powers to make rules against the introduction of combustibles and explosives into the trains. And if, in spite of these powers and facilities, they omit or fail to take sufficient precautions, as in the absence of any rebutting evidence we must assume they did, their liability cannot be questioned. The learned Judge in the Court below has not, in my opinion, cast a higher obligation than the law imposes, the duty of taking due and reasonable care for the safety of passengers whom they invite to travel by their line.

For these reasons I agree in dismissing the appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Kadambini Debi.....Plaintiff

Kali Kumar Haldar.....Defendant.*

Easement—Light and air—Partition of a joint-family house—Effect of Partition by a consent decree where the decree does not reserve any right to the use of light and air—Implied grant of easement upon severance of tenement.

On partition of a family dwelling house by a consent decree, the plaintiff claimed a right to the passage of light and air necessary for the enjoyment of his share of the building in the way in which it was enjoyed at the time [517] of the partition, though no such right was expressly reserved in the decree. The defence was that the principle of an implied grant of easement upon severance of the tenement should not be applied to the case, but that the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit.

Held, that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience should be applied to the case, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the right claimed, even in the absence of any express provision in the decree reserving such right.

Quere: Whether the principle of an implied grant of easement in severance of tenements would apply in a case where the partition was effected by a decree of the Court in a contested suit and not by consent of parties.

THE facts of the case were shortly these: One Mani Lal Banerjee and the plaintiff were in joint possession of a plot of land with a building thereon. Mani Lal brought a suit for partition of the said plot of land, which ended in a consent decree, and a partition was effected. Mani Lal got the northern portion, and the plaintiff got the southern portion of the building. On the southern portion there was a one-storied building with some doors and windows opening to the north. Mani Lal's share was purchased by the defendant. Prior to the purchase by the defendant, Mani Lal began erecting a new building on the northern portion of the block. The defendant after his purchase took up the work of the building where Mani Lal had left it and completed the construction of the southern wall as a new building, and a verandah was being put up projecting towards the plaintiff's house, which the plaintiff alleged would probably be an obstruction to the free access of light and air through the doors and windows of her house. Under these circumstances she brought a suit for a declaration of her right to the passage of light and air through the doors and windows of her house, for removal of the verandah, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from extending a certain roof close to the said doors and windows.

The defence (inter alia) was that the plaintiff was not entitled to the right claimed, no such right having been reserved in her favour in the partition decree.

The Munsif found in favour of the plaintiff and granted the [518] injunction prayed for. On appeal the Lower Appellate Court reversed the decree of the

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1103 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 21st of May 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Sasi Kumar Ghose, Munsif of Alipur, dated the 7th of December 1896.

Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the decree in the partition suit, and as that decree did not reserve any right to the passage of light and air, such as the plaintiff claimed, she was not entitled to it.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Babu Basunta Kumar Bose, and Babu Horendra Nath Mookerjee, for the Appellant.

Sir Griffith Evans¹, and Babu Jogesh Chundra De, for the Respondent.

Mr. Woodroffe for the Appellant.—The effect of the consent decree was that the plaintiff was entitled to enjoy the building with the easements which were attached to the same at the time of the partition: See the cases of Ratanji Hormasji v. Fdalji Hormasji, (1871) 8 Bom., H. C. O. C., 181; Amutool Hussool v. Joomuck Singh, (1875) 24 W. R., 345; Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 956; and Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 797. The plaintiff would be entitled to the easement claimed, as it was apparent and continuous, and necessary for enjoying the share as it was enjoyed when the partition took effect: see Purshotam Sakharani v. Durgoji Tukaram, (1890) I. L. R., 14 Bom. 452. The following cases were also cited in the course of the argument:—Whaley v. Dawson, (1805) 2 Sch. & Lef., 367, 372; Wheelton v. Burrows, (1879) I. R., 12 Ch. D., 31; Allen v. Taylor, (1880) L. R., 16 Ch. D., 355; Phillips v. Low, (1892) 1 L. R., Ch. D., 47; Barnes v. Loach, (1879) L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 494; Compton v. Richards, (1814) 1 Price, 27; Swansborough v. Coventry, (1832) 9 Bing., 305 (309); and Pearson v. Spencer, (1863) 3 B. & S., 761.

Mr. Woodroffe in reply.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for a declaration of her right to the passage of light and air through certain doors and windows, for the removal of certain obstructions to the same, and for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from extending a certain roof close to some of those doors and windows referred to in the plaint.

The defence was that the plaintiff was not entitled to the right claimed, there being no such right reserved in her favour in the decree for partition by which the building, to which the right to the passage of light and air is said to appertain, was allotted to the plaintiff's share.

* The first Court found for the plaintiff to this extent, namely, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from extending the roof, or hanging verandah, and it gave the plaintiff a decree accordingly.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the first Court's decree and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the rights of the parties must be determined with reference to the decree in the partition suit, and as that decree does not reserve any right to light and air, such as the plaintiff claims in her favour, she is not entitled to a decree.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding upon the facts found that the plaintiff is not entitled to the right claimed.

It is argued for the plaintiff that the effect of the partition decree, which was a decree by consent, was to entitle the plaintiff [520] to enjoy the building in question with those apparent and continuous quasi-easements which were attached to the same and which were necessary for the enjoyment of the building in the way in which it was enjoyed at the time of the partition.

In support of this contention several cases have been cited, of which it is necessary only to refer to the following, namely, Ratanji Hormasji v. Fidalji Hormusji, (1871) 8 Bom. H. C., O. C., 181; Amuttol Russool v. Jhoomuck Singh, (1875) 24 W. R., 345; Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor, (1882) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 956; and Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 797.

On the other hand it is contended for the respondent that the rule of English law which implies a grant of an easement upon severance of tenements is one that does not apply to this country, that even if such a rule could apply to a case of severance by the act of parties it can have no application to a case like this, where severance is effected by a decree of Court, and that, in a case like the present, the rights of the parties should be determined solely with reference to the decree made in the partition suit.

No doubt the rights of the parties must be primarily determined with reference to the terms of the decree in the partition suit. If the decree had contained any express provision one way or another bearing on the present point, such provision would have to be given effect to quite irrespective of any rule of law with regard to an implied grant of an easement upon severance of tenements. But there is no express provision in the decree bearing upon the present question.

One thing, however, is clear from the terms of the decree in the partition suit, that the decree was made by consent of parties; that what was divided was not merely the land, but the land with the building standing on it; and that a certain portion of the land with the buildings, as indicated in the plaint referred to in the decree, is allotted to the plaintiff and a certain other portion to the defendant.

[521] That being so, the question is whether the appellant who had allotted to her a portion of the house, that is the land with the building standing thereon, had that portion allotted to her with these apparent and continuous quasi-easements, which are necessary for the enjoyment of the building as a building, or whether she got simply the land allotted to her with the building then standing thereon, which might any day by the action of her co-sharer be converted into an uninhabitable building.

There being no enactment of the Legislature applicable to a case like this, the question we have stated will have to be answered with reference to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience; and the Courts in this country have considered the rule of English law known as the doctrine of implied grant of easements upon severance of tenements, as being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. This will appear from the cases to which we have referred above.

It was urged that the question, whether the rule applied to a case in which severance is effected by a decree of Court, was raised in the case of Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi, (1897) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 797, but was considered by the learned Judges who tried that case to be one of considerable difficulty and was left undetermined; and that the rule of implied grant of easements ought not to apply to such cases because that rule is based either upon the principle that no man can derogate from his own grant or upon a presumption as to the intention of the parties by whom severance is effected; and neither of these two can apply to a case where severance is made by a decree of Court.

No doubt there is considerable force in this argument, but it is unnecessary to decide the broad question in this particular case, the partition here being effected, not by the Court as in a contested suit, but by consent of parties, the Court merely recording that consent.

That being so, we are not precluded from applying to this case the principle of presumed grant of easements upon severance of tenements.

It was further contended that we should not apply to a [522] case where parties come to a partition the rules applicable to a case where the owner of an entire tenement alienates a portion, or simultaneously alienates different portions of the whole to different persons; and that in a case where a partition is effected by parties the dominant consideration in their minds is that each should acquire a portion which he could enjoy without interference by his co-sharer. But there is another and a more important matter to consider, and that is this: In dividing property, the value of each divided portion ordinarily is assessed with reference to its existing condition, and in the present case there is nothing to show that any other consideration guided the parties.

On a full consideration of these matters we think that it would accord best with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience to hold that the plaintiff by the partition in question got the portion allotted to her, with the passages for light and air which are found by the first Court to be necessary for the enjoyment of that portion in the way in which it used to be enjoyed, and that the absence of any express provision in the decree does not stand in the way of the plaintiff's claiming the right to those passages for light and air.

It was urged that if the decree of the Court of Appeal below is set aside, the case ought to go back. We have considered the grounds of appeal urged before the Lower Appellate Court by the defendant, and we do not think that any question of fact was raised in the appeal for the decision of which a remand would be necessary.

The questions raised were all in substance questions of law which have been disposed of by the observations made above.

The result then is that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court will be set aside, and that of the first Court restored with costs in this and the Lower Appellate Court.

Muhammad Mehndi Ali Khan.....Representative of Plaintiff

versus

Muhammad Yasin Khan and others.....Defendants.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876), sections 121, 123—Transfer of shares of under-proprietors in arrears of rent—Right to interest on rent from transferee—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), section 141.

Under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, sections 121, 123, the shares of defaulting under-proprietors were transferred to three of them who offered to pay. The present suit was brought by the superior proprietor, the talukhdar, in whose estate the mehal was comprised, against the whole body of under-proprietors, for arrears of rent accrued, while the term of the above transfer was running.

Held, that the provision in section 123 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876 to the effect that such transfer shall not affect the joint liability of the co-sharers of the mehal, had not the effect of charging the co-sharers other than the three transferees with any liability for rent accrued during the term of the transfer.

Interest was also claimed, but as to this it was held, that under-proprietors were not tenants within the meaning of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, section 141, providing for payment of interest on rents due from tenants APPEAL from a decree (1st November 1894) of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, affirming a decree (14th October 1890) of the Deputy Commissioner of Sultanpur.

This suit was brought on the 4th June 1890 under the provisions of clause 2, section 108, of the Oudh Rent Act, XXII of 1886, in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, by the father of the present appellant, the talukhdar of Hasampur, as superior proprietor of mehal Sewar, within the talukh, against the under proprietors of that mehal for the recovery of Rs. 10,761, arrears of rent, with interest thereon, for the years 1294, 1297, Fasli, alleged to be due from the defendants as a joint body, numbering forty-four.

[524] Under sections 121 and 123 of Act XVII of 1876, the Oudh Land Revenue Act, the shares of all but three of the under-proprietors had been transferred to those three named Hubdar Khan, father of Yasin, the first respondent, to Gujadhari Singh, the second, and to Roghubar Singh, the third, for a term of ten years. That was effected on the 10th September 1881.

The question raised and decided on this appeal related to the liability of the original co-sharers of the mehal to be charged with rent due to the superior proprietor, that liability being now alleged on the default of the above three to pay rent accrued due on the whole mehal since the transfer.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

For the defence it was answered that only the three, to whom the ten years' transfer had been made, were liable for the rent claimed; all the others being out of possession and having no management of the property. It was also contended, on the issue of their liability, that upon this question there had been already an adjudication by a former Deputy Commissioner on a claim for rent, which was decreed against the three transferees only down to 1291 Faslî. That had been decided between the parties, or those whom the present litigants represented, on the 10th March 1884.

The Court of First Instance decided this suit in favour of the under-proprietors, deprived for the above stated period, holding them not liable in consequence of the transfer. But, on concluding his judgment, the Deputy Commissioner observed that it was premature to decide whether the saleable interest of the three defendants, by whom he decreed the rent to be payable, as the result of their having possession of the whole mehal, was limited to their own rights as three under-proprietors, or extended to the rights of the other under-proprietors as well.

The judgment of the Judicial Commissioner and of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, forming the Court, was that the question of the liability of the respondents, other than the three transferees, was a matter already adjudged in the former decision above referred to (section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code).

On the plaintiff's appeal,—

[525] Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellant, argued that there was error in the judgments of the Courts below. The transfer had been made with liability continuing on the village; and the question should have been held to be whether the Deputy Commissioner had not made a transfer of only the temporary possession of the village, with the right, title, and interest remaining in the village community of under-proprietors. There was no dispute as to the proceeding that had been taken under the Rent Act, XIX of 1868, and the Land Revenue Act, XVII of 1876. The question had not been fully contested in 1884; and the Appellate Court should have disposed of the question arising on the merits, and on the construction of section 123. The argument was that the transfer for ten years had not operated to deprive the landlord of his right over the sub-settlement tenure, mehal Sewar, as his security, and as a tenure upon which he held a lien for the rent due to him. Independently of the express reservation of liability in section 123, the joint liability of the co-sharers in the mehal rested upon general principle, and could only be taken away by some definite enactment. The question had been really raised whether the saleable interest of the under-proprietors was limited, after a general default by the village community, to the interests of three judgment-debtors to whom the tenure had been transferred for ten years; in other words, whether the charge for the rent on the village extended to the interests of the other under-proprietors, or did not so extend. It was submitted that it should have been decided that the under-proprietary title of the respondents as a body was liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of the claim of the superior proprietor for rent in arrear. It was a further question whether interest was not payable on the arrears of rent for which decrees had been made. Reference was made to the Oudh Rent Act, XXII of 1886, section 141.

The respondents did not appear.

Afterwards, on the 10th December, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.—The plaintiff in this suit is the talukhdar of Hasampur. The first three defendants were at the institution [526] of the suit transferees of the mehal Sewar, part of the talukh, for the remainder of a term of 10 years. The other 44 defendants were entitled to sub-proprietary rights within the same mehal, subject to the transfer. The plaintiff is entitled to rent in respect of the entire mehal amounting to about Rs. 2,670 per annum. His suit is brought for arrears of rent which accrued while the term was running. The transferees have no defence to the suit. The other 44 defendants assert that they are not liable, and so it has been held first by the Deputy Commissioner and afterwards by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. No one has appeared to oppose the talukhdar's appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

The transfer was effected in the year 1881 by the Deputy Commissioner acting under powers given by the Oudh Rent Act of 1868, section 125, and the Oudh Land Revenue Act of 1876, section 121. It seems that for some years the under-proprietors had failed to pay rent, that the Deputy Commissioner had entered into management under the Rent Act without any beneficial result, and after a while had recourse to the powers given by the Revenue Act to transfer the shares of the defaulters to the three defendants, who were also defaulting shareholders, but were backed up by a mahajun, who found the requisite funds. From the date of the transfer the other co-shareis were no longer in legal possession, except that a certain quantity of nyjote or sir land was reserved to some of them at rents stated in the Deputy Commissioner's order.

Each of the parties has contended that the point in issue has been previously decided in his favour and cannot be re-opened. In 1884 the plaintiff brought a similar suit in which the defendants other than the transferees denied their liability, and the then Deputy Commissioner Mr. Harrington gave the plaintiff a decree against the three transferees only. In 1885 the plaintiff again brought a similar suit, which being for a smaller amount was brought in the Court of an inferior range of jurisdiction, that of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, which would not be competent to entertain the present suit. The learned Judge decided in favour of the talukhdar on the ground which will be mentioned presently.

[527] The Deputy Commissioner in this suit held that he ought to decide it on its own merits, and he held that, however the decree might work out in execution against the transferees, which it was premature to decide, the plaintiff could not have a decree against anybody else. The Judicial Commissioners took the view that the judgment of 1884, being made by a Court competent to decide the present case, is binding now, whereas that of 1885, being made by a Court not so competent, is not. Therefore they do not decide the suit on its merits. Without at all intimating that the Judicial Commissioners have erred, their Lordships doubt whether the judgment of 1884, which is the only evidence before them of that suit, sufficiently discloses what was really contested and decided there, so that they can confidently hold the present issue to be res judicata. In that judgment it appears that the plaintiff admitted the plea of the defendants consequently upon the admission of the three transferees that they were liable. It may possibly have been that the plaintiff was satisfied with the security of the transferees for the smaller amount then in dispute, and did not choose to contest the disputed point. It is safer to pass by this point without expressing any opinion upon it.

As to the merits Mr. Arathoon has not succeeded in impressing their Lordships with any substantial doubts. It is a startling thing to be told that under-proprietors, whose beneficial interest has been transferred by an official act to persons who thereby become possessors of the whole mehal, still remain liable to pay rent to the talukhdar. To produce that result the appellant relier on section 123 of the Land Revenue Act, which provides that the procedure of transfer shall not affect the joint liability of the co-sharers of the mehal. That provision was the basis of the judgment 1885, in which the learned Judge observed with much truth that "apparently the principle would seem to be entailing hardship on the excluded proprietors, for these are not in possession of their shares; on the other hand the transferees are in possession and they alone should be held liable for the talukhdar's demand." Fortunately the language of the Act is not calculated to work such a glaring injustice. Such liability as the co-sharers incur, whether to the Government or [528] to the talukhdar, is to remain joint as before; but there is no provision for charging them with any liability at all when they have been deprived of the property in respect of which liability arises. In fact they have ceased for the time to be co-sharers, and during that time they have no liability, joint or other, directly to the talukhdar.

Then Mr Arathoon relies on the fact that sir land is reserved for a number, by no means all, of the defendants. The answer is that no claim in respect of that land has been raised in this suit. Probably no such claim exists, but it is sufficient to say now that, if there is any, it must rest on quite different grounds to the claim for rent issuing out of the whole talukh, and must raise quite different issues which have never been tried.

A minor point in the appeal relates to the talukhdar's claim for interest upon arrears of rent due from the three transferees. It is stated by the Deputy Commissioner that interest on arrears of revenue is not chargeable against talukhdars, and he holds that arrears of rent due from sub-proprietors should be subject to the same incident. The Rent Act of 1886, section 141, provides for interest on rents due from tenants, but Mr. Arathoon does not contend that these sub-proprietors are tenants, and he cannot adduce any other law by which such arrears are made to carry interest.

The appeal fails on all grounds. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss it.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Order amending sale-certificate—Order granting application for review of order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 244—

Question relating to execution of decree.

No appeal lies from an order granting an application for the amendment of a sale-certificate.

Bhimal Das v. Ganesha Koer, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 658, approved.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are as follows :—

The auction-purchaser, who was also the decree-holder, made an application on the 26th of October 1895, in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge at Arrah, for delivery of possession of two plots of land purchased ; but the application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the 7th of December 1895, on the ground that the boundaries of the plots of land, as given in the application, did not tally with those given in the sale-certificate. Thereupon the auction-purchaser presented a petition, purporting to be an application for a review of the order of the 7th of December 1895, and praying for a rectification of the sale-certificate as to boundaries. This application was treated by the Subordinate Judge as one for review under section 623 of the Civil Procedure Code ; and on the 13th of June 1896, the Court granted the review and set aside the order complained of. Eventually, after going into evidence, the Subordinate Judge passed an order on the 2nd September 1897, amending the sale-certificate in the manner applied for, as regards plot No. 2 only.

[530] The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court against the order of the lower Court, dated the 2nd of September 1897, and also took objection to the order, dated the 13th of June 1896.

Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Mahabir Sahay, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Gregory, and Babu Makhan Lal, for the Respondent.

On behalf of the respondent a preliminary objection was taken that the appeal did not lie.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 2nd September 1897, directing that a sale-certificate granted to the auction-purchaser—the decree-holder at whose instance a certain property was sold—be amended, as prayed for by the said auction-purchaser.

It appears that the auction-purchaser had previously made an application for delivery of possession in accordance with the boundaries which he set forth as the correct boundaries of the lands which had been sold ; but his prayer was refused on the 7th December 1895, upon the ground that the boundaries as set forth by him did not agree with those in the certificate of sale. An application was subsequently made on the 27th February 1896, for amendment of the sale-certificate. It was treated as an application for review under section 623 of the Code; and a review was granted on the 13th June 1896. An investigation was then ordered, the result of which was that on the 2nd September 1897, an order was made, directing the amendment of the sale-certificate in the manner applied for by the auction-purchaser as far as one of the plots, viz., No. 2, was concerned. In this appeal, the propriety of the order of the 2nd of September 1897, as also that of the order dated the 13th June 1896, granting the review, have been questioned. The respondent, however, has raised a preliminary objection upon the ground that no appeal lies to this Court against the order complained against. We think that this objection must prevail. The Code does not provide for an appeal [531] against such an order. The only section of the Code which the appellant relies upon is section 244, it being contended that the question raised was one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. We are unable to accept this contention as correct; for the decree itself has already been executed, and no question now arises in relation to the execution thereof, the only question being whether the certificate given to the auction-purchaser gives a right description of the property sold. In this view, we are supported by the case of Bhumal Das v. Ganesh Koer, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 658, decided by TREVELYAN and STEVENS, J.J. We hold that this appeal is incompetent, and must therefore be dismissed.

We have, however, been asked to deal with this appeal as an application under section 622 of the Code, but we do not think we ought to do so in the present proceedings.

We make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Attachment—Attachment before judgment, Effect of—Alienation during attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 483 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 276.

Any private alienation of a property attached before judgment, during the continuance of the attachment, is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1168 of 1897, against the decree of A. Mackie, Esq., District Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 15th of May 1897, affirming the decree of Moulvie Ali Ahmed, Munsif of Mozufferpore, dated the 28th of July, 1896.

The effect of an attachment of a property under the Civil Procedure Code, whether made before or after decree, is the same provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place.

Raj Chunder Roy v. Isser Chunder Roy, (1865) Bourke, O. C., 139, referred to.

[532] THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are as follows :—

The defendants (1st party) Jangi Lal, Bhagwati Pershad, and Inderdan Pershad, brought a suit on a bond against the defendants (2nd party), Harihar Singh, Posa Singh, and Ramdial Singh, in the Court of the Additional Munsif at Mozufferpore, and before judgment had 4 annas share of a certain putti belonging to the defendants (2nd party) attached on the 30th October 1886. While the said attachment was subsisting, the plaintiff Ganu Singh, it is alleged, purchased from the defendants (2nd party), 4 gundas and odd share of the property attached, by a kobala, dated the 9th June 1894. During execution proceedings instituted by Jangi and others, who had succeeded in their suit, Ganu Singh objected and his objection was disallowed with regard to the said 4 gundas and odd share. Thereupon Ganu Singh brought a suit for the said share, and the Munsif dismissed the suit, the decision of the Munsiff being confirmed on appeal to the Judge of Tirhoot.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Umakali Mukerjee and Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitter and Babu Shorasi Charan Mitter, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, asked for a declaration of his title in respect to a 4 gundas odd share in a certain property as acquired by him under a bill of sale executed by the defendant, second party, Harihar Singh, on the 9th June 1894. The respondents before us, Babu Jangi Lal and others, who are the creditors of Harihar Singh, on the institution of a suit against that individual for recovery of a certain amount of money, obtained an attachment before judgment of the 4 gundas and odd share of the property.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit upon the ground [533] that the sale of the plaintiff on the 9th June 1894, while the attachment before judgment was subsisting, was bad in law, and that therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment.

It has, however, been argued before us by the learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiff that the Courts below, before giving effect to the attachment before judgment, ought to have determined whether that attachment had been made in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. It has also been argued that that attachment did not prevent the judgment-debtor Harihar Singh from alienating his property to the plaintiff.

As regards the first point raised before us, it seems to be quite clear, looking at the judgments of both the Courts below, that there really was no dispute between the parties, that there was an attachment, and that the attachment was duly made. That being so, we are of opinion that we should not interfere with the judgments of the Courts below upon this ground.

As to the other question, namely what may be the effect of the attachment before judgment, it seems to us, upon a consideration of sections 483 to 490 of the Code of Civil Procedure, read with the sections which deal with attachment after judgment, in course of the execution of a decree, that the effect of an attachment, whether it be before or after decree, is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff, at whose instance the attachment takes place. It will be observed that the main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realize the amount of the decree, supposing a decree is eventually made, from the defendant's property. Section 483 provides that "if at any stage of any suit the plaintiff satisfies the Court by affidavit or otherwise that the defendant with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property," and so on, "the plaintiff may apply to the Court to call upon the defendant to furnish security to satisfy any decree that may be passed against him, and, on his failing to give such security, to direct that any portion of his property within the jurisdiction of the [534] Court shall be attached until further order of the Court." Section 484 empowers the Court to call upon the defendant, either to furnish security to produce and place at the disposal of the Court when required, the property sought to be attached, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security. Section 485 lays down that in the event of the defendant failing to show cause or to furnish the required security, "the Court may order that the property specified in the application, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, shall be attached." Section 486 provides that "the attachment shall be made in the manner herein provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree for money." Section 487 says: "If any claim be preferred to the property attached before judgment, such claim shall be investigated in the manner hereinbefore provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for money." Then we have section 488, in which it is laid down that, "when an order of attachment before judgment is passed, the Court which passed the order shall remove the attachment whenever the defendant furnishes the security required together with security for the costs of the attachment, or when the suit is dismissed," clearly indicating that in the event of the suit not being dismissed but decreed, the attachment shall subsist. Section 489 then provides that "attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree." It would seem that, save and except in these two classes of cases, the intention of the Legislature is that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative. Then we have section 490 providing that "when property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of this chapter, and a decree is given in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary to re-attach the property in execution of such decree."

This section confirms the view which we have just expressed. No doubt, as has been pointed out by the learned Vakil for [535] the appellant, there is no distinct provision in Chapter XXXIV of the Code, which deals with arrest and attachment before judgment, similar to that which is to be found in section 276 of the Code, viz., that when an attachment is made in execution of a decree, alienation of the property so attached during the continuation of the attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. But looking at the various sections to which we have just referred as a whole, there can be very little or no doubt that the Legislature intended that the same effect should be given to an attachment before judgment as is expressly provided in section 276 in respect to an attachment in execution of a decree.

In this view we think we are supported by the decision in the case of Raj Chunder Roy v. Isser Chunder Roy, (1865) Bourke, O. C., 139, where Mr. Justice NORMAN, referring to the provisions of the old Code in regard to attachment before judgment, expressed the opinion that the process in attachment before judgment is in all respects the same as in cases of attachment after judgment, and that the effect, namely, of binding the property so as to prevent private alienation, is the same in both cases. No doubt, as has been pointed out by the learned Vakil for the appellant, the precise question that the learned Judge had to decide in that case was different from that with which we have to deal here; but the reasoning upon which that decision was arrived at, is the reasoning which we think we may well adopt in this case. If we were to adopt the opposite view, an attachment before judgment would be entirely futile and of no efficacy whatever.

In this view of the matter, we are of opinion that the Courts below have come to a right conclusion. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

Nagendra Nath Basu and another... ..Plaintiffs

Satadal Basini Basu.....Defendant.*

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), section 78—Suit for rent, without registration of name, whether maintainable by the legal representatives—Succession Certificate Act (Act VII of 1889), section 4, cl. (2)—Debt, Meaning of.

A suit for rent, accruing due partly during the lifetime of a registered proprietor, and partly after his death, was brought by his representatives; the defence was that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as the plaintiffs were not registered proprietors, and had no certificate under the Succession Certificate Act.

Held, that section 78 of the Land Registration Act is not a bar to the realization of rent accruing due during the lifetime of the registered proprietor, but a suit for rent accruing due after the death of the registered proprietor is not maintainable, by his representatives, without having their names registered under the Land Registration Act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 586 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Bulloram Mullick, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 12th of February 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Nriya Gopal Sarkar, Munsif of Diamond Harbour, dated the 28th of August 1896.

Held, also, that rent is not a "debt" within the meaning of section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, and therefore no certificate of succession is necessary.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of arrears of rent which had accrued between April and the 4th December 1893. The father of the plaintiffs, who was a registered proprietor of the property in respect of which rent was claimed, died on the 19th September 1893, and his heirs sold the property on the 4th December in that year. The defence (inter alia) was that the suit was not maintainable, inasmuch as the plaintiffs had not registered their names under the provisions of the Land Registration Act. The Court of First Instance overruled the objection raised by the defendant, and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the first Court. From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

[537] Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhry for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—This case in my opinion does not fall within section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876.

The facts are these: The father of the present plaintiffs was the registered proprietor of the property in question. He died on the 19th September 1893, and his heirs sold the property on the 4th December in that year. This suit is for the recovery of the rents which accrued between April and the 4th December 1893. As regards the rent accruing between the 19th September 1893 when the father, the registered proprietor, died, and the 4th December 1893, when his heirs sold the property, it cannot be recovered, for the plaintiffs must be regarded as suing as proprietors, and they were not registered as such, and consequently as regards that part of the claim they are successfully met by section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876. But as regards the rent accruing between April and the particular date fixed for payment, which I understand was some day in July, they are entitled in my judgment to maintain the action to recover that amount as representatives of their late father. They are not suing as proprietors; they are suing as his heirs, and anything they may recover will belong to his estate. Otherwise, if a registered proprietor did not get in his rents, then sold the property to a purchaser who registered and the previous proprietor then died, his representatives could not recover the arrears of rent. This cannot be. The answer, as I have said; is that they are suing, not as themselves proprietors, but as the legal representatives of the late registered proprietor, and section 78 does not apply to such a case.

A case somewhat similar in principle to the present was recently decided by a Division Bench of this Court, of which I happened to be a member—Belchambers v. Hussan Ali, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 493.

[538] It has been suggested that the plaintiffs cannot sue as representatives, inasmuch as they have no certificate in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1894. That is successfully met by sub-section 2 of the section, which says that the word "debt" includes any debt except rent. The debt in this case is for rent.

Upon these grounds the appeal must be allowed to the extent I have indicated, and the appellant must have proportionate costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think as regards that portion of the claim which is for rent that accrued due during the lifetime of the plaintiffs' father, that is the rent for the first quarter of the Bengali year 1300, that it is not in any way barred by the provisions of section 78 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, because that portion of the rent the plaintiffs are entitled to claim not merely as proprietors, but also as the legal representatives of the deceased proprietor who was registered under Bengal Act VII of 1876, and in whose lifetime it fell due. Section 78 bars the claim for rent only when the claim is made by the plaintiff as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue-free property, in respect of which he is required by the Act to cause his name to be registered, and, as I have just stated above, the plaintiffs are entitled to make the claim, not as proprietors for the time when the rent accrued, but as legal representatives of the proprietor to whom the rent became due.

Then, it was urged by the learned Vakil for the respondent that, if the plaintiffs claimed the rent as being money due to the estate of their deceased father, they must in the first place produce a succession certificate under section 4 of Act VII of 1889, and in the second place, the claim would in that case be of the Small Cause Court class, and this second appeal would be barred by section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As to the first contention, as has been pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, it is met by sub-section 2 of section 4 of Act VII of 1889. As to the second objection, that, I think, is met by article 8 of the second schedule of Act IX of 1887, [539] the claim made by the plaintiffs being one for rent. In taking this view, I do not overlook the principle of law that a party cannot, by any wilful unwarrantable addition to or modification of his claim, oust the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit ought properly to have been brought. I do not think, having regard to the facts of this case, that it is one that comes within the application of that principle.

In regard to the rest of the claim, I have nothing to add to what has been said by the learned Chief Justice.

Second appeal—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), sections 2, 311 and 588—Decree—Fraud—Question relating to the execution of the decree between parties to the suit—Auction-purchaser a third party.

An application was made by the judgment-debtor against the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, who was a third party, to have a sale set aside, on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, as also on the ground of fraud. The Court of First Instance rejected the application and refused to set aside the sale. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he reversed the decision of the first Court. On a second appeal to the High Court by the auction-purchaser an objection was taken that no second appeal lay at his instance.

Held, that, inasmuch as the application was under section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, a second appeal would lie. The question of a right to a second appeal does not turn upon who may happen to be the appellant, but upon whether or not the case is one within section 244 of the Code.

THIS appeal arose out of an application to set aside a sale. The allegation of the petitioners (two of the judgment-debtors) was that the sale took place about twelve years ago, and that they did not know of the sale until the auction-purchaser [540] instituted a regular suit against the judgment-debtor and others to obtain khas possession of the property, and summonses were served upon them. The Court of First Instance, having held that there was no evidence that the auction-purchaser fraudulently concealed the fact of the sale from the petitioners, refused to set aside the sale on the ground that the application was barred by limitation. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the first Court, holding that the application was not time-barred, but he did not decide the question whether there was any fraud in the case or not. Against this decision the auction-purchaser appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee, and Babu Deepin Behary Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Nilmadhub Bose, and Babu Sib Chandra Palit, for the Respondent.

The judgments of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) were as follow :—

Maclean, C. J.—A preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies in this case. The appeal arises out of an application by the judgment-debtor against the decree-holder and auction-purchaser, to have the sale, at which the latter purchased the applicant's property, set aside on the ground, not only of the irregularity mentioned in section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but also of fraud. The application is undoubtedly entitled under section 244 of the Code ; and it is conceded that if the case fall within the provisions of that section, a second appeal will lie, but it is contended for the respondent that the appellant here being the auction-purchaser and so not a party to the suit, the case is not within the section, and that no second appeal lies. It is said that a second appeal will not lie when the appellant is neither the judgment-debtor nor the decree-holder. I do not think that this distinction is well founded.

*Appeal from Order No. 373 of 1898, against the order of Babu Kailash Chunder Mazumdar, Subordinate Judge of Koolneah, dated the 5th of September 1898, reversing the order of Babu Ganendronath Mookerjee, Munsif of Bagerhat, in the district of Jessore, dated the 4th of June 1898.

A Division Bench of this Court has recently decided in the case of Nemai Chand Kanji v. Deno Nath Kanji, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 691, that a [541] second appeal will lie, at the instance of the judgment-debtor, and that decision was followed by another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Bhubon Mohun Pal v. Nunda Lal Dey, (1899) Ante, p. 324. In both those cases, the appellant to the High Court was the judgment-debtor.

I ought in passing to say that the case of Kinoo Khan v. Kawbiz Mullah, (1897) 1 C. W. N., cc., was uncontested. We have sent for our judgment in that case, and it is clear that for some reason or other the case was not contested. It must not consequently be regarded as any authority.

To appreciate whether a case is, or is not, within section 244, we must consider what the application was, and whether at the time it was made, it was an application under the section. It was an application by the judgment-debtor against the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, whose purchase had been confirmed, to have the sale set aside. The question was one between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, viz., the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, relating to the execution of the decree, and was, undoubtedly, an application under that section. The circumstance that the auction-purchaser was a party to the application does not make it any the less a case under the section [see the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) 1. L. R., 19 Cal., 683 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166]. If that be so a second appeal would have lain at the instance of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder. Why not at the instance of the auction-purchaser, who is the person most directly interested ?

A narrow construction ought not to be placed on this section : see the case I have just cited. If the contention of the respondent were to prevail, we should have to face the anomaly that both the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder would have a right of second appeal, but that the auction-purchaser, whose sale has been confirmed, and who is really more materially interested in the matter than the decree-holder, [542] would have no such right ; whilst if the case were properly within the section, he could not have brought a separate suit in which, if he could have brought it, he would have had an appeal to this Court.

The question of a right to a second appeal does not turn upon who may happen to be the appellant, but upon whether or not the case is one within section 244. If, as has been held, both the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder have such a right, it is difficult to appreciate upon what ground it should be denied to the auction-purchaser, who is equally a party to the proceedings, though not a party to the suit. The judgment-debtor brought the auction-purchaser before the Court, and now says that, having so brought him there, he is not to have the same rights quâ appeal as either the judgment-debtor or decree-holder, whilst, at the same time, he is to be taken as bound by the order and barred from bringing a separate suit. That does not seem to me to be right.

Looking at the principle of the authorities to which I have referred, the contention of the respondent must, in my opinion, fail.

Upon the merits the appellant is right. The Subordinate Judge has decided that the respondent was not barred by the Statute of Limitation, and then has proceeded to say off-hand that the sale must be set aside, without considering the evidence upon that question. The question of limitation must be taken as concluded; but the case must go back to the lower Court for a decision upon the evidence whether the sale ought or ought not to be set aside. The costs will abide the result.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The appeal arises out of an application for setting aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of fraud, and also on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale which has caused substantial injury to the judgment-debtors. The first Court rejected the application on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On appeal by the judgment-debtors, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the order of the first Court and set aside the sale, holding that the application was saved from being barred by [543] limitation by virtue of the provisions of section 18 of the Limitation Act, as the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser had kept the judgment-debtors from the knowledge of their right to make this application by means of fraud. Against this order of the Lower Appellate Court the auction-purchaser has preferred this appeal on the ground that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in setting aside the sale without coming to any finding either that the sale was brought about by fraud, or that it was vitiated by irregularity leading to substantial injury.

At the hearing of the appeal, a preliminary objection is taken by the learned Vakil for the respondent that no second appeal lies, as the case cannot come under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the question raised not being one between the parties to the suit, but being raised by the auction-purchaser, who was no party to the suit, and in support of this objection the case of Kinoo Khan v. Kawbiz Mullah, (1897) 1 C. W. N., cc., is cited.

In answer to the objection it is urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the question whether a second appeal lies or not will have to be determined, not by considering who the appellant is, but by considering what the nature of the question is that was raised in the Court below and has been determined by the order appealed against. The question involved in the preliminary objection is not quite free from difficulty. After a careful consideration of the arguments on both sides, I am of opinion that, having regard to the circumstances of this case, the preliminary objection ought to be overruled.

With reference to the case cited by the learned Vakil for the respondents, I do not think it necessary for me to say anything in addition to what has been said in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. The judgment of this Court in that case proceeded upon the footing of there being really no contest as to the applicability of the preliminary objection to the case.

Turning now to the reasons urged in support of the objection, I am of opinion that the real question for determination is whether what is appealed against is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If it is a decree [544] within the definition given in that section, this second appeal lies. That definition includes an order determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244, but not specified in section 588. Now the question that has been determined in this case by the Lower Appellate Court is that the sale of the judgment-debtor's property is liable to be set aside, it is not clearly stated on what grounds, but evidently, it would seem, on the ground of fraud. That being so, the order appealed against has determined a question which is either mentioned or referred to in section 244, and which is not specified in section 588. For the question whether the sale should be set aside or should be allowed to stand, is a question that arose as between the judgment-debtors and the decree-holder, and was a question relating to the execution of the decree, and it is not specified in section 588, because clause 16 of section 588, which is the only portion of the section that can have any bearing upon the present case, contemplates only the setting aside of a sale on the ground of material irregularity in the conduct of the sale leading to substantial injury as provided in section 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and does not apply to an application for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the respondents that, although that may be so, still as the decree-holder is satisfied with the order of the Court below passed in favour of the judgment-debtors, and as the only person who questions the correctness of that order is the auction-purchaser, who is a third party, the case does not come under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

But the question in the Court below was one between the parties to the suit, and though one of the parties interested in the determination of that question was the auction-purchaser, a third party, that circumstance could not take the case out of the scope of section 244. This must be taken to be settled by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal, (1892) 1. L. R., 19 Cal., 688 : L. R., 19 I. A., 166. The fact of the decree-holder not appealing, but being apparently satisfied with the order of the Lower Appellate Court, does not make any difference because [545] what we have to consider is whether the order appealed against is one that determines any question mentioned or referred to in section 244, and not specified in section 588 ; and that condition is satisfied, though after the making of the order it might have been accepted by both parties to the suit and the order may be contested only by the auction-purchaser.

Perhaps there may arise cases in which there may be no contest between the parties to the suit from the beginning, and in such cases it would be difficult to say that an appeal would lie at the instance of the auction-purchaser ; but that would be so, not because the auction-purchaser was the appellant, but because the question from the beginning was not one arising between the parties to the suit within the meaning of section 244 of the Code. That, however, is not the case here. The view I take is in accordance with the decision of this Court in the cases of Nemai Chand Kanji v. Dino Nath Kanji, (1898) 2 C.W.N., 691 ; and Bhuban Mohan Pal v. Nunda Lal Dey, (1899) Ante, p. 324.

On the merits of the appeal, it is clear that the appellant's contention ought to succeed. For all that the learned officiating Subordinate Judge has found is that as in consequence of the fraudulent conduct of the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, the petitioners were kept from the knowledge of their right to have the sale set aside, the application is not barred by limitation. That may be quite true, and by reason of the fraudulent conduct of the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, the applicant may be entitled to the extension of time provided for in section 18 of the Limitation Act ; and yet the sale may not be vitiated either by fraud or by any material irregularity which has led to substantial injury. The case must, therefore, go back to the Lower Appellate Court for the determination of the question whether the sale is so vitiated or not.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 116—Zerai land—Raiyat brought on zerai land by lessee, Right of on expiry of lease—Trespasser—Right of occupancy—Liability to Ejectment.

Section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies even in a case where a person is brought on the malik's zerai land as a *raiya*t by a lessee for a term of years ; therefore such a person cannot acquire any right of occupancy or non-occupancy on the said land, and he, being a trespasser only on the expiry of the lease of the lessee, is liable to ejectment.

Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 708, distinguished.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff to recover khas possession of certain lands. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the disputed lands were part and parcel of 27 bighas 6 chittaks of zerai land, of which one Mahomed Ishak was the admitted proprietor, who granted a thika lease of the said lands to one Ajodh Roy, which extended up to 1300 F. S. ; that on the expiry of Ajodh Roy's lease in 1301 F. S. the said lands were settled with him ; and that on his attempt to take possession he was resisted by the defendants.

The defence was that out of the lands in dispute 3 bighas were the *raiya*t holding of the defendant Ajodh Roy and the remaining 6 bighas were the *raiya*t holding of the defendant Deva Roy, and that they had acquired a right of occupancy in them.

The Munsif held that the lands were the zerai lands of the proprietor ; that Ajodh Roy, the former lessee, on the expiry of his [547] lease had no title to the 3 bighas of land claimed by him, and that the remaining 6 bighas the defendant Deva Roy had a right to hold, inasmuch as he was holding the lands as a *raiya*t under the former lessee, and accordingly he gave a decree for khas possession in respect of the 3 bighas claimed by Ajodh Roy, but dismissed the suit in respect of the 6 bighas claimed by Deva Roy.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision of the Munsif, holding that section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to the case, as the plaintiff had failed to show that the disputed 6 bighas of land had been held by the defendant Deva Roy under a lease for a term of years or from year to year.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Lakshmi Narayan Singh for the Appellant.

Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, and Dr. Asutosh Mookerjee, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, who is the lessee of the proprietor, to recover khas possession of certain lands, the area of which is stated in the plaint to be 9 bighas 10 cottahs, on the allegation that those lands are part of the zerait or private lands of the proprietor, and that the defendants have no right to remain on them.

The defence was a denial of the fact that the lands were zerait, and the defendants claimed an occupancy right in them.

The first Court found that the lands were the zerait lands of the proprietor: that out of the entire area claimed, which is stated as being 9 bighas only, a quantity of 3 bighas had been held by the defendant Ajodh Roy, the former lessee, without any title upon the expiry of his lease; and that the remaining 6 bighas had been held by the defendant Deva Roy as a *raiya*t under the former lessee; and it gave the plaintiff a decree for khas possession in respect of the 3 bighas claimed [548] by the defendant Ajodh Roy, but dismissed the suit in respect of the 6 bighas claimed by Deva Roy.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Lower Appellate Court has affirmed the decree of the first Court, holding that section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to this case, as the plaintiff had failed to show that the 6 bighas of land in question, which was found by the first Court to be the zerait land of the proprietor, had been held by the defendant Deva Roy under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year.

There was a cross-appeal by the defendant Deva Roy, in which it was urged that the first Court ought to have held that he was a *raiya*t with a right of occupancy. The cross-appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was unnecessary to determine in this case to what class of *raiya*ts the defendant Deva Roy belonged.

Against this decision of the Lower Appellate Court the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal, and it is urged on his behalf, first, that section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to this case; secondly, that, if it does apply, the defendant Deva Roy had no right to remain on the lands after the expiry of the lease of the former thikadar under whom he held; and, thirdly, that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in not coming to any decision as regards the 10 cottahs of land in excess of the 3 bighas and 6 bighas in relation to which alone the rights of the parties had been determined by its judgment.

The judgment of the Lower Appellate Court proceeds on the assumption that the lands were the proprietor's zerait lands. The learned Vakil for the appellant contends that the Lower Appellate Court has in effect affirmed the first Court's finding that the lands were the proprietor's zerait lands. On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents contends that there has been no affirmance of the finding of the first Court by the Lower Appellate Court on this point; and that if the appellant's contention on the point of law as to the meaning of section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act be given effect to, it will be necessary to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court for [549] a finding on the point whether the lands were the proprietor's zerait lands or not.

We are of opinion that the Lower Appellate Court has not come to any finding of its own upon the question whether the land in dispute was the proprietor's zerait land, it having been unnecessary, in the view that it took of the law, to arrive at any finding on the point; and that if the view of the law taken by the Lower Appellate Court is not affirmed, the respondents are entitled to a remand, as it was competent to them to ask the Lower Appellate Court to affirm the decree of dismissal made by the first Court upon the ground that the land was not the proprietor's zerait land, they having in the first Court denied that the land was zerait and the parties having gone to trial upon an issue on that point. This being premised, let us see how far the opinion of the Lower Appellate Court that section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is inapplicable to this case is correct.

It was found by the first Court that the lands were zerait, and for the purpose of the present question we must proceed upon the assumption that they are so. It is also found that the defendant Deva Roy came upon the land while it was held by the other defendant Ajodh Roy as a thikadar under the proprietor under a lease for a term of years; and the question is whether these two circumstances are not sufficient to bring the case within section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We are of opinion that this question ought to be answered in the affirmative. The section says: "Nothing in Chapter V shall confer a right of occupancy in, and nothing in Chapter VI shall apply to, a proprietor's private lands known in Bengal as khamar, nij or nijjote, and in Behar as zerait, nij, sir or kamat, when any such land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year." Here the lands, upon the assumption upon which we are now proceeding, were zerait lands, and they were held by the defendant Ajodh Roy under a lease for a term of years at the time when the defendant Deva Roy, who claims the benefit of Chapter V and to whom has been accorded the benefit of Chapter VI by the Court below, came upon the lands. Therefore, in our opinion, the lands in dispute must be held to be excluded from the [550] operation of Chapter V, so far as it confers a right of occupancy, and also from the operation of Chapter VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the respondents that the true meaning of the section is this, that it excludes the operation of Chapters V and VI in respect of zerait lands only when such lands are held directly under the proprietor by the person who claims the benefit of either of those two chapters, under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year; and that when such lands are held by the person claiming an occupancy or a non-occupancy right (and the latter is a very substantial right, regard being had to section 44 of the Act) not directly under the proprietor, but under a lessee, that is a tenure-holder under the proprietor, the acquisition of an occupancy or a non-occupancy right, as the case may be, cannot be prevented; in other words, that the section applies only to cases where the proprietor retains his zerait lands as such directly under him, without interposing any tenure-holder between him and the actual rayyat, and takes the precaution of letting in rayyats either under leases for terms of years or under leases from year to year. The language of the section is not very clear, and the question raised before us is not altogether free from doubt; but after weighing the conflicting considerations that arise, we are of opinion that the construction which the learned Vakil for the appellant seeks to put upon it is the true construction, and our reason is shortly this: As we understand the section, its object is evidently to exclude the proprietor's private lands from the operation of Chapters V and VI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, provided that the proprietor has taken a certain precaution which is indicated by the concluding words of the section, "where any such land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year." The question then arises—held by whom? The learned Vakil for the appellant answers "held by anyone whether a thikadar or a raiyat to whom the proprietor has let it out." And this answer is quite in accordance with the language of the section, the Legislature not having said "where such land is held by a raiyat." On the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondents contends that the section applies only where the land is held by a raiyat who alone [551] can claim the benefit of Chapters V and VI under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year. But this construction is in the first place open to the objection that it interpolates the words, "by a raiyat" after the words "is held," and in the second place there is this further difficulty in the way of our accepting it, that it would prevent the protection contemplated by the section from being operative, although the landlord may take the precaution of leasing the land to the person to whom he lets it for a term of years or from year to year. Take the case of a proprietor, for instance, who has lands that are admittedly his private lands, which are partially let out to *raiya*ts under leases for short periods, and suppose that he leases the whole of his zerai lands to a farmer for a term of years slightly longer than the longest term for which any of the *raiya*ts holds the same. Upon the expiry of the lease to the farmer the landlord will be precluded from obtaining *kh*as possession from any of the *raiya*ts, because the *raiya*ts will then have held the land after the expiry of their leases under the farmer, and after the interposition of the farmer or tenure-holder had, according to the respondents' contention, destroyed the zerai character of the lands. We do not think that such a result could have been intended. If the proprietor lets out his private lands either under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year, in our opinion he does all that is necessary to be done by him under section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to entitle him to the protection of that section so as to have his zerai lands secured against being burdened with any occupancy or non-occupancy rights in favour of *raiya*ts contemplated in Chapters V and VI; and this having been done with reference to the lands in dispute, section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to this case.

Then arises the question, the subject of the second contention on behalf of the appellant, namely, whether upon that view of the case the defendant Deva Roy, on the expiry of the former thikadar's lease, ceased to have any right in the lands. He having been brought on the land by his landlord, who was a lessee under the proprietor for a limited term of years, prima facie his right would come to an end upon the expiry of his landlord's lease. This view is in accordance with general principles [552]—see the case of Henderson v. Squire, (1869) L. R., 4 Q. B., 170, and also the cases of Oomatara Debia v. Peena Bibee, (1865) 2 W. R., 155, and Hurish Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Srw Kalee Mukerjee, (1874) 22 W. R., 274.

It was argued upon the authority of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik, (1893) I.L.R., 20 Cal., 708, that the mere fact of the title of the person who inducts a raiyat upon any land ceasing or being non-existent, would not be sufficient to show that the raiyat's title ceased or did not exist. We are of opinion that that case can have no application to a case like the present. The ground for the decision in that case was, as stated in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, that the only right of the person who has obtained possession of the zamindari is to the rent payable for the land and not to obtain khas possession of the land itself unless he can do so under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and that ground is not applicable to zerait lands protected by section 116, the primary character of such lands being that the proprietor is entitled to be in khas possession of them, and no raiya can acquire any occupancy or non-occupancy right in them.

In this view of the case, and for the reasons we have stated at the outset, it becomes necessary to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court for disposal after determination of the question whether the lands are really the proprietor's zerait lands; and we think it is also necessary to remand it for the determination of the question raised in the third contention on behalf of the appellant, namely, what are the rights of the parties in respect of the ten cottahs of land in regard to which the Courts below have come to no finding.

The costs will abide the result.

Co-sharers—Joint possession, Suit for—Effect of purchase of a right of occupancy, not transferable by custom, by a co-sharer landlord without the consent of the other co-sharer—Abandonment—Right to partition.

In a suit to recover joint possession of an occupancy holding in respect of his share by a co-sharer landlord, on the ground that the defendant acquired no title by the purchase of the said holding, as it was not transferable by custom, and that there was an abandonment of the holding by the former tenant, the defence (inter alia) was that the plaintiff was not entitled to joint possession, and that he could not get any relief except by bringing a suit for partition inasmuch as they (the plaintiff and the defendants) were joint proprietors.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the relief claimed, and that the claim for joint possession without partition was maintainable.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1592 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Juggod-durlav Mazumdar, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 14th of July 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Rajani Nath Ghose, Munsif of Naraingunge, dated the 30th of September 1896.

and the remaining two annas belonged to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff's allegation was that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had rights of occupancy in the disputed lands; that defendant No. 1 purchased the occupancy holding of defendant No. 3 in execution of a decree for money against him, whilst the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 purchased the occupancy holding of defendant No. 4 by a private sale; that by the said purchases the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 did not acquire any right to the disputed lands, inasmuch as the right of occupancy was not transferable by custom or by local usage; that the defendants had no right to retain possession of the said lands to the extent of the plaintiff's share [554] without his consent; that defendants Nos. 3 and 4, since the sale, had abandoned the holding, and left the place, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the disputed lands to the extent of his share, with mesne profits.

There were two suits, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in each of these suits, pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff's claim was bad for misjoinder of causes of action; that it was barred by limitation; that inasmuch as they were co-sharers, the plaintiff's claim for khas possession without partition was not maintainable; and that there was not such a forfeiture of the right of occupancy as would entitle the plaintiff to get a decree for khas possession.

The Munsif overruled the objections of the defendants, decreed the suits, and ordered that the plaintiff should recover possession of the fourteen annas share of the disputed land in each of the suits in ijmali with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On appeal the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court.

Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Harendra Narayan Mitter, for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghosh, and Babu Jogesh Chunder De, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

The appellants in this Court are, it appears, co-proprietors with the plaintiff in a certain taluk, the former holding a two-anna and the latter a fourteen-anna share thereof.

It also appears that the appellants obtained a money decree against one of the tenants holding under the talukdars as a body, and in execution of that decree they brought the holding to sale, purchased it themselves, and obtained possession. The holding in question was an occupancy holding; and it has been found, as a matter of fact, that in that particular locality occupancy holdings are not transferable without the consent of the landlord.

The plaintiff brought the present suit for the purpose of regaining joint possession along with the appellants of the lands comprised in the holding in question.

[555] Both the Courts below have decreed in his favour, and have restored the plaintiff to joint possession of the land.

In this Court it is contended that the form of the suit was misconceived, and that the plaintiff, if entitled to any relief whatever, is entitled only to a partition of the estate. No authority has been cited for this proposition, but reliance has been placed upon a remark made in the judgment which was delivered in the case of Paikdharai Rai v. Manners, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 179 (185), which possibly, so far as it goes, may tend to sustain the contention. That, however, is merely an obiter dictum; and there is no doubt that the view of this Court has been, so far as we are aware, for a long series of years to the contrary effect. Reliance has also been placed upon the well-known cases of Watson and Co. v. Ramchund Dutt, (1890) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 10: L. R., 17 I. A., 110, and Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein, (1891) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 253: L. R., 19 I. A., 48. These cases are, however, in our opinion, clearly distinguishable from the present. Upon the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below, the present case might thus be stated: A two-anna sharer in the taluk has, without the consent of his co-sharers, expelled (for it comes to that) one of the common tenants of the talukdars, and has possessed himself to the exclusion of his co-sharers of the lands held by him. But this is not a case such as is contemplated by either of the decisions cited. For there are in this case no considerations whatever of an equitable kind, so far as we can perceive, to sustain the claim brought forward by the appellants to retain possession of the land from which they have expelled the tenants to the exclusion of their co-sharers.

As to the question of abandonment, it has been held by the Courts below (and we think correctly) that, as a matter of fact, there has been an abandonment on the part of the occupancy tenant: that that abandonment has been acquiesced in by the landlords, and consequently, there having been consent to the termination of the tenancy on the part of both the tenants and the landlord, the tenancy must be taken to have determined.

[556] Then the question of mesne profits was raised. Apparently the Courts below have given the plaintiff a decree for mesne profits, not on the footing of the rent previously received from the tenant who was in occupation of the land, but on the footing of the profits which might have been realized from the land, if properly used and cultivated. It is contended here, however, that all that the plaintiff is entitled to is mesne profits at the rate paid previously by the occupancy tenant by way of rent. We see no reason, however, for dissenting from the view of the lower Courts on this question. The defendants have possessed themselves wrongfully of these lands to the exclusion of the co-sharer, and we therefore think, so far as that question is concerned, they are liable for mesne profits, and we think they ought to pay them, not merely at the rate of rent paid by the tenant for the holding, but upon the ordinary footing of the profits which might have been derived in the course of cultivation from the land.

These being our views, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

The 2nd May, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Narohary Jana.....Appellant

Hari Charan Pramanick and others.....Respondents.*

Second Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 105, 108—Order of Special Judge as to standard of measurement of lands.

An order of the Special Judge as to the length of the standard of measurement to be used in measuring certain lands is not a decision in a case under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and therefore no second appeal lies from such an order to the High Court.

Mathura Mohun Lahiri v. Uma Sundari Debi, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 34, and Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kissori Chowdhurani, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 462, distinguished.

[557] THIS was an appeal, preferred by the landlord, against an order of the Special Judge of Midnapore, holding that no appeal lay to him from the order of the Settlement Officer, who had held that the standard of measurement to be used in measuring the lands of a village, named Joyram Chuck, was a pole of 7 feet 9 inches. The appellant, who was the landlord of the village, contended that the standard of measurement was a pole of 7 feet 5½ inches. When the appeal was preferred to the Special Judge, the Settlement Officer had done nothing but settle the length of the measure; he had not measured the lands, nor ascertained the area of the tenant's holdings, nor either recorded or settled rents. On appeal the Special Judge held that the question of the standard of measurement could not affect any of the records which form the record of rights, and that no appeal lay to him from the decision of the Settlement Officer, which was not a decision under chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), and dismissed the appeal. From this decision the landlord appealed to the High Court.

Babu Jagat Chandra Banerjee, on behalf of the respondents, raised the objection that no appeal lay to the High Court from the order of the Special Judge, as his decision did not come under section 106 of the Act.

Babu Hara Chandra Chakravarti for the Appellant.—A second appeal does lie to this Court. The cases of Mathura Mohun Lahiri v. Uma Sundari Debi, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 34, and Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kissori Chowdhurani, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 462, are entirely in favour of a second appeal.

The decision of the High Court (Hill and Rampini, JJ) was as follows :—

This is a second appeal against an order of the Special Judge of Midnapore, dated the 9th August 1897, holding that no appeal lies to him from an order of a Settlement Officer, finding that the standard of measurement to be used in measuring the lands of a village, named Joyram Chuck, is a pole of 7 feet 9 inches. The appellant, who is the landlord of the village, contended that the standard of measurement is a pole of 7 feet 5½ inches.

[558] It appears to us (1) that no second appeal lies to us, and (2) that the decision of the Special Judge is right and that no appeal lay to him.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2029 of 1897, against the decree of H. R. H. Coxe, Esq., District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 9th of August 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Monmotho Nath Chatterjee, Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 18th of January 1897.

We think no second appeal lies to us because the decision of the Special Judge is not a decision in a case under section 106 of the former chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which was in force when the order of the Special Judge was passed. The dispute between the parties was not a dispute as to the correctness of an entry in the record of rights for the following reasons : (1) there is no entry in any record of rights as to the standard of measurement ; (2) no record of rights has been made or is at present being made ; and (3) there is at present nothing to show that the question of length of the standard of measurement will even indirectly affect any entry in the record of rights.

The learned pleader who appears for the appellant, however, relies on the cases of Mathura Mohan Lahiri v. Uma Sundari Debi, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 34, and Dengu Kazi v. Nobin Kissorsi Chowdhurani, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 462, under the former of which he contends a second appeal does lie to this Court from a decision of a Settlement Officer about the standard of measurement, and the second of which shows that a dispute may be raised at any time about an entry or even a proposed entry in the record of rights. But the facts of the case of Mathura Mohan Lahiri v. Uma Sundari Debi, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 34, are very different from those of the present one. In that case there had been a measurement, the landlords had applied for a settlement of rents, and the parties disputed, not only in respect of the standard of measurement, but as to whether the tenants were in possession of excess lands, and whether they held their lands on a consolidated rent or not. There was an appeal to the Special Judge on all these points.

The facts of the present case are quite different. The Settlement Officer at the time when his decision now under appeal was passed had, as far as we can see, done nothing but settle the length of the measure he was about to use in the measurement [559] of the lands of the village. He had not measured the lands, ascertained the area of the tenants' holdings or either recorded or settled rents. There was then no record of rights and no entry or even proposed entry in a record of rights, and hence we consider neither of the cases cited by the pleader has any application to the present case.

Then the Special Judge has pointed out that the question of the standard of measurement cannot affect any of the records which form the record of rights. These are the khewat and khatian—see the Government rules under the Tenancy Act, chapter VI, rule 8. The former is a record of proprietary interests. The latter is a record of tenants' rights, the entries in which only can form the subject of dispute between the parties to this case. But the area of the tenants' holdings in the khatian is entered in acres (see cols. 5, 6, 7 and 8). This is in accordance with section 92 of the Act and rule 64 of the Board's Settlement Manual. The question of the local standard of measurement cannot affect the entries in these columns. The only columns the entries in which may possibly be affected by the question of the local standard of measurement are columns 9 and 10. In column 9 is recorded the existing rent. If this is a lump rental, the question of the standard of measurement cannot affect it. If it is a fluctuating rental at so many rupees per bigha, it may affect it. But it remains to be seen what entry will be made in this column. Column 10 is the column in which is entered the rent settled by the Settlement Officer, if he finds it necessary to settle any rent. He will not have to do so, unless the raiyyats are found in possession of excess lands. Hence, there is at present no certainty nor indeed any reasonable ground for supposing that any entry in the record of rights will be affected by the question of the local standard of measurement. The contention of the parties at present is neither an "objection" under section 105, nor a "dispute" under section 106.

Thus, the order of the Settlement Officer, being an order neither under section 105, section 106 nor section 107, is not a decision under chapter X of the Act ; for there is no other section in the chapter under which a Settlement Officer can decide [560] anything. That being so, no appeal lay from his order to the Special Judge under section 108 (2), and the Special Judge's order not being a decision under section 106, no second appeal lies to us under section 108 (3).

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 2nd March, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Queen-Empress
Mati Lal Lahiri.*

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sections 409, 477A—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sections 222 (2), 234—Criminal breach of trust by public servant—Acquittal—Framing new charge—General falsification of accounts for a period extending over two years.

The alteration in the law by section 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) does not apply to a charge under section 477A of the Penal Code. It applies only to criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money.

THIS was a reference under section 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Officiating Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts. The accused Mati Lal Lahiri was tried in the month of March 1897 before a jury on a charge under section 409 of the Indian Penal Code, of having, as Treasurer of the Dhubri Collectorate, embezzled Government stamps of the value of Rs. 18,493. The jury acquitted the accused ; but the Sessions Judge, being dissatisfied with the verdict of the jury, referred the case to the High Court under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The High Court (HILL and JENKINS, JJ.) upon that reference, on the 30th July 1897, directed that the case should be retried.

The retrial was held on the 29th of October 1897 and following days, when a majority of the jury again found the accused not guilty, and again the Sessions Judge, disapproving of the verdict, referred the case to the High Court under' the abovementioned section. The charge was in these terms so far as is material, viz.:—

* Criminal Reference No. 46 of 1898, made by B. G. Melitus, Esq., Offg. Sessions Judge of Assam Valley Districts, dated 23rd December 1898.

"That you, between June 1894 and October 1896 (inclusive), at Dhubri, being entrusted with property in your capacity as the Treasurer of the Government Treasury at Dhubri, committed criminal breach of trust in respect of that property, viz., in respect of stamps or the value thereof to the extent of Rs. 18,498-15-6."

In directing a retrial Mr. Justice HILL pointed out that the order of the Court was not connected with the merits of the case but was founded solely on the nature of the charge which embraced a series of separate defalcations extending over a period of considerably more than two years, and that, according to the recent decisions when a charge was based, as in this case, on a general deficiency in accounting, the charge must be limited to three specific acts of misappropriation committed within a period of twelve months. Mr. Justice JENKINS assigned the same reasons for setting aside the proceedings and directing a retrial. These cases were tried under the Code of 1882 and before the law had been altered in respect of such charges by section 222 (2) of the Code of 1898.

Fresh charges under section 409 of the Penal Code were framed giving particulars of three acts of misappropriation; and a new charge was added under section 477A of the Penal Code. The added charge was:—

"That you being employed as Treasurer at the Dhubri Treasury, and in such capacity being authorised to sell stamps of different denominations to the public, and being required to keep correct accounts of the sale of stamps, and to credit daily the sale proceeds to the said Treasury, wilfully and with intent to defraud, between June 1894 and October 1896 (inclusive), falsified the accounts and registers of the sale of stamps and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions."

At the second retrial the accused was again acquitted by the jury, and the case was again referred to the High Court, the Judge expressing his opinion that the accused was guilty under section 477A of the Penal Code and not guilty on the other charges.

Mr. Garth, Mr. P. L. Roy, Mr. B. Chakravarti, and Babu Gobind Chunder Day Roy, for the accused.

[562] Babu Dasarathi Sanyal for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Stanley, JJ.) after stating the facts, proceeded as follows:—

It appears that on the hearing of this reference the learned Vakil who appeared for the prosecution stated to the Court that he was in a position to specify three acts of misappropriation by the accused which might properly be made the basis of a charge against him, and Mr. Justice HILL expressed his regret that, this being so, the trial should have been allowed to proceed to an abortive issue upon the charge as it then stood. New charges were framed under section 409, giving particulars of three acts of alleged criminal breach of trust on the part of the accused. In addition to these an entirely new charge was added under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code in the following terms, ante p. 561.

This charge is an obvious departure from the charge upon which the accused had been, after two lengthened trials, acquitted by the jury, and would appear to have been added with the object of avoiding the necessity of specifying in the indictment particulars of the items of official misconduct which the High Court considered it requisite that the prosecution should specify.

The accused again pleaded not guilty to the charges, and a lengthened investigation ensued, after which the jury unanimously acquitted the accused.

Again the Sessions Judge has for the third time felt it to be his duty to refer the case to the High Court for orders, being satisfied, as he says, that the accused committed an offence under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code. He considers that the accused was rightly acquitted upon the other charges.

Counsel on behalf of the accused has before us raised two preliminary objections to the review of the case. In the first place he argues that the formulating by the Magistrate of an additional and distinct charge under section 477A was not justified under the circumstances, and having regard to what occurred on the previous trials and on the references to the High Court, that the accused ought to have been tried under [563] section 409 of the Indian Penal Code alone. In the next place he contended that the charge as framed under section 477A was defective as being an arraignment of the accused on general acts of falsification of accounts extending over a period of nearly two and a half years.

As regards the first point taken by Counsel for the accused we think that it is doubtful whether on the former reference the parties ever contemplated that under the order of the Court an entirely new charge might be framed against the accused, but looking at the terms of the order we cannot say that the Magistrate and Sessions Judge over-stepped the limit of their powers.

As to the second objection more serious considerations arise. In place of the charge of criminal breach of trust the accused is charged with a general falsification of his accounts for a period extending from May 1894 to October 1896. No particulars whatever of any falsification are specified, but the accused is put upon his trial on a vague and general allegation of falsification of his accounts during a period of nearly two years and a half. It would seem to us that this charge was in all probability framed with the object of relieving, if possible, the prosecution from the obligation which lay upon them in respect of the charges under section 409 of proving specific acts of misappropriation. Has it done so? We think not. Every act of falsification of a book or account in our opinion would amount to an offence under the Code under section 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. An accused can only be charged and tried at one trial for any number of offences of the same kind not exceeding three committed within the space of one year. The explanation appended to section 477A does not purport to override this section. In the present case it does not appear what number of acts of falsification are complained of, but the Sessions Judge finds that false entries were systematically made by the accused for the period above referred to—a period of nearly two years and a half. The papers alleged to have been falsified consisted of single Lock Registers and monthly returns. The charge does not specify any particular single Lock Register or monthly return which was so falsified. [564] The alteration in the law by section 222(2) of the Code of 1898 does not apply to a charge under section 477A of the Penal Code. It applies only to criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money.

It appears to us for the foregoing reasons that the charge formulated under section 477A was irregular, if not absolutely illegal.

The Sessions Judge, as we have stated, finds that the charges under section 409 are unsustainable. We are of opinion for the reasons above stated that the second objection advanced by Counsel for the accused is well founded, and we rule accordingly; and under all the circumstances, and having regard to the protracted nature of this prosecution, to the fact that the accused has suffered considerably from the admittedly untenable charges upon which he was originally tried, and to the fact that he has been in confinement for upwards of a year and a half while these abortive proceedings were being prosecuted, we think that in the ends of justice it is undesirable that further proceedings against the accused be taken, and we accordingly so direct; and we order that the accused be forthwith discharged from custody.

FULL BENCH.

The 11th April, 1899.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE GHOSE,
MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Sharoop Dass Mondal.....Defendant

Joggessur Roy Chowdhry.....Plaintiff.*

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, articles 32 and 120 and 143—

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 25 and 155—

Suit to compel the defendant to fill up a tank and to pay compensation, or in the alternative for khas possession.

In a suit brought by a landlord against a tenant where the primary relief sought was a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to fill up [565] a tank excavated by him in contravention of the terms of the tenancy and to pay damages to the plaintiff for his wrongful act, and where the secondary relief sought was ejectment, the defence (inter alia) was that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was brought more than two years after the excavation of the tank.

Held, that article 32 † of Schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), applied to the case, and the suit was barred by limitation.

Soman Gope v. Raghubir Ojha, (1896) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 160, and Gangadhar v. Zahurriya, (1886) I. L. R., 8 All., 446, approved.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the landlord against a tenant for ejectment and compensation. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendant had excavated a tank on the land rendering it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, and he therefore prayed that the defendant might be directed to fill up the tank and to pay damages to him, failing which the Court might award khas possession of the said land to the plaintiff. The defence (inter alia) was that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was brought more than two years after the date of the excavation of the tank.

The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that article 120 of the Limitation Act applied to the case, and the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit within six years from the time of the excavation of the tank. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge upheld the decision of the first Court. Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court. On the appeal coming on for hearing the case was referred to a Full Bench by MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J., on the 10th January 1899, with the following OPINION:—

"In this appeal, which arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent to compel the defendant, a tenant under him, to fill up a tank and to pay compensation, or, in the alternative, to recover khas possession of the land on which the tank has been excavated, one of the questions for determination is whether the suit, which, according to the finding of the first Court, not displaced by the Lower Appellate Court, was brought more than two years but less than six years after the excavation [566] of the tank, is barred by limitation; in other words whether article 32 or article 120 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act applies to the case.

"Upon that question there is a conflict of decisions in this Court, the case of Kedarnath Nag v. Khetur Paul Sritirutno, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 34, laying it down that a suit like the present is governed by article 120 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act and is not barred if brought within six years from the time when the cause of action arose, while the case of Soman Gope v. Raghubir Ojha, (1896) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 160, decides that such a suit comes under article 32, and is barred if not brought within two years from the date when the land is perverted to an unallowable purpose. There being this conflict of decisions, the question must be referred for determination to a Full Bench; and as the question arises in a second appeal the whole case must be so referred."

Babu Joy Gobind Shome for the Appellant.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, Babu Jogendra Chundra Ghose, and Babu Satis Chunder Ghose, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., and MACPHERSON, GHOSE, HILL, and JENKINS, JJ.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.—The question submitted for our consideration is whether article 32 or article 120 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act applies to the present case.

To ascertain this, we must consider what was the nature of the suit and what was the relief sought. The primary relief sought was in effect a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to fill up the tank in question and to pay the plaintiff compensation for his alleged wrongful act; the secondary relief was for ejectment. We say secondary, for the ejectment was not to follow, and could not follow, save upon failure of the defendant to fill up the tank and make the compensation; it was contingent on that failure. For the tort complained of, the plaintiff had three remedies, (1) damages, (2) a mandatory injunction, and (3) ejectment, contingent upon the tenant not complying with certain conditions. This being the nature of [567] his suit, under which article of the Limitation Act does the case come? If under article 32, the plaintiff is barred; if under article 120, he is not.

Article 32 is as follows: "Against one who having a right to use property for specific purposes perverts it to other purposes." As a general principle, in construing this Act of the Legislature we ought not to regard a case as coming under article 120, unless clearly satisfied that it does not come under one of the many articles dealing with specific cases. Further, if there be two articles which may cover the case, the one, however, more general and the other more particular or specific, as a principle of construction the more particular and specific article ought to be regarded as the one governing the case. It cannot be successfully contended that, reading the language used according to its usual and ordinary acceptance, the words of article 32 are not sufficiently wide to cover the present case. The case is clearly within the words of the article: it is the precise case provided for by the article. The defendant is one, who, having a right to use the property demised to him for agricultural purposes, has perverted it to another purpose, viz., that of a tank. Upon what principle then can we properly say that the article cannot apply? We are invited rather to wander into the jungle of speculation than follow the beaten track defined by the language used.

It is contended for the respondent, and this was the stress of his contention, that this is an action based upon, or framed under, section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and that, as that Act was not in existence when the Limitation Act of 1877 was passed, the Legislature could not have intended that article 32 of the latter Act should apply to cases framed under the provisions of the former Act.

This appears to us a fallacy. Suits against a tenant for perverting property to purposes other than those for which he had the right to use it were well known before the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, though before that Act there might have been no right to eject for such perversion independent of contract. Section 155 creates no fresh class of suit: it affords [568] no fresh cause of action; it only provides that in ejectment suits a tenant may obtain relief against forfeiture on certain terms. It would be a strange thing to infer from that section that the Legislature intended to interfere with the operation of the provisions of the Statute of Limitations then in force, or by reason of section 155 to say that when a person is sued for perverting the property demised to him to purposes other than those specified the ordinary Statute of Limitations did not apply. The Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 deals specifically with the question of limitation in certain cases, and this supports an inference that the Legislature intended that any other cases should be left to the general law, and the policy of shortening the period of limitation in cases more or less analogous to the present, is indicated by article 1 in Schedule III. But even if the plaint had merely asked for ejectment, leaving it to the defendant to raise his claim to relief against forfeiture, as given him by section 155, seeing that the claim to eject is based on the case expressly provided for by article 32, we should have said that that article applied. That article says nothing about the relief to be sought or to be granted; it only lays down within what particular period of limitation a particular suit based upon a particular tort is to be brought.

It is said that the Bengal Tenancy Act describes an action such as this as an "ejectment action," and it is consequently suggested that article 143 applies; but this article, which is more general in its terms than article 32, only applies to a case where the plaintiff is entitled to possession by reason of forfeiture or breach of condition, that is, a condition of the tenancy; but the plaintiff here would only be entitled to possession upon non-compliance by the defendant with the order of the Court as to filling up the tank and making compensation. The present suit is framed in tort, not on breach of any contract. In our opinion the case is within article 32—a conclusion consistent with the decision in this Court in the case of Soman Gope v. Raghbir Ojha, (1896) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 160, and with the principles of the case of Gangadhar v. Zahurriya, (1886) I.L.R., 8 All., 446, although in the latter case the [569] plaintiff did not seek to eject. These authorities we prefer to those of the cases of Kedarnath Nag v. Khettur Paul Sritirutno, (1880) I. L. R., 6 Cal., 34, and Gunesh Dass v. Gondour Koormi, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 147. The plaintiff is consequently out of time, and the appeal must be allowed with costs, and the suit dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Confession—Confession to Police Officer—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 25.

The provisions of section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), which declare that no confession made to a Police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence, applies to every Police officer and is not to be restricted to officers of the regular Police Force.

THIS was a reference to the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The facts appear from the letter of reference, which was as follows:—

“The petitioners have been convicted under section 25 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) for cutting and removing forest produce from a Government reserved forest without a proper license.

“There is no evidence whatever that the petitioners cut and removed the wood in their possession from a Government reserved forest. The petitioners were arrested at a market where they were evidently trying to sell the twenty pieces of sundri wood in their possession. There is no evidence except an alleged confession to the chowkidar who arrested them to show where they had obtained the pieces of wood in question. Now it has been held that a confession to a chowkidar is a confession to a Police officer, and as such is inadmissible in evidence. If this confession be therefore excluded, there is absolutely no evidence to support the conviction.

"The Magistrate in his explanation says, that 'there is of course no evidence to prove that the accused were seen within the forest boundary, or when cutting the wood in it. But this is not always possible, and the admission of the accused before the witnesses for the prosecution (chowki-dars though they are) is I think legally admissible.' As I have however already remarked, such confessions have been held to be inadmissible.

"I therefore refer the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the conviction and sentence be set aside, and that the fine, if realised, be directed to be refunded."

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The petitioner was arrested by a chowkidar in possession of a load of newly cut wood, which it was suspected had been cut from a Government reserved forest, and after his arrest it is said that he admitted to the chowkidar having so obtained it. He has accordingly been convicted and sentenced to fine under section 25 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878). The Sessions Judge has referred this case to us as a Court of Revision, that the conviction and sentence may be set aside, on the ground that a confession so made is not admissible in evidence, and as that is the only evidence in the case, there is no evidence to justify the conviction and sentence.

Section 25 of the Evidence Act declares that no confession made to a Police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence. We are not inclined to restrict this to officers of the regular Police Force. In our opinion, it applies to every Police officer. In Empress v. Rama Birapa, (1878) I. L. R., 3 Bom., 12, it was held to apply to a Police patel, and in In the matter of Hiran Miya, (1877) 1 C. L. R., 21, it was held that the proper construction of section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act is one that excludes confessions to a Police officer under any circumstances. The High Court, too, accepted the opinion expressed by GARTH, C.J., in The Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose, (1876) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 207, that the term "Police officer" should not be read in a strict technical sense, but according to its more comprehensive and popular meaning. As without the confession there is no evidence to prove the offence, the conviction and sentence must be set aside, and the fine if paid refunded.

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Umesh Chunder Ghose.....Petitioner

Queen-Empress.....Opposite Party.*

Opium Act (I of 1878), sections 5 and 9—Licensed Vendor, Liability of, under section 9 for keeping incorrect accounts.

Section 5 of the Opium Act (I of 1878) declares that the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may make rules consistent with the Act regulating the sale of opium. Under this section rules were issued by the Government of Bengal with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council on the 21st February 1898, rule 15† of which declares that a person to whom a license has been granted may sell opium by retail in accordance with the conditions specified in the license. The conditions of the license for the retail sale of opium are contained in Form No. 1 made under rule 15†. Under article 13 of this form, the holder of the license is to keep a daily correct account showing the quantity of opium received and sold, and other details. Article 18 sets out that an infringement of any of the conditions contained in the form or imposed by the Opium Act the license may be cancelled.

The petitioner, a licensed vendor of opium, was convicted of having kept incorrect accounts in contravention of the rules made under section 5 of the Opium Act, and having thereby committed an offence punishable under section 9 of that Act. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months.

Held, that the conviction and sentence must be set aside, there being nothing in any of the rules made under section 5 of the Act which would make the preparation of an incorrect account punishable under section 9.

THE petitioner, Umesh Chunder Ghose, was licensed as a vendor of opium, and was convicted by the Magistrate of Alipur of having kept incorrect accounts of the sale of opium in contravention of the rules made by the Local Government under section 5 of the Opium Act (I of 1878), and of having thereby rendered himself liable to punishment under section 9 of that Act. The Magistrate sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 200, [572] and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. On appeal this sentence was confirmed by the Sessions Judge.

Rule 15† of the rules made under section 5 enacts that “ a person to whom a license has been granted . . . may sell opium by retail in accordance with the conditions specified in the license.”

* Criminal Revision No. 31 of 1899, made against the order passed by C. P. Caspersz, Esq., Sessions Judge of Alipur, dated the 8th November 1898.

† Notification No. 1225 S. R., published in the Calcutta Gazette, 23rd February 1898.

The specified conditions material to this case were articles XIII and XVIII. Article XIII states that the licensee—“ shall keep a daily correct account in the following form, to be balanced at the close of each day ; this account to be kept in a printed account book to be purchased at the Collector's office.

DATE.	Quantity of opium remain- ing in store yesterday.	Quantity received this day and whence received.	Total quantity to be accounted for.	Quantity sold this day.	Quantity remaining in store.”
	M. S. C.	M. S. C.	M. S. C.	M. S. C.	M. S. C.

No. XVIII of the conditions states:—

“ That on the infringement of any of the above articles or any of the conditions imposed by the Opium Act, 1878, or by the rules made thereunder, . . . this license and any other license or licenses he may have obtained for the sale of opium may be cancelled by the Collector, and he shall not be entitled to the refund of any fee payable under the license which he has paid in advance, and he must pay the fee for the month in which the license is cancelled ”

Babu Hem Chunder Mitter for the Petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Gordon Leith) for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The petitioner has been convicted by the Magistrate of having kept incorrect accounts of a shop of which he was a licensed vendor of opium, and thereby of having committed a breach of the rules under the Opium Act, and thus of having committed an offence punishable under section 9 of the Act, and he has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 200 or, in default, to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. On appeal, the Sessions Judge has affirmed the conviction and sentence, but has held that the petitioner has brought himself within the purview of rules [573] 39 and 40 of the Government rules. We have not been able to find these rules, but Mr. Leith, who appears for the Government in support of this conviction, informs us that he has reason to believe that these rules are obsolete rules, which have been re-placed by certain rules in the hands of those who appear in this case representing the adverse parties. Now we should not be inclined to set aside this conviction, if, notwithstanding this reference to obsolete rules by the Sessions Judge, it could be shown to us that the facts on which the petitioner has been convicted by both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge would amount to a breach of the law rendering him so punishable, but we have been unable to find any legal authority justifying the conviction and sentence passed.

The petitioner has been convicted under section 9 of the Opium Act of 1878 of having contravened the rules made under section 5 of that Act. Section 5 declares that the Local Government, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may make rules consistent with the Act regulating the sale of opium, and the case for the prosecution is that, by making false or incorrect accounts regarding the sale of opium, the petitioner has contravened these rules. Now, section 15 of the rules issued by the Government of Bengal with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, on the 21st February 1898, declares that a person to whom a license has been granted may sell opium by retail in accordance with the conditions specified in the license. We are next referred to the subsidiary rules issued under the authority of the Board of Revenue, the appendix attached to which sets out what is described as Form I, professing to have been made under rule 15* (1) already referred to. This appendix contains the conditions under which opium licenses are granted. Amongst these conditions, no doubt, is an obligation set out in rule 13 in regard to the regular maintenance of a register in the prescribed form showing the sales of opium and other details relating thereto, and rule 18 sets out the penalty for an infringement of any of the abovementioned conditions, or of any of the conditions imposed by the Opium Act of 1878, or by the rules made under that Act, viz., that the license shall be cancelled. But there is nothing in any of the rules made by the [574] Government under section 5 of the Act which would make the preparation of an incorrect account punishable under section 9. We cannot consider that rule 15 * regularly made under section 5 of the Opium Act, which enables a person to whom license has been granted to sell opium by retail, in accordance with the conditions specified in the license, would subject him for any breach of any of these conditions to a penalty under section 9, unless there was some specific rule declaring that any such breach would so render him liable. The conviction and sentence must, therefore, be set aside and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

to protest on the ground that the defendants had no share or interest in the tank, and therefore no right to fish there. A quarrel ensued, in the course of which some of complainant's party were beaten, and received slight injuries. It was found by the Deputy Magistrate that Ramchandra Rai was in actual possession of a two annas share in the tank, and that he had satisfactory documents to show his bond fides in going to the tank to fish there. He held, however, that Ramchandra Rai had no right to go there with a body of armed men to assert his claim and possession over the tank by force, and he convicted the accused of rioting and voluntarily causing hurt under sections 147 and 323 of the Penal Code. From this conviction the accused applied to the High Court under its revisional powers.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Petitioner.

The judgment of the Court (Prinsep and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is a case in which the petitioners have been convicted of a riot and hurt in connection with their attempt to assert and enforce a right to fish in a certain tank, in which they were opposed by the other co-sharers. The learned pleader for the petitioners maintained that inasmuch as they had a right to fish and are found to have a share in the tank, they were justified in proceeding even by force to enjoy that right, even if they apprehended resistance on the part of others, that is to say, others having a share in the same tank. As an authority for this, our attention was drawn to the case of Pachkauri v. Queen-Empress, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 686. It is extremely difficult in cases of this description to adopt and apply a general proposition of law as applicable to the facts of different cases. Some of the observations made in that case may perhaps be applied to the facts of the present case, but even that seems doubtful. Our attention has also been drawn to the case of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 206. That case has [576] been distinguished in the case of Pachkauri v. Queen-Empress, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 686, to which reference has already been made. In our opinion, the law laid down in the case of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 206, is what should be applied to the present case, and, so far as we understand the facts of that case, they are analogous to the facts of the present case. If this case is properly distinguishable from the case of Pachkauri v. Queen-Empress, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 686, the opinion we hold is not inconsistent with that judgment. We agree with the view of the law expressed by the learned Judges of this Court in the case of Ganouri Lal Das v. Queen-Empress, and we therefore refuse this application.

*Recognisance to keep peace—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106—Security for keeping the peace on conviction—C conviction under
s. 143 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).*

Conviction of a person under s. 143 of the Penal Code is not necessarily a ground for making an order against him under s. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In order to bring his acts within the terms of the latter section, there must either be an express finding to the effect that his acts involved a breach of the peace, or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case.

THE petitioner in this case was convicted under section 143 and section 379 of the Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month, and was further directed under section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with one surety of Rs. 500 for keeping the peace for one year, or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for the same period.

[577] Mr. P. L. Roy, and Babu Joy Gopal Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jackson, and Babu Joges Chunder Dey, for the Opposite Party.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Stanley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The petitioner has been convicted under sections 143 and 379 of the Indian Penal Code of being a member of an unlawful assembly and of theft, and in addition to the sentences passed he has been required under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to give security to keep the peace. A rule has been granted on his application to consider the conviction and sentence for theft and the order under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The complainant and the petitioner have for some time past been disputing regarding the right to the properties which have formed the subject-matter of the theft, and various orders have been obtained from the Civil Courts on this subject. But it is clear that when the act found to constitute the offence of theft was committed no order had been obtained against the petitioner. His act cannot therefore be regarded as a dishonest act within the terms of the Penal Code so as to constitute the offence of theft. Mr. Jackson, who shows cause against the rule, informed us that he was not prepared to maintain this order.

But though the petitioner has been convicted under section 379 as well as under section 143 of the Penal Code, only one sentence of fine has been passed on him, so that if the conviction under section 143 be maintained there is no reason for interfering with that sentence, which is appropriate under section 143. The acts found, both by the Magistrate and by the Appellate Court to have been committed by the petitioner, amply establish the conviction under section 143 of the Penal Code, and we accordingly decline to interfere with the sentence.

The question next arises whether the order under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requiring the petitioner to give security to keep the peace is a valid order.

That section enables certain specified Courts, after convicting a person of any of certain offences, to pass an order summarily [578] binding him over to keep the peace. Amongst those offences an offence under section 143 of the Penal Code does not appear. But it is contended that it is included amongst the offences specified in the section in general terms. Section 106 of the Code of 1898 runs thus: "Whenever any person accused of rioting, assault or other offences involving a breach of the peace or of abetting the same or of assembling armed men or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same is convicted, &c." The terms of section 106 of the Code of 1898 are the same as those of section 106 of the Code of 1882, with the exception of the words "involving a breach of the peace."

Now, being a member of an unlawful assembly does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace; the members may abstain from proceeding to such lengths. It does, however, involve an apprehension that a breach of the peace may result. Nor does a conviction of an offence under section 143 of being a member of an unlawful assembly necessarily amount to a conviction of "taking unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing" a breach of the peace. In order to bring the acts of the accused within either of these terms it is necessary that the Magistrate should expressly find that the acts of the person convicted amount to this, or at all events that the evidence is so clear that without such an express finding a superior Court, such as a Court of Revision, should be satisfied that the acts do involve a breach of the peace or an evident intention of committing the same. In the case before us we are not satisfied that this is established, and we cannot assume that the Magistrate found that this was established. The summary order requiring security to keep the peace must therefore be set aside.

The 23rd March, 1899.

Nisa Chand Gaita and others.....Defendants

Kanchiram Bagani.....Plaintiff.*

Possession, Suit for—Previous possession, short of the statutory period of limitation—Dispossession—Suit brought more than six months after dispossession, Effect of.

Mere previous possession for any period short of the statutory period of twelve years will not entitle a plaintiff to a decree for recovery of possession in a suit brought more than six months after dispossession, even if the defendant could not establish any title to the disputed land.

Wise v. Ameerunnisa, (1879) L. R., 7 I. A., 73, referred to.

Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma, (1867) 8 W. R., 386, and Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 591, dissented from.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of a plot of land on establishment of his jamai right thereto, as well as on a title acquired by twelve years' adverse possession. The plaintiff's allegation was that he had been in possession of the disputed jama for more than twelve years under the maliks; that in the year 1295 B.S. defendants 9 and 10 dispossessed him from a portion of the said land, but he recovered possession of the same by a suit brought under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act; that in the year 1296 B. S. the principal defendants wrongfully cut and carried away the paddy grown by him upon the disputed land, and he brought a suit for compensation against the said defendants, which was dismissed. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit.

[580] The defendants denied the plaintiff's alleged jamai right as well as his maliks' zemindari right to the disputed land; they also pleaded limitation.

The Munsif found that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed land for about seven or eight years within twelve years from the date of the suit, but he had been out of possession for the last six years; but he held that inasmuch as the plaintiff could not prove his title by adverse possession of twelve years, nor his jamai right, the suit must be dismissed notwithstanding that the defendant could not establish any title to the disputed land. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

From this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Hara Kumur Mitter, for the Appellants.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 770 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Mahima Chandra Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Faridpur, dated the 29th of January 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Chandra Bhusan Mukerjee, Munsif of Madaripur, in that District, dated the 26th of February 1896.

Babu Nil Madhab Bose for the Respondent.

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent to recover possession of a plot of land, on his jamai right, that is, his right as tenant thereof, as well as on a title acquired by twelve years' adverse possession.

The question for decision is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree merely upon proof of previous possession for a period less than twelve years, on the ground that the defendant has established no title, the suit having been brought more than six months after the date of dispossession. That question was raised in the Courts below. The first Court answered it in the negative, and dismissed the suit. The Lower Appellate Court, on appeal by the plaintiff, has answered the question in the affirmative and given the plaintiff a decree.

In second appeal it is contended that this view is wrong in law; and in support of the contention urged on behalf of the defendants appellants the cases of Ertaza Hossein v. Bany [581] Mistry, (1882) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 130; Debi Churn Boido v. Issur Chunder Manjee, (1882) I.L.R., 9 Cal., 39; Purmeshur Chowdhry v. Brijo Lal Chowdhry, (1889) I.L.R., 17 Cal., 256; Shama Churn Roy v. Abdul Kabear (3 C. W. N., 158), and Wise v. Ameerunnissa Khatoon, (1879) L. R., 7 I. A., 73, have been relied upon; while, on the other side, the cases of Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma, (1867) 8 W. R., 386, Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 591, and Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834; L. R., 20 I. A., 99, have been cited as supporting the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court.

The cases of Enaetoollah Chowdhry v. Kishen Soondur Surma, (1867) 8 W. R., 386, and Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh, (1881) I.L.R., 7 Cal., 591, no doubt support the respondent's contention; but the case of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834; L.R., 20 I.A., 99, is quite distinguishable from the present case. If that were not so, then notwithstanding that a different view is taken in the more recent decisions of this Court, we should have been bound to follow the decision in that case, it being a decision of the Privy Council. Now the distinction between the case of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834; L. R., 20 I. A., 99, and the present case is this. There the plaintiff was in possession when he brought his suit, whereas in the present case the plaintiff is out of possession. What the plaintiff asked for in the case of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous was a decree declaring his right, and an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing his possession; what the plaintiff asks for in this case is only recovery of possession; and what was said by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee with reference to the plaintiff's right to obtain this relief is to be found in the following passage of their judgment: "It appears to their Lordships that there is here a misapprehension of the nature of the plaintiff's case upon the facts stated in the judgment. The possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of [582] title as owner against the defendant. By section 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), if the plaintiff had been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, he could by a suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession, have recovered possession, notwithstanding any other title that might be set up in such suit. If he could thus recover possession from a person who might be able to prove a title, it is certainly right and just that he should be able, against a person who has no title and is a mere wrong-doer, to obtain a declaration of title as owner, and an injunction to restrain the wrong-doer from interfering with his possession." This shows, as we understand the judgment, that the reason for their Lordships' decision was this: that as the plaintiff, had his position been rendered somewhat worse by his being dispossessed, could, by instituting a suit within six months for recovery of possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, have recovered possession even as against a person who might establish a better title, it was only right and just that if he brought his suit before he was dispossessed he should be declared entitled to retain possession as against a mere wrong-doer, and should obtain an injunction restraining the wrong-doer from interfering with his possession. But, though that was so in the case of a plaintiff who was in possession, and had, therefore, a possibility open to him of being restored to possession upon mere proof of possession, by instituting a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act upon being dispossessed, it does not follow that it should be so in the case of a plaintiff who had been in possession, and allowed more than six months to elapse after his dispossession, and therefore lost the possibility of recovering possession, by a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, upon mere proof of previous possession. The case of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834; L. R., 20 I. A., 99, does not, therefore, in our opinion, help the plaintiff in this case.

Then as regards the cases in this Court which have been cited by the plaintiff respondent, they have been regarded in the later decisions of this Court as practically overruled by the decision [583] of the Privy Council in Wise v. Ameerunnissa Khatoon, (1879) L.R., 7 I. A., 73. In this last mentioned case their Lordships observe: "It is quite clear that the plaintiffs have failed to make out a title. The defendants were put into possession by the Government, who were entitled to the lands, and they were ordered by the Magistrate under the Code of Criminal Procedure to be retained in possession. If the plaintiffs had wished to contend that the defendants had been wrongfully put into possession, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover on the strength of their previous possession, without entering into the question of title at all, they ought to have brought their action within six months, under section 15 of Act XIV of 1859; but they did not do so"; and then their Lordships add: "The High Court with reference to this point say (and in their Lordships' opinion, correctly say): 'Further, de facto possession having been given to the defendants under section 318 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in accordance with the Deputy Collector's award, the plaintiff will not be entitled to a decree until and unless he can show a better title to these lands than the defendants. The fact that the plaintiff's possession as regards B, C and D was confirmed under Act IV of 1840, and that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 unsuccessfully endeavoured to disturb them by regular suit, does not bar the right of Government. Section 2 of Act IV of 1840 only affects persons concerned in the dispute. If Kalkini had belonged to a private individual he might have reduced into his own possession lands which had accreted to the estate, and which undoubtedly were his. But lands to which he is unable to make out a title cannot be recovered on the ground of previous possession merely, except in a suit under section 15 of Act IV of 1859, which must be brought within six months from the time of that dispossession.'"

Following these observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, this Court in the cases of Ertaza Hossein v. Bany Mistry, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 130; Debi Churn Boido v. Issur Chunder Manjee, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 39; and [584] Purmeshur Chowdhry v. Brijo Lall Chowdhry, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 256, has held that a plaintiff in a suit for possession brought more than six months after his dispossession, is not entitled to possession, merely upon proof of previous possession short of possession for the statutory period of twelve years which can give a title by adverse possession; and the last case cited for the appellant, namely, Shama Churn Roy v. Abdul Kabeer, 3 C. W. N., 158, also takes the same view, and distinguishes suits for recovery of possession from that class of cases which the Privy Council had to consider in the case of Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous, (1893) I. L. R., 20 Cal., 834 : L. R., 20 I. A., 99. The weight of authority is therefore clearly in favour of the view contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant. That being so, it is not necessary for us to go into the matter any further. If it were necessary to give reasons in support of this view, we should say that in a suit to recover possession brought more than six months after the date of dispossession, the plaintiff must prove title, and mere previous possession for any period short of the statutory period of twelve years cannot be sufficient for the purpose, because, if that were so, anomalous results might arise; and it would be difficult to determine what should be the relative durations of possession of the plaintiff and the defendant to entitle the former to a decree. For take a case like this: A plaintiff whilst in possession, which had lasted for eight years, is dispossessed by the defendant, and does not bring his suit until after seven years. Why should eight years' possession of the plaintiff entitle him to a decree against the defendant, whose possession, though originating it may be in force, was allowed to continue for seven years peaceably? Or, again, the periods may be reversed; and a plaintiff who was in possession for seven years may be dispossessed, and may not bring his suit until after eight years. These difficulties and anomalies must arise unless we accept the view contended for by Babu Saroda Charan Mitter on behalf of the appellant. It is true section 9 of the Specific Relief Act does not expressly prohibit a person from recovering possession upon [585] mere proof of previous possession in a suit brought more than six months after dispossession; but the inclination of our minds is, that if a person wishes to recover possession merely upon proof of previous possession, without proof of any title, the remedy prescribed for him is to be found in section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. If he does not avail himself of that remedy by bringing a suit within six months, it becomes barred.

The result is, that this appeal must be allowed, and the decree of the Lower Appellate Court be set aside and that of the first Court restored and affirmed, with costs in this Court and the Court below.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[This decision must be deemed erroneous. In Perry v. Chissold, (1907) A.C., 73, the Privy Council, on an appeal from New South Wales, thus explained the nature of the possessory right. "It cannot be disputed that a person in possession of land in the assumed character of owner and exercising peaceably the ordinary rights of ownership has a perfectly good title against all the world but the rightful owner. And if the rightful owner does not come forward and assert his title by process of law within the period prescribed by the provisions of the Statute of Limitations applicable to the case, his right is for ever extinguished, and the possessory owner acquires an absolute title.

"On behalf of the Minister reliance was placed on the case of Doe v. Barnard, 13 Q.B., 945, which seems to lay down this proposition, that if a person having only a possessory title to land be supplanted in the possession by another who has himself no better title, and afterwards brings an action to recover the land, he must fail in case he shows in the course of the proceedings that the title on which he seeks to recover was merely possessory. It is, however, difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile this case with the later case of Asher v. Whitlock, L.R., 1 Q.B., 1, in which Doe v. Barnard was cited. The judgment of COCKBURN, C.J. is clear on the point. The rest of the Court concurred, and it may be observed that one of the members of the Court in Asher v. Whitlock (LUSH, J.) had been a counsel for the successful party in Doe v. Barnard. The conclusion at which the Court arrived in Doe v. Barnard is hardly consistent with the views of such eminent authorities on Real Property Law as Mr. Preston and Mr. Joshua Williams. It is opposed to the opinions of modern text-writers of such weight and authority as Professor Maitland and HOLMES J., of the Supreme Court of the United States."—per LORD MACNAGHTEN.

ORIGINAL CIVIL. •

The 5th April, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Tarak Mohiney Dassee

versus

Grees Chunder Dass (and two other suits).*

Reference to Registrar—Statement of facts, filing of, after appointed time—

Right of party failing to appear and support such statement—

Practice—Rules of High Court, Nos. 522, 537.

On the 4th February 1899, one G was granted a month's time to file his statement of facts in a reference which was pending before the Registrar, and in default thereof it was ordered that the reference should be heard ex parte against him. The statement of facts was filed before the Registrar seven days after the proper time. The Registrar refused to deal with the statement of facts without an order of Court. G then applied to the Court for an order that the Registrar might be at liberty to refer to the statement of facts, and that G might be permitted to appear and support them. The party opposing contended that G ought not to be allowed to file his statement of facts, that he might appear in person, but had no right to employ counsel or attorney. Held, that G was entitled to file his statement of facts, and that the reference should be proceeded with in the usual course.

By a decree in these suits, dated the 26th February 1890, certain inquiries were directed to be made by the Second Assistant Registrar. On the 10th May 1890 it was ordered that the defendant Grees Chunder Dass and two other parties should file their [586] statement of facts within a certain time. No proceedings, however, having been taken in the matter the reference was struck out from the list of references on the 23rd March 1892. The reference was restored on the 18th December 1897, and Grees Chunder Dass was ordered to file his statement of facts within a fortnight, and in default the reference was to be heard ex parte as against him. The statement of facts was not filed as directed, and no further proceedings were taken for a year. On the 3rd February 1899 Grees Chunder Dass was served with a Registrar's summons, dated the 28th January 1899, calling upon him to appear on the 4th February 1899 to proceed with the reference. On the 4th February 1899, on the application of Grees Chunder Dass, the Court granted him a month's further time to file his statement of facts and in default thereof the reference was to be heard ex parte as against him. Grees Chunder Dass prepared his statement of facts, and on the 2nd or 3rd of March 1899 asked his attorney to file them, but there being at that time a conflict of interest between Grees Chunder Dass and his attorney the latter refused to act for him, and the statement of facts was not filed. Grees Chunder Dass was summoned to appear before the Registrar on the 11th March 1899 to proceed with the reference pursuant to the order of the 4th

* Original Civil Suits Nos. 375 of 1886, 90 of 1887, and 172 of 1888.

February 1899. On the 11th March 1899 he appeared and filed his statement of facts before the Registrar. On the 17th March 1899 the Registrar directed Grees Chunder Dass to obtain an order from the Court authorising him to deal with the statement of facts. On the 29th March 1899 Grees Chunder Dass applied in Chambers for an order that the Assistant Registrar might be at liberty to refer to the statement of facts filed by Grees Chunder Dass, and that Grees Chunder might be allowed to appear and support his statement of facts as in an ordinary reference.

Mr. Pugh for the Defendant Grees Chunder Dass.

Mr. Dunne for the Defendants Kumud Chunder Dass and Benode Chunder Dass.

Mr. Pugh.—Grees Chunder Dass cannot be shut out from defending, though he was late in filing his statement of facts. The [587] only question is that of costs. Collins v. The Vestry of Paddington, (1880) L. R., 5 Q. B. D., 368. He is in contempt for not complying with the order of the Court; still it is submitted he is entitled to take any step which may be necessary for the purposes of his defence. Haldane v. Eckford, (1869) L. R., 7 Eq., 425; Fry v. Ernest, (1863) 9 Jur. N. S., 1151. Where a party summoned to attend on a reference fails to attend at the time appointed the Judge may reconsider the proceedings if he be satisfied that the absent party was not guilty of wilful delay or negligence—Rule 507, Belchamber's Rules and Orders. Had Grees Chunder Dass been guilty of wilful disobedience the Court might then refuse to give him relief. Haigh v. Haigh, (1885) L. R., 31 Ch. D., 478.

Mr. Dunne, contra.—The order of the 4th February 1899 clearly states that if Grees Chunder Dass does not file his statement of facts within a month the reference should proceed ex parte. This Court is bound by that order and cannot review it. Grees Chunder may appear in person and check what we do, but has no right to employ counsel and solicitor. Parties must follow the rules of the Court and take steps within the proper time. The cases of Mootchand v. Foolchand and Radhabullav Dass v. Bholanath Dass, both unreported, were referred to.

Stanley, J.—In this matter a summons was taken out by Grees Chunder Dass, the defendant in the first mentioned suit and the plaintiff in the second and third mentioned suits, for an order that the Assistant Registrar may be at liberty to refer to the statement of facts filed by him, and that he may be allowed to appear and support the statement of facts filed by him as in an ordinary defended reference.

It appears that a decree was made so far back as the 26th of February 1890, directing an inquiry as to the properties belonging to the defendants jointly, an account of the joint estate and joint and separate liabilities as between the defendants, and an account of the sums spent by the defendants respectively, [588] and whether such sums ought to be debited against the defendants jointly or against the individual making the expenditure. On the 10th May 1890, WILSON, J., ordered the defendants to file a statement of facts. Negotiations took place for the compromise of the suits, and no steps having been taken in prosecution of the same, on the 23rd March 1892 the suit was struck out from the General Reference list as having been abandoned under Rule 537.

On the 27th May 1893 the case was reinstated on the General Reference list on the application of the two defendants who are now resisting this application.

There were no proceedings taken after the reinstatement, and again the suit was under the rule deemed to be abandoned.

On the 18th December 1897 another application was made to restore the case to the list, and an order was made to reinstate it, and by that order Grees Chunder Dass was ordered to file a statement of facts and accounts before the 28th February 1898, and in default of his doing so it was directed that the reference was to be proceeded with against him ex parte. Negotiations for a compromise were again opened, and the order of the 18th of December 1897 was not complied with. On the 4th February 1899 an application was again made to restore the case to the list of references, and SALE, J., ordered that the reference directed by the decree of 1890 be proceeded with, and the defendant Grees Chunder Dass was directed within one month to file his statement of facts, and in default the reference was to proceed ex parte as against him. The statement of facts was not filed within the month, but was handed to Bahu Grees Chunder Banerjee, the Second Assistant Registrar of the Court, seven days after the expiration of the month, and Grees Chunder Dass asked that the Registrar should proceed with the reference in the ordinary way.

The two defendants, who are opposing the present application, objected to this, and urged that the reference must, under Mr. Justice SALK'S order, be proceeded with ex parte as against Grees Chunder Dass. The Assistant Registrar then sent the matter up to the Court for directions.

[589] Mr. Pugh for the applicants submits that the application is one which his client is entitled to have granted ex debito justitiæ, and that the only question for the Court relates to the costs of the motion.

Mr. Dunne has offered strenuous opposition to the motion, and he submits that the order of Mr. Justice SALE has determined the matter, and that I am bound by that order and cannot review it; that as the statement of facts was not filed in time the inquiries directed by the decree must proceed ex parte, that is, that the applicant cannot be allowed to use the statement of facts filed by him or make any substantive case before the Assistant Registrar or be represented by an attorney on the inquiry.

The order of Mr. Justice SALE directs that the reference directed by the decree be taken up and proceeded with by the Second Assistant Registrar of the Court at the expiration of one month from the date of the order, and orders that Grees Chunder Dass do, within the time aforesaid, file his statement of facts and accounts as directed by the said order, and that in default thereof the said reference be proceeded with ex parte as against him. Mr. Dunne contended that the original reference directed by the decree of 1890 had been abandoned, and that the order of Mr. Justice SALE amounted to a new reference. This does not appear to me to be so. Rule 537 says: "If default be made in complying with rule 159, or if at any stage of a reference no steps shall be taken to prosecute it for thirty days, any party may apply, by summons, at Chambers, that the suit be dismissed or discontinued for want of prosecution, and such order may be made thereon as to costs or otherwise as to the Judge shall seem fit. If no such application be made, the suit shall, at the end of fourteen days from the time of such default, or of such thirty days, be struck out of the General Reference list, and be deemed to have been abandoned." Under this rule the suit is deemed to be abandoned, not the reference. Mr. Dunne says it is the reference which must be deemed to have been abandoned and not the suit—and that Mr Justice SALE'S order was a new order of reference and is binding upon me.

I think that is not the proper construction to be placed on [590] the learned Judge's order. Rule 537 merely provides that the suit shall be deemed to have been abandoned if proceedings are not taken in time, but an application can be made to revive it, and, if it is revived, it is revived as a suit in which a decree has been made directing that the applicant shall file a statement of facts and accounts.

If the order of Mr. Justice SALE is interpreted as an order that the applicant shall not file a statement of facts unless he does so within a limited time, it appears to me that this order would be a modification and over-ruling of the decree in the suit which directs that he shall account. The applicant is bound to account, and so long as he fails to do so he is in contempt and liable, I would say, to attachment.

Can an order of this Court preclude him from purging his contempt? I think not. I understand Mr. Justice SALE's order to amount to nothing more than this, that if the applicant fail to file his statement within the time limited by the order the reference shall notwithstanding proceed. If no statement is filed by the applicant so much the worse for him, as he cannot raise any objection to the accounts filed by the opposite party inasmuch as he had not filed any verified statement. (Rule 522.)

I was referred to two unreported cases recently decided by the Chief Justice of this Court where he laid down that parties must follow the rules of Court as to the time within which steps should be taken. Moti Chand v. Fool Chand and Radhabullav Dass v. Bholanath Dass. Those cases are distinguishable from the present. There the application was for an extension of time for appealing after judgment had been pronounced when the opposite party had obtained a vested interest in the judgment; here it is different; nothing has been decided between the parties. The questions between them are still undecided. A party cannot be shut out from filing a statement when by doing so he is only purging the contempt he was in in not having done so before. Each party has a right to have the dispute determined on the merits, and the Court should do everything to favour the fair trial of the issues between the parties. The application is, I think, a matter ex debito justitiæ.

[591] I have not gone into any of the matters contained in the affidavits dealing with the delays which have taken place or into the charges which have been made by the applicant. I think that these charges ought not to have been made. If they had not been made, Mr. Dunne's client would not, I think, have been justified in resisting this application. Consequently, though I hold that the statement of facts may be filed and the reference proceeded with in the usual course, I direct that the applicant shall pay the costs of this application.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Nistarini Dassee

versus

Nundo Lall Bose.

Practice—Evidence taken on commission on behalf of defendant—Right of plaintiff to refer to such evidence as part of record of suit—

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 389 and 390—Act VIII of 1859, section 179.

Defendant examined a witness on commission. The commission was returned to the Court. The plaintiff in opening his case claimed the right to refer to the evidence taken on commission as part of the record of the suit. Defendant objected, contending that if plaintiff read it, he must read it as his own evidence.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to refer to the evidence as part of the record.

Dwarkanath Dutt v. Gunga Dayi, (1872) 8 B. L. R., App., 102, followed.

IN this case a commission had issued at the instance of one of the defendants, Nundo Lall Bose, for the examination of a witness on his behalf. The examination of the witness having been completed the commission was returned to the Court. The plaintiff in opening his case claimed the right to refer to such evidence taken on commission as part of the record in the case.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe), Mr. [592] W. C. Bonnerjee, Mr. Dunne, Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, and Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hill, Mr. O'Kinealy, Mr. Chakravarti, and Mr. B. C. Mitter, for the Defendant Nundo Lal Bose.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee submitted he was entitled to refer to the evidence taken on commission on behalf of the defendant Nundo Lall Bose, and referred to Dwarkanath Dutt v. Gunga Dayi, (1872) 8 B. L. R., App., 102.

Mr. Hill, contra, contended that the plaintiff in his opening was not entitled to refer to and comment on the evidence taken on commission. It has not been tendered and is not yet before the Court, and in commenting on the case in the pleadings Counsel is not at liberty to refer to the evidence taken under commission. If the plaintiff wishes to read the evidence he can only read it as his own.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee in reply.—Section 389 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it shall, subject to the provisions of section 390, form part of the record of the suit; therefore this commission forms part of the record of this suit, and I submit that under section 389 I am entitled to refer to the same without putting in such evidence. The case I have cited was under the provisions of section 179 of Act VIII of 1859, and is directly in point.

Stanley, J.—In my opinion, having regard to the language of section 389 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff is entitled to refer to the evidence as a matter of record. I shall follow the decision in Dwarkanath Dutt v. Gunga Dayi, (1872) 8 B. L. R., App., 102.

Attorney for the Plaintiff: Babu Romesh Chunder Basu.

Attorney for the Defendant Nundo Lall Bose: Babu Hirendra Nath Dutt.

[593] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 18th April, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Janhavi Chowdhurani.....Defendant

versus

Bindu Bashini Chowdhurani and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Right of way—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 26—Easement—Prescription—Continuance of enjoyment as of right—Cessation of user—Actual user.

No rule can be laid down as to what would or would not constitute a continuance of the enjoyment as of right of a right of way, when there has been no exercise of it for any given period : that must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the nature of the right claimed.

For the plaintiff to succeed in a suit for the declaration of a right of way, as acquired under section 26† of the Limitation Act, conceding that he need not prove an actual user of the way up till the end of the statutory period of twenty years, there must, when there is no user for a long time, be circumstances from which the Court can infer the continuance of enjoyment as of right over the whole statutory period, and the cessation of the user must

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1734 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Dwarkanath Bhattacharjee, Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 14th of August 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Kali Krishna Chowdhry, Munsif of Attia, dated the 29th of June 1896.

†[Sec. 26 :—Where the access and use of light or air to and for any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where any way or water course, or the use of any water, or any other easement (whether affirmative or negative) has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, the right to such access and use of light or air, way, water-course, use of water, or other easement, shall be absolute and indefeasible.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

Explanation.—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual discontinuance of the possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.]

be at least consistent with such continuance. The enjoyment required by the Act cannot be in abeyance and at the same time continue so as to give the plaintiff the special right claimed. The question of continued enjoyment is an inference to be drawn from facts, rather than one of fact, and if there are no facts to sustain the inference, a decision in favour of such enjoyment cannot stand.

The plaintiffs sued the defendant for the declaration of a right of way, as acquired under section 26 of the Limitation Act, over a plot of land belonging to the defendant. It was alleged that in April 1892, the defendant dispossessed the plaintiffs from the dominant tenement; and that the plaintiffs sued the defendant for recovery of possession of it under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and having obtained a decree, got possession on the 19th June 1895. It was further alleged that thereupon the defendant, on the 21st June 1895, obstructed the disputed way by erecting sheds. The present suit was instituted on the 25th November 1895.

Held, that the enjoyment of the right of way on the part of the plaintiffs not having continued until within two years of the institution of the suit, the suit must fail.

Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chum Barooie, (1981) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 132, distinguished.

[594] THE facts of the case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of this report, are as follow :—

The plaintiffs sued for the declaration of their right of way over a piece of land belonging to the defendant, upon the ground that the tenants of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had used the disputed way peaceably, openly, without interruption, and as of right, for more than twenty years; that in April 1892, the defendant had dispossessed the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and their tenants from the land forming the dominant tenement, known as the chunia bari; that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and their tenants brought a possessory suit against the defendant under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act; that having obtained a decree in that suit, they got khas possession of the dominant tenement on the 19th of June 1895; and that thereupon the defendant on the 21st of June 1895, obstructed the alleged pathway by raising sheds thereon and thereby prevented their egress from and ingress to the dominant tenement. The present suit was instituted on the 25th November 1895. Besides the statutory easement claimed, the plaintiffs also claimed, in the alternative, an easement of necessity in regard to the alleged pathway.

The defence, amongst other things, was that the plaintiffs, not having been in enjoyment of the disputed right of way within two years of the suit, their claim was barred under section 26 of the Limitation Act.

Upon this plea the Munsif found that, although the plaintiffs never used the pathway during the period that the defendant was in the possession of the dominant tenement, the right of way remained in abeyance during that period, that about eight or nine days after the plaintiffs had recovered possession of the dominant tenement, the defendant raised a straw shed on the spot over which the way was claimed; and accordingly, as well as on the merits, decreed the suit.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge held as follows :—

"I find as a fact, from the evidence adduced by both the parties, that the defendant having taken possession of the chunia bari, as also of other buris contiguous to it, made material alteration in them, and that since [595] then the plaintiff ceased to use the way. The question also admits of being looked at from another point of view. The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs goes to prove that they obtained possession of the dominant holding on the 19th June 1895, and this suit was instituted on the 25th November 1895, i.e., within six months from the date of the delivery of possession. I, therefore, hold that the plea of limitation is untenable."

Agreeing with the Munsif in this, as well as in the other points, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal.

The defendant then appealed to the High Court.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

The Subordinate Judge has in this case affirmed the decision of the Munsif, and held that the plaintiffs have, under the provisions of the 26th section of the Limitation Act, acquired a right of way over the land of the defendant. The plaintiffs claimed to be the owners of a plot of land appertaining to an estate which belonged to their predecessors and the predecessors of the defendant; they said that this plot had been allotted to them when a partition of the estate was made many years ago; that it had since been in their possession, and that the approach to it was by the way in question, which they and their tenants had always used for that purpose. They claimed a right of way both by grant as an easement of necessity and as acquired under section 26 of the Limitation Act. We are only concerned with the last mentioned claim, which is the one found to be established. The others have not been considered. No exception is now taken to the finding that the plaintiffs have proved an uninterrupted enjoyment of the way as of right for a period of twenty years. The points urged are, that it is not directly found that the plaintiffs are the owners of the plot of land to which the right of way is said to be appurtenant, and that it is wrongly found that the twenty years' period of [596] enjoyment continued till within two years of the time when the suit was instituted.

We think there is nothing in the first point. There was no issue upon it and it was not separately dealt with, but the question whether the way had been used by the plaintiffs in the manner alleged depended very largely upon the question whether this plot of land was in their possession or in that of the defendant. The first Court found that the plaintiffs' tenants were in possession of it for more than twenty years, and the Lower Appellate Court took the same view of the evidence.

As regards the second point, the facts found are these: In April 1892 the defendant dispossessed the plaintiffs of the plot which forms the dominant tenement. The plaintiffs got a decree for the possession of it under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), and in execution of the decree were restored to possession on the 19th of June 1895. Two days after this the defendant obstructed the way, and the plaintiffs brought this suit on the 25th November 1895. They did not use the way after the dispossession in April 1892. On these facts it is contended here, as it was in the Court below, that the claim, in so far as it is based on section 26 of the Limitation Act, must fail. Section 26 enacts that the twenty years' period of enjoyment which must be proved before the plaintiffs can succeed "shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested." The suit referred to must be this suit, as the suit under the Specific Relief Act did not relate to the right of way, and had nothing to do with the statutory period now required to be proved. As the plaintiffs did not use the way for a period of more than three and a half years before suit, the question is, whether notwithstanding such non-user the enjoyment as of right can be said to have continued so as to complete the statutory period. If it did not continue, the claim under this section must fail.

It was held in the case of Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung Barooie, (1881) I.L.R., 7 Cal., 132, that the term "enjoyment" in section 26 did not [597] mean actual user, although the illustration (b) attached to the section might indicate that it was intended to have that meaning. The right claimed in that case was a right of passage for boats over the defendant's land when it became covered with water during the rainy season; it could only be exercised at a particular season of the year, and then only if the defendant's land happened to be sufficiently flooded. The lower Court had dismissed the suit on the ground that no actual exercise of the right had taken place within two years before suit. This Court held that that was a wrong view of the law, and said, with reference to the particular case before it, that so long as the plaintiffs' right was not interfered with whenever they had occasion to use it, their enjoyment must be considered as continuing all the year round. No rule was or could be laid down as to what would or would not constitute a continuance of the enjoyment as of right when there was no exercise of it for any given period, and obviously that must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the nature of the right claimed.

But, conceding that the plaintiffs need not prove an actual user of the way up till the end of the statutory period, there must, when there is no user for a long time, be circumstances from which the Court can infer the continuance of an enjoyment as of right over the whole statutory period, and the cessation of the user must be at least consistent with such continuance. The circumstances under which the plaintiffs ceased to use the way preclude, we consider, any inference of a continued enjoyment. The defendant, wrongfully it may be, took possession of the dominant tenement; and the plaintiffs ceased to use the way which led to it over the defendant's land.

It cannot be said that during the period of dispossession, a period of more than three years, the plaintiffs had, or supposed they had, an open, peaceable, uninterrupted enjoyment of the way as of right, or that the defendant suffered such enjoyment, although there was no attempt to exercise it. The defendant did not, it is true, actually obstruct the way till June 1895, but when the plaintiffs ceased to use it there was no necessity to obstruct it, and the plaintiffs can derive no benefit from the circumstance that it [598] was not obstructed earlier. The Munsif considered that the enjoyment was in abeyance during the period of the plaintiffs' dispossession, but we are unable to see how the enjoyment required by the Act could be in abeyance, and at the same time continue so as to give the plaintiff the special right claimed. The grounds on which the Subordinate Judge found that the enjoyment continued are not clearly stated, but he seemed to consider that it was sufficient that the suit was brought within a few months of the time when the plaintiffs recovered possession of the dominant tenement. That we think does not help the plaintiffs and does not bring the case within the provisions of the section which requires that the way shall have been enjoyed in the manner specified for the full defined statutory period of twenty years. At whatever time the suit is brought the enjoyment must be found to have continued till within two years of that time, and if that cannot be found, the claim fails.

It is said that the question of continued enjoyment is a question of fact. It is an inference to be drawn from facts, and if, as here, there are no facts to sustain the inference, the decision cannot stand.

We must, therefore, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and hold that the right claimed under section 26 has not been established. The case must go back in order that he may determine whether the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed on either of the other claims. The appellant will get his costs in this Court.

Review—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1852), sections 102, 103 and 623—

Dismissal of a suit for default under section 102—Review of judgment without applying to re-instate the suit under section 103 of the Code.

[598] Where a suit was dismissed for default under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an application for review of judgment was made by the plaintiff without a previous application to have the order of dismissal set aside under section 103 of the Code :

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application for review of judgment. Kailash Mondol v. Nabadrip Chandrakar, (1896) 2 C. W. N., 318, distinguished.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are necessary for the purposes of the report, are shortly these : In a suit for partition of a certain family property the plaintiff failed to appear on the date fixed for the hearing of the case, but the defendant appeared, and the Court of First Instance dismissed the suit under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code. Thereupon the plaintiff, instead of applying to the Court for an order to set aside the dismissal under the provisions of section 103 of the Code, made an application for review of judgment. The review was granted and the suit was tried on its merits. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in accordance with the report of the Commissioner. On appeal to the District Judge he varied the decree to a small extent, but confirmed the decision of the first Court in the main. Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court, mainly on the ground that the Court of First Instance had no power to entertain an application for review of judgment made after the dismissal of the suit for default under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but the proper course for the plaintiff was to make an application to have the order of dismissal set aside under section 103 of the Code.

* Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 775 and 840 of 1897, against the decree of J. Pratt, Esq., District Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 22nd of January 1897, modifying the decree of Babu Sham Chand Dhur, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 18th of February 1896.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, and Babu Sarat Chunder Ghose, for the Appellant.
 Babu Nil Madhub Bose, and Babu Shib Chunder Palit, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows :—

These two appeals arise out of a suit for partition of certain joint property, Appeal No. 775 being a second appeal from [600] the preliminary decree for partition, and Appeal No. 840 being a second appeal from the final decree made in the suit.

The questions raised by the learned Vakil for the defendant-appellant are, first, whether the application for review of judgment made after the dismissal of the suit for default was not barred by limitation, and whether the subsequent proceedings in the suit were not therefore altogether null and void ; second, whether, on the pleadings, the learned Judge below should have gone into the question as to whether Arannagore was joint property ; and, third, whether on the facts found, the tank referred to in the judgment ought not to have been kept joint.

Upon the first question it is argued that as the suit was originally dismissed under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure for default on the part of the plaintiff, his proper course was to make an application for setting aside the order of dismissal under section 103 : that the Court had no power to entertain an application for review of judgment under section 623 in respect of an order of dismissal under section 102 ; and that as at the time when the application in question was made, the time for making an application under section 103 had expired, the plaintiff cannot derive any benefit by asking the Court to consider his application made under section 623, as one under section 103 ; and in support of this contention the case of Korlash Mondol v. Nabadwip Chandra Kar, (1896) 2 C. W. N., 318, is cited. It is further argued that if the application for review was not entertainable, and if the time for making an application under section 103 had expired, the order dismissing the suit ought to stand, and the subsequent proceedings in the case ought to be set aside as being null and void. This point does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below. But as it is a point of law which touches the legality of the whole of the proceedings we allowed it to be raised on second appeal. We are, however, of opinion that this contention ought not to prevail. It is quite true that the case cited is authority for the proposition that where a suit is dismissed under section 98, no application for review [601] of judgment under section 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be entertained against the order of dismissal. But in the present case the dismissal was one not under section 98, but under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure ; and the difference between the two sections, so far as the present point is concerned, is this, that whereas section 98, which applies to the case of neither party appearing, provides that " the suit shall be dismissed unless the Judge, for reasons to be recorded under his hand, otherwise directs," section 102, which applies to a case in which the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not, directs that " the Court shall dismiss the suit unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder." So that, while in regard to cases which come under section 98 where the Court does not otherwise direct, a dismissal of the suit is the only consequence, and the proviso, " unless the Judge, for reasons to be recorded under his hand, otherwise directs," evidently relates to the postponing of the case and not to the making of any final order in it, in cases coming under section 102, the dismissal of a suit need not be the only final order which the Court can make, but a partial decree might be passed in some cases; and therefore, whilst it would be unreasonable to say that there may be an application for review of judgment in a case coming under section 98, because, there is no judgment, neither party having appeared before the Court, and the Court having simply dismissed the suit, it cannot be said that it would be equally unreasonable for the plaintiff, in a case coming under section 102, to apply for review of judgment under section 623, for it may be open to him to show that the partial decree, which the Court has made upon the defendant's admission, gives him less than the Court ought to have given upon that admission, and that upon that ground he is entitled to have the judgment reviewed. We are, therefore, of opinion that the reason for the decision in the case of Koilash Moudol v. Nabadwip Chandra Kar, (1896) 2 C. W. N., 318, [602] does not in its integrity apply to a case like the present. The argument based on the ground of the unreasonableness and unmeaningness of an application for review of judgment, is, in our opinion, strictly applicable only to an order of dismissal made under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure and does not apply equally to an order of dismissal made under section 102.

We may observe that in the present case in which the suit was one for partition, there was, if not very clear and express, at least an ambiguous and implied admission that some of the properties of which partition was claimed were joint properties, so that it cannot be said that an application under section 623 was altogether not entertainable in this case. The first contention of the appellants, therefore, in our opinion, fails.

As to the second contention, the argument is that upon the facts stated in the plaint the question whether Arannagore was joint property did not arise. But the learned District Judge has in his judgment explained the circumstances under which he allowed that question to be raised. He observes: "Much has been made of the omission in the plaint to specifically mention the exclusion" (that is of the property Arannagore). "It must be remembered that the plaintiff was an old man at death's door, and I think allowance must be made for his having given imperfect instructions for drawing the plaint." That being so, we cannot give effect to the second contention raised before us.

As to the third contention there is no doubt some hardship in the defendant's proprietorship of the tank being subjected to a right of user of the ghat and the water by the plaintiff, but the existence of this hardship has been taken into consideration, and it is in view of this circumstance that the amount payable to the plaintiff by the defendant has been reduced by the Lower Appellate Court.

We do not therefore think that any ground has been made out for our interference with the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court. We accordingly affirm it, and dismiss Appeal No. 840 with costs. That being so, Second Appeal No. 775 will also be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Babar Ali.....Plaintiff

Krishnamanini Dassi and another.....Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 11, 12 and 13—Sale of a tenure in execution of a decree not for arrears of rent—Effect of Non-payment of landlord's fee or the fee for service of notice of the sale on the landlord before the confirmation of sale.

Under section 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, when a permanent tenure is sold in execution of a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, and the landlord's fee prescribed by section 12 of the said Act is not paid before the confirmation of the sale, the sale is invalid.

THIS appeal arose out of an action for arrears of rent and cesses with interest in respect of a seputni tenure alleged to have been held by the defendant No. 1 under the plaintiff. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the defendant No. 1 took a seputni lease of lot Kolebatpore under a registered kabuliat, dated 2nd December 1892, and since then he had been in possession of the property by collecting rents from the tenants; the defendant having failed to pay rent for the period between October 1895 and May 1896, the present suit was brought. The defence, inter alia, was that the seputni was sold on the 9th December 1895 in execution of a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent and was purchased by one Babu Ram Mitter, and that therefore the defendant had no interest in the tenure after the sale, and was not liable to pay any rent which became due after that date. The sale in which Babu Ram Mitter purchased the tenure was confirmed on the 16th January 1896, but the purchaser did not, before the confirmation of the sale, pay either the landlord's fee or the fee for the service of the notice of the sale on the landlord.

The Subordinate Judge held that the confirmation of the sale to Babu Ram Mitter effectually extinguished the defendant's interest in the tenure, and accordingly he dismissed the suit, in [604] so far as it related to the rent for the period subsequent to the confirmation of the sale. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Haro Kumar Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babu Boidya Nath Dutt, Babu Bepin Behary Ghose, and Babu Jadu Nath Mundle, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff, the holder of a darputni tenure against a seputnidar for arrears of rent for the period between Kartik 1302 and Jaista 1303 B. S. (October 1895 to May 1896).

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1079 of 1897, against the decree of J. F. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 26th of March 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Kali Prasanna Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 22nd of December 1896.

It appears that in execution of a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent the seputni tenure had been put up for sale on the 9th December 1895 and purchased by one Babu Ram Mitter. That sale was confirmed on the 16th January 1896, but the purchaser did not, before the confirmation of the sale, pay into Court, as required by section 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, either the landlord's fee or the fee for service of notice of the sale on the landlord, nor has either of these fees been since paid.

The defendant's answer to the suit was that under the sale of the 9th December 1895 her interest in the tenure had passed to Babu Ram Mitter, and that she was therefore not liable for any rent which became due after that date. As to the period prior to that date she pleaded payment. But it is only with the former branch of her answer that we are now concerned.

Upon that question both the Courts below agreed in holding that the confirmation of the sale to Babu Ram Mitter effectually extinguished the defendant's interest in the tenure, and they accordingly dismissed the suit, in so far as it related to the rent for the period subsequent to the confirmation of the sale. The question, which we have now to decide, is whether they were right or wrong in so doing.

[605] Section 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, upon which this question turns, provides, so far as it is material, that "when a permanent tenure is sold in execution of a decree other than a decree for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the Court shall, before confirming the sale under section 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, require the purchaser to pay into Court the landlord's fee prescribed by the last foregoing section, and such further fee for service of notice of the sale on the landlord as may be prescribed." It was argued on behalf of the appellant (the plaintiff in the suit) that the effect of this section is to prohibit the confirmation of a sale unless the prescribed fees have been previously paid into Court. For the respondent it was contended, on the other hand, that the duty is cast on the Court of requiring the purchaser to pay these fees; that an omission on the part of the Court to discharge this duty amounts merely to an irregularity which is cured by the confirmation of the sale; that the language of the section is merely directory; and that this view is supported by a comparison of the language of section 13 with that of section 12 in which the duties of a registering officer are laid down.

It appears to us that the contention of the appellant must prevail. The sale of permanent tenures of the kind now in question is regulated by the Bengal Tenancy Act, by section 11 of which the general rule is laid down that every permanent tenure shall, subject to the provisions of the Act, be capable of being transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as other immoveable property. Then follows section 12, which provides the rules, subject to which a voluntary transfer of a permanent tenure may be made, and section 13 which provides similarly for the sale of a permanent tenure in execution of a decree other than a decree for rent. The law thus enacted has effected considerable changes in the law relating to the sale of permanent tenures, dispensing as it does with the recognition of the sale by the landlord, as a condition to its validity. And we entertain no doubt that the more unfettered freedom of transfer confirmed by the Act was intended to be exercised, if at all, in strict conformity to the conditions which the Act prescribes, [606] and that unless those conditions are substantially complied with the transfer is invalid and ineffectual.

Much stress was laid by the respondents' pleader upon the absence from section 13 of express words of prohibition.

This consideration is, however, to our minds by no means conclusive; a prohibition may be implied although not conveyed in express language, and although the enactment is silent as to the consequences or non-observances of the forms which it prescribes. The question is as to the intention of the Legislature, and "where," as it is put by Sir P. H. MAXWELL (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd edition, p. 518) "the whole aim and object of the Legislature would be plainly defeated if the command to do the thing in a particular manner did not imply a prohibition to do it in any other, no doubt can be entertained as to the intention." We certainly think that were we to hold that it is a matter of indifference so far as concerns the validity of the transfer whether the fees for which section 13 provides have or have not been paid prior to the confirmation of the sale, we should be defeating the obvious intention of the Legislature and rendering nugatory the scheme which it thought fit, for reasons which are well understood, to substitute for the previous law on the subject.

Nor are we pressed by the consideration upon which reliance was also placed, that there is a change of phraseology in section 13, as compared with section 12, in which latter section clear words of prohibition are no doubt employed. That may be accounted for in various ways and does not by any means necessarily imply a change of intention on the part of the Legislature (see Maxwell, p. 452). What we have to look to is the substance of the matter, and we entertain no doubt that the Legislature intended by enacting section 13 to prohibit the confirmation of a sale such as is contemplated by the section unless prior to the confirmation the purchaser has paid into Court the fees for which the section provides.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the sale to Babu Ram Mitter was invalid and ineffectual as a transfer of the tenure [607] from the defendant. This being so, the decree appealed against must be set aside, in so far as it affects the plaintiff's claim for the period subsequent to the 16th January 1896, and the case must be remitted to the Lower Appellate Court to be dealt with by it according to law. Costs to abide the result.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sections 40 and 90—Letters of administration—Effect of Transfer of immoveable property by a Hindu widow with the Judge's sanction, on obtaining letters of administration—Legal necessity—Fraudulent representation.

An alienation made with the permission of the District Judge by a Hindu widow who had obtained letters of administration in respect of the estate, is valid as an absolute alienation under section 90† of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), irrespective of the existence of legal necessity.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiffs who were the reversionary heirs of defendant No. 3, for a declaration that the alienation made by the said defendant No. 3, a Hindu widow, in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, was invalid beyond the life-time of the widow, inasmuch as the alienation was made without legal necessity and in collusion with defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in order to defraud the plaintiffs.

The defence of defendant No. 1 was that he had no concern with the purchase; but defendant No. 2 set up that the purchase made by her was bona fide, and that defendant No. 3 had legal necessity for the transfer.

The Subordinate Judge found that there was no legal necessity; that defendant No. 3 had obtained the letters of administration to the estate of her husband and the permission [608] of the District Judge to sell the property by fraudulent misrepresentation of fact; and that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 acted in collusion with the defendant No. 3 in obtaining such permission; and he decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the District Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court, holding that there was no legal necessity for the transfer; that the fact of its having been effected with the permission of the District Judge did not affect the question; but he did not confirm the finding of the first Court upon the question of fraud.

Against this decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Sir Griffith Evans, Babu Nilmadhub Bose, and Babu Shib Chunder Palit, for the Appellants.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1632 of 1897, against the decree of J. F. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 14th of June 1897, confirming the decree of Babu Abinash Chunder Mitter, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 21st of August 1896.

† [Sec. 90:—An executor or administrator has power, with the consent of the Court by which the probate or letters of administration was or were granted, to dispose of the property of the deceased, either wholly or in part, in such manner as he thinks fit:

Provided that the Court may, when granting probate or letters of administration, exempt the executor or administrator from the necessity of obtaining such consent as to the whole or any specified part of the assets of the deceased.]

Babu Boidya Nath Dutt for the Respondents. *

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs, respondents, who are the reversionary heirs of the defendant No. 3, a Hindu widow, for a declaration that the alienation made by the defendant No. 3 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is invalid beyond the life-time of defendant No. 3, on the ground that the transfer was made without legal necessity, and is vitiated by fraud and collusion.

The defence was, that the alienation was valid and binding; that there was no fraud or collusion in the matter, and that the defendant No. 1 had no concern with the purchase, which was really made by the defendant No. 2 on her own behalf.

The first Court found that the alienation in question was made without any legal necessity, that the defendant No. 3 had obtained letters of administration to the estate of her deceased husband and the District Judge's permission to sell the property now in suit, upon fraudulent misrepresentation of facts, and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 made the purchase with the full knowledge of the fraudulent representations made by the defendant No. 3 in [609] obtaining the permission to sell, and had acted in collusion with the defendant No. 3 in obtaining such permission.

On appeal by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the learned District Judge has confirmed the decree of the first Court in favour of the plaintiffs, on the ground that the sale in question was not for legal necessity, and that the fact of its having been effected by the defendant No. 3 with the permission of the District Judge under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act (Act V of 1881) does not affect the question; but he has not confirmed the finding of the first Court upon the question of fraud, and he has in one or two places questioned the correctness of the inference of fraud from certain of the circumstances relied upon in the Subordinate Judge's judgment.

In second appeal it is contended for the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that the learned District Judge is wrong in holding that the alienation in question was invalid beyond the widow's life-time, on the ground of the absence of legal necessity, when he ought to have held that the alienation having been made with the permission of the District Judge by the defendant No. 3 who had obtained letters of administration in respect of the estate, it was valid as an absolute alienation under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned District Judge that the permission obtained by the defendant No. 3 under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act can give no validity to the alienation, simply because it was an alienation by a Hindu widow and was made without legal necessity, is wrong. For by section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act, the administrator of a deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in the Administrator as such; and by section 90 of the Act the Administrator has, subject to the provisions of that section, power to dispose, as he thinks fit, of all or any of the property for the time being vested in him under section 4 of the Act; and the provision of the law to which this power is subject is contained in sub-section 3 of section 90, which says that "an administrator may not, without the previous sanction [610] of the Court by which the letters of administration were granted, mortgage, charge or transfer by sale, gift, exchange or otherwise any immoveable property for the time being vested in him under section 4."

Here the sale in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was effected by the defendant No. 3, not in her character as the widow of her deceased husband, but in her character as administrator of his estate, and the deed of sale in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 distinctly recites that the alienation is made by her, she having been authorised in that behalf by the permission granted to her by the District Judge. That being so, the alienation would be valid, irrespective of the existence of legal necessity, by virtue of the provisions of section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act. The ground therefore upon which the learned District Judge has based his decision in favour of the plaintiffs is untenable, and his decision must, therefore, be set aside.

Then arises the question, whether the case ought not to be remanded to the Lower Appellate Court in order that it may come to a finding upon the question of fraud which was raised in the plaint, and upon which a finding was arrived at by the first Court in favour of the plaintiffs. It was not disputed by the learned Counsel for the appellants, and it cannot be disputed, that if the alienation in question was brought about with the object of defrauding the plaintiffs who are the reversionary heirs, and if the District Judge's permission was obtained by a false representation of facts made by the defendant No. 3, the vendor, and the purchasers, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were aware of the fraud and took the conveyance from the defendant No. 3 with the knowledge that the District Judge's permission had been obtained by her upon a fraudulent misrepresentation of facts, in that case section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act could not make the alienation valid; for fraud would in such a case vitiate the permission and the transfer in favour of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who would be participators in the fraud.

But we are asked to hold that as the learned District Judge has, with reference to one or two points, questioned [611] the correctness of the learned Subordinate Judge's inference of fraud, he has in fact altogether negatived the findings of fraud in this case. Reading the learned District Judge's judgment as a whole we are unable to come to that conclusion. It is true that the learned District Judge does not confirm the first Court's finding on the question of fraud, but he has not negatived the finding of fraud which that Court arrived at upon a consideration of the evidence. The case must, therefore, go back to the Lower Appellate Court in order that it may dispose of the appeal after determining upon the whole of the evidence on the record whether the fraud alleged in the third and fourth paragraphs of the plaint has been established, and established, not only as against the defendant No. 3, but also as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. If that question is answered in the negative the suit must be dismissed with costs; if, on the other hand, that question is answered in the affirmative, the plaintiffs will be entitled to a decree. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 74 and 179—Stipulation for payment of abwab—Permanent tenure-holder.

The defendant, a dur-patnidar, stipulated in the kabulyat for the annual payment of Rs. 4 in lieu of certain quantities of jack fruit, bamboos and fish. This stipulation was contained in a clause perfectly distinct from that containing the payment of rent which was payable quarterly.

Held, (i) such a stipulation is a stipulation for the payment of an abwab.

(ii) A stipulation for the payment of an abwab, under a permanent mokurari lease is valid, and section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not control section 179 of the Act.

Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Promotia Nath Bhattacharjee, (1898) Ante, p. 130, distinguished.

THE plaintiffs were patnidars and the defendants dur-patnidars. In the kabulyat executed by the defendants, there was a stipulation for the annual payment of Rs. 4 in lieu of certain quantities of jack fruit, bamboos and fish, which the defendants were to present annually to the plaintiffs in one instalment, and this was stipulated for in a perfectly distinct clause from that in which the payment of the rent was contracted for. Further, the rent was payable quarterly. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the payment of sums under this stipulation.

The Court of First Instance found that the payment of Rs. 4 was an abwab and as such was not recoverable.

The Lower Appellate Court agreed with the finding of the Court of First Instance that the payment of Rs. 4 is an abwab and not recoverable.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Appellants.—The payment of Rs.4 per annum is not an abwab, but a payment by way of rent; and even if it is an abwab, as the plaintiffs are patnidars and the defendants dur-patnidars, the plaintiffs are, under section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, entitled to recover that amount. In Assanulla Khan v. Tirtha Bashni, (1895) 1. L. R., 22 Cal., 680, it is pointed out by the learned Judges that section 179 is not governed by section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the case of Atulya Churn Bose v. Tulsi Das Sarkar, (1895) 2 C. W. N., 543, is analogous to the present.

Babu Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee, (and Babu Lal Mohan Ganguly) for the Respondents.—The payment of Rs. 4 is clearly an abwab, as [613] it is not consolidated with rent, and is in lieu of jack fruit, bamboos and fish, and is payable separately from the rent. Section 74 of the Bengal Tenancy Act

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 720 of 1898. against the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Ghose, Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, dated the 10th of December 1897, modifying the decree of Babu Apora Prosad Mukerjee, Munsif of Suri, dated the 5th of January 1897.

invalidates all stipulations as to payment of abwabs, and section 179 of the Act must be controlled by it. In Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Promotha Nath Bhattacharjee, (1898) Ante, p. 130, it was held that section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does control section 179 of the Act, and there is no reason why section 74 should not also control section 179 of the Act.

This is an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Birbhum, dated the 10th December 1897.

Two grounds of appeal have been urged before us: (1) that the sum of Rs. 4 per annum, which the Subordinate Judge has held to be an abwab and disallowed, is not an abwab; and (2) that even if it is an abwab, as the plaintiffs are patnidars and the defendants dur-patnidars, the plaintiffs are, under section 179 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, entitled to recover the amount.

On the first point, we think we must affirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge. The annual payment of Rs. 4 is, according to the defendants' kabulyat, not part of the rent. It is payable in lieu of certain quantities of jack fruit, bamboos and fish, which the defendants were to present annually to the plaintiffs, and is stipulated for in a perfectly distinct clause from that in which the payment of the rent is contracted for. Further, the rent is payable quarterly. The quantities of produce, or their money equivalent, were to be given, or paid, in one instalment. We think that in these circumstances the Rs. 4 per annum now in dispute is undoubtedly an abwab.

The second contention of the appellant is not so easily dealt with. The learned pleader for the appellant relies on the provisions of section 179, and on the cases of Assanulla Khan v. Tirtha Bashini, (1895) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 680, and Atulya Churn Bose v. Tulsi Das Sarkar, (1895) 2 C.W.N., 543. [614] In the former case it is said, though by way of an obiter dictum, that though there is some repugnancy between section 179 and section 74, there seems good reason for thinking that section 179 is not controlled by section 74. In other words, the provisions of section 74 do not prevent the holder of a permanent tenure (such as a patnidar) from granting a permanent mokurari lease (such as has been granted to the defendant in this case) "on any terms" he pleases, that is, even stipulating for the payment of abwabs.

The second case cited by the pleader for the appellant is analogous in principle to that of Assanulla Khan v. Tirtha Bashini, (1895) I.L.R., 22 Cal., 680. It rules that section 179 controls section 178 (3) (c); so that a permanent tenure-holder may in granting a sub-lease of his tenure stipulate for the payment of interest at a higher rate than that allowed by section 67. The contrary has, however, been laid down in Basanta Kumar Roy Chowdhry v. Promotha Nath Bhattacharjee, (1898) Ante, p. 130. The learned Judges who decided this latter case make no reference to the case of Atulya Churn Bose v. Tulsi Das Sarkar, probably because it was not brought to their notice.

Another case which has some analogy to the question under discussion is Mokbul Hossain v. Ameer Sheikh, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 131, in which it has been held that, notwithstanding the provisions of section 89, holders of service tenures can be ejected otherwise than in execution of a decree.

The learned pleader for the appellants contends that the sections 179, 180, 181, 182 and 183, all contained in Chap. XV, take the tenures and holdings to which they relate to a large extent outside the other provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and though it is somewhat difficult to suppose that the framers of the Act can have intended to allow the proprietors or permanent tenure-holders to stipulate for the payment of abwabs by their tenants, yet it may be that it was considered that an [615] arrangement of this nature, so objectionable and liable to give rise to oppression in the case of ordinary railyats, was fraught with less danger in the case of permanent mokurari leaseholders. Anyhow, the words of section 179 "nothing in this Act" are so wide that it seems impossible to resist the contention of the learned pleader for the appellants, and we are therefore constrained to give effect to it.

We accordingly decree this appeal with costs.

Kuldip Singh.....Plaintiff

Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co....Defendants.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 88—Transfer of a portion of occupancy holding—Custom—Ejectment—Possession.

The transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding is contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885 ; and the existence of a custom in a particular place by which such a holding is transferable is immaterial and gives no right to the transferee as against the landlord.

IN this suit the plaintiff was the purchaser of 6½ bighas of an occupancy jote of 8 bighas belonging to one Nanku Roy and others. The plaintiff was dispossessed by the defendants, who are the landlords of the occupancy jote of 1 bigha and 15 cottahs, and he sued them for possession by declaration of title.

The Court of First Instance held that as the defendants did not allege that the old tenants had abandoned their holding, and as the sale of a portion of an occupancy jote does not constitute a ground for forfeiture, the jote must be considered for the purpose of this suit to be a transferable one ; and as the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed land as proved in the case, whatever might be the title of the plaintiff, the defendants had no right to dispossess him, and upon these findings decreed the plaintiff's claim.

[616] This decision was reversed by the Lower Appellate Court, on the grounds that the plaintiff, as the transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding, had no title as against the defendants, and that the suit not being a summary suit for possession but a suit for possession by declaration of title,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 941 of 1898, against the decree of Babu Karunamoy Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Bhagulpore, dated the 7th of February 1898, reversing the decree of Babu Syama Charan Banerjee, Munsif of Beguserni, dated the 27th of July 1897, the plaintiff could not recover possession, unless he showed title as against the defendants.

The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.—The plaintiff seeks only to recover possession of the disputed land from which he has been wrongfully ejected; he does not seek to be recognised as a tenant of the defendants. Bengal Tenancy Act, section 88, does not apply, as a right of occupancy is different from a holding, and there is no law to prevent the transfer of such a right. Further the appellant alleges that there is a custom, which makes an occupancy holding transferable, and if so, then such a transfer is good in spite of the Bengal Tenancy Act, section 88. Hence the suit should at least be remanded for a finding, whether the occupancy holding is transferable by custom or not.

The respondent did not appear.

In this suit the plaintiff alleges that he has purchased 6½ bighas of an occupancy jote of 8 bighas belonging to Nanku Rai and others. He further pleads that he has been dispossessed by the defendants who are the landlords of the occupancy jote of 1 bigha 15 cottahs, and he sues them for possession.

The Lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff, as the transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding, has no title as against the defendants. The plaintiff now appeals, and on his behalf it has been contended that the plaintiff does not seek to be recognized as a tenant by the landlords, but merely prays to be restored to possession of the disputed land from which he has been wrongfully ejected.

We think, however, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession on proof of mere wrongful dispossession. This is not a possessory suit under section 9 of the Specific [617] Relief Act. That being so, he must show some title to the land as against the defendants. We agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that he has proved none. He no doubt shows that he has purchased 6½ bighas of the jote from the occupancy raiyat, but this transfer is not binding against the landlords, the present defendants, who are in no way bound to recognize it. As against the landlords, the plaintiff shows no title under which he can demand to be restored to possession of a portion of the holding.

The learned pleader for the appellant urges that there is no law which prohibits the transfer of portion of an occupancy holding. But there is no law under which any such contention as set up by the plaintiff in this case can be supported, and it would seem to us that to admit it to have any force would be contrary to the spirit, if not the letter, of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned pleader prays that the case may be remanded for a finding whether the occupancy holding, from a portion of which the plaintiff alleges himself to have been dispossessed, is or is not transferable by custom. We think it unnecessary to do so, for in either case in our opinion the plaintiff would have no right as against the defendant to recover possession of a portion of the holding.

We therefore dismiss the appeal without costs, the respondent, not appearing.

M. R. M.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[This subject was dealt with by the Full Bench in Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chondhury, (1914) 42 Cal., 179, after an exhaustive argument in which all the previous case-law was reviewed. With reference to this case, it was observed that it had been followed only once in (1905) 9 C.W.N., 843 (42 Cal., at p. 214; 204; see also p. 212) and doubts expressed in (1904) 9 C.W.N., 134; (1905) 2 C.L.J., 369; see also (1908) 8 C.L.J., 161; (1903) 8 C.W.N., 55; (1900) 27 Cal., 545.

In the Full Bench decision it was held, "The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. When the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case."—42 Cal., at 223.]

Enhancement of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 50 (sub-section 2), 115, 104 (sub-sections 2 and 3), 113—Record of Rights—

Presumption as to fixity of rent—Settlement of fair and equitable rent—Enhancement for excess land—

Enhancement for rise in price of crops.

[618] The provision contained in section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the presumption as to fixed rent under section 50 (2) of the Act arising in certain cases, has no application in a suit brought by a tenant for the purpose of contesting the correctness of the decision of a Revenue Officer in regard to the entry as to the status of a *raiya*t in a record-of-rights prepared under Chapter X of the Act. In such a suit the tenant is entitled to the benefit of the presumption.

Given the circumstance of an increase or decrease in the area of the land for which a tenant is paying rent, it is competent to the Revenue Officer under section 104 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the whole of the land of the tenant, including the excess area, and the Revenue Officer can in such a case enhance the rent under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, e.g., on the ground of the rise in the prices of the food crops, and so forth.

THIS appeal and twenty-six other analogous ones arose out of seventeen suits brought by different tenants of a Government khas mehal known as hissa 4 annas and odd gundas in Pergunnah Shingergaon, in the District of Tipperah, against the Secretary of State for India in Council, for a declaration that the final record (Khatian) of rights framed and published by the Revenue Officer in respect of the said mehal under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, be declared illegal and void, and that the tenures and holdings held by the different plaintiffs be declared not liable to enhancement of rent, having borne uniform rents from the time of the Permanent Settlement. They prayed also in the alternative that if the said tenures and holdings be liable to enhancement of rent, proper rents might be fixed by the Court or by Revenue Officers.

By a notification, dated the 6th November 1888, the Local Government made an order under section 101 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, directing that a survey be made, and a record of rights be prepared, in respect of the lands included in the khas mehal in question, and specifying therein the particulars to be recorded as required by section 102 of the Act. Although no application was made by either the Government or the tenants for settlement of rent, the Settlement Officer appointed to prepare the record of rights of his own motion settled what he considered fair and equitable rents, apparently on the ground that the tenants were holding land in excess of, or less than, that for which they [619] were paying rent, as also on the ground that there had been a rise in the average prices of the food crops. After the draft record was published under section 105 (1) of the Act, the plaintiffs objected to certain entries on the ground that their rents were not liable to enhancement. After disallowing these objections, the Settlement Officer finally framed and published the record under section 105 (2) of the Act. Thereupon the plaintiffs, without appealing to the Special Judge against the orders of the Settlement Officer, instituted the present suits.

The Munsif dismissed the suits on the preliminary ground that the decision of the Settlement Officer under section 101 and 105 of the Act operated as res judicata and was not liable to be set aside by a Civil Court. On appeal the Subordinate Judge set aside the decree of the Munsif and remanded the suits for trial on the merits. On second appeal, the High Court affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, holding that the entries in the record were, properly speaking, undisputed entries, which under section 109 of the Act were to be presumed to be correct until the contrary was proved (See Secretary of State for India v. Kajmuddy, I. L. R., 23 Cal., 257). The suits were then tried by the Munsif on the merits and dismissed. The Munsif held that in view of the special provisions of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the presumption under section 50 (2) of that Act could not arise in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the whole burden of proving that they had held at the same rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement was laid on them. He also held that it was competent to the Settlement Officer to enhance the rent on account of the rise in the price of produce, under section 30 of the Act.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif as to the plaintiffs not being entitled to the presumption under section 50 (2) of the Act, but held that the Settlement Officer acted without jurisdiction in settling the rents on the ground of the rise in the price of the produce, and that therefore his acts in this respect were null and void. In the result, sixteen of the appeals were either wholly or partially decreed, and one of them was dismissed.

[620] In eleven of the appeals the plaintiffs, and in sixteen appeals including No. 1743, the defendant, appealed to the High Court.

In Appeal 1743 of 1897 —

Babu Ram Charan Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows:—

In the year 1888 the Local Government notified under section 101 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that a survey and record of rights would be made in a local area which includes the Government khas mehal to which these suits relate. A survey was made and a record of rights prepared by a Revenue Officer, who, in the course of his proceedings, settled the rents payable by certain of the tenants. It is conceded that he was not authorized to settle all rents, and that no application for such settlement was made either by the landlord or by the tenants; and we must take it that the only authority which he had was that conferred by section 104 of the Tenancy Act, in cases in which the tenant was holding land in excess of or less than that for which he was paying rent.

The record was finally framed and published in March 1891. None of the tenants preferred an appeal to the Special Judge against the decision of the Revenue Officer on any of the points which he was required to determine, or as regards the rent which had been settled. In the same month the tenants brought seventeen suits, which have given rise to these appeals, to have it declared, speaking generally, that the proceedings of the Revenue Officer were illegal and not binding on them, and that their rents could not be enhanced consistently with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They also asked that the Court would, if it considered that the rents were enhanceable, fix a fair rent. All these suits were dismissed by the first Court on the ground that they were not maintainable, the decision of the Revenue Officer being final and binding on the parties. This decision was reversed by the Lower Appellate Court on the ground, substantially, that the Settlement Officer [621] had acted ultra vires in settling the rents of the tenants, and the cases were remanded for trial on the merits.

There was then a second appeal to this Court which held that the remand order was right. After remand the suits were again dismissed by the Munsif on their merits; but on the appeal of the defendants they were, with one exception, wholly or partially decreed. Of the appeals now before us, sixteen, namely, numbers 1743 and 2143 to 2157 were preferred by the Government, the defendant in the suit; and eleven, namely, numbers 1898 and 2380 to 2389, were preferred by the tenants, the plaintiffs.

We may at once dispose of the appeal, 1898, on the ground that it is not pressed, it being admitted that the rent settled is somewhat less than the rent which was before paid. That appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

In dealing with the remaining cases, we cannot, of course, go behind the remand order of this Court, it being conceded that that is an order now binding on the parties. It is necessary therefore to see what was then decided. The learned Judges said, "the first question to be determined is, whether the Settlement Officer had jurisdiction under the Tenancy Act to settle rents in respect of the land held by the plaintiffs." They held that he had jurisdiction to do that of his own accord on the ground that the tenants were holding land in excess of or less than that for which they were paying rent, and that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in considering that there was no such authority merely because the record of rights as prepared did not show what the excess lands were, or that the Revenue Officer was acting under this particular provision of the law. Then they said they had to consider the legal effect of his proceedings under sections 104 and 105 of the Tenancy Act; and they came to the conclusion that his decision on the points which he had to decide, and which had to be shown in the record of rights, had not the force of a decree under section 107 of the Tenancy Act, but that the entries in the record of rights must be taken as undisputed entries which are to be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved, and that it was open to the plaintiffs in this suit to establish the incorrectness of those entries.

[622] Two points were, therefore, we think, distinctly settled: First, that the Revenue Officer did not act without authority in settling the rents, although the Court did not decide how the rents were to be settled or whether they had been properly settled. And, secondly, that the entries made in the record of rights must be presumed to be correct; that it was for the plaintiffs in these cases to show that the entries were wrong, and that they could only succeed by so doing.

After the remand one of the issues tried was this: "Have the holdings and the tenures of the plaintiffs existed from the time of the Permanent Settlement at fixed jamas, and are the plaintiffs' jamas not fit to be enhanced."

The Munsif decided that they were enhancible, but he threw upon the plaintiffs the burden of proving that their tenures and holdings had been held from the time of the Permanent Settlement at a uniform rent, and said that they were not entitled to the benefit of any presumption under section 50 of the Tenancy Act, because, according to the provisions of section 115 of that Act, the presumption could not apply to them.

That view has been endorsed by the Subordinate Judge, who, like the Munsif, held that the tenants had not proved the fixity of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Section 115 enacts that "when the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b) have been recorded under this chapter in respect of any tenancy, the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter apply to that tenancy."

It seems clear that that section has no application to the present case, and cannot deprive the tenants of the benefit of the presumption if they can show that they are entitled to it.

The suits are brought for the purpose of contesting, amongst other things, the correctness of the Revenue Officer's decision in regard to the entry as to the status of the raiyyats; and the question which the Courts had to decide was whether their status was that of raiyyats holding at fixed rents or not. Section 115 seems to contemplate a case in which a raiyyat is seeking to get the benefit of the presumption for a period [623] subsequent to the time when the record-of-rights was framed. The appeals of the tenant defendants, with the exception of appeal 2384, must therefore succeed to this extent that there has been no proper decision as to whether their rent can or cannot be enhanced. These appeals all relate to raiyyati holdings. Appeal 2384 relates to a taluk, and what I have said has no bearing upon that case because it is distinctly found by both the Courts that the taluk has been held for terms of years, and the provisions of section 50 do not apply to tenures of that description.

As regards the Government appeals, it appears that the Revenue Officer settled the rents of the tenures and holdings by assessing rent on lands found to be in excess of the original holding, and also by allowing for an increase in the rise of the prices of the food crops.

The Subordinate Judge has held that in settling the rent he had no power to increase it on the ground of the rise in the value of prices, and that, in so doing, he acted without jurisdiction. Substantially, therefore, he has disallowed the whole of the increase on that ground, and has taken the rent to be the rent formerly payable, plus a fair and equitable rent for the land found to be in excess. He says that the Revenue Officer had only power to deal with the excess land, and could not, under section 104 of the Tenancy Act, increase the rent of the holdings on any other ground.

The contention on the part of Government in the appeals before us is that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in this view of the law, and we think the contention must succeed. Section 104, clause 2, runs thus: "When it appears that a tenant is holding land in excess of or less than that for which he is paying rent, or either the landlord or the tenant applies for a settlement of rent, or in any case under section 101, sub-section (2), clause (d), the officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant." The third clause provides that: "In settling rents under this section, the officer shall presume, until the contrary is proved, that the existing rent is fair and equitable, and shall have regard to the rules laid down in this Act for the [624] guidance of the Civil Court in increasing or reducing rents, as the case may be."

Given then the circumstance of an increase or decrease in the area of the land for which the tenant was paying rent, it seems to us that under section 104 the Revenue Officer was competent to settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the whole of the land of the tenant including the excess area. It would be difficult to say that "the land held by the tenant" is to mean, in the case of a decrease of land, the land which is left, and in a case of excess land, the land which is in excess; or that it has a different meaning in each of the cases referred to in clause 2 of section 104.

Another strong reason for holding that the rent of the entire holding is to be settled, is to be found in section 113 of the Tenancy Act, which provides that "when the rent of a tenure or holding is settled under this chapter it shall not, except on the ground of a landlord's improvement, or of a subsequent alteration in the area of the tenure or holding, be enhanced, in the case of a tenure or occupancy holding, for fifteen years * "

The assessment of rent on land for which the tenant was not before paying rent is not, strictly speaking, an enhancement of the rent. It is merely an addition to the rent which had been before paid on account of land for which rent had not been before paid; and it could hardly have been intended by the Legislature that when rent was settled merely by adding to the old rent, the rent which the tenant had to pay for some excess land, there should be no enhancement of the rent, except on the special grounds, for a period of fifteen years.

We must set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge in all the appeals except appeal No. 1898, to which I have referred, and appeal No. 2384, so far as it relates to the enhancibility of the rent of the taluk. The Court must decide whether or not the plaintiffs have made good a case for the presumption referred to in section 50, and, if they have done so, whether that presumption has been rebutted by the defendant. If it is found that the rent of the holding cannot be enhanced, the existing rent must hold good, but the tenant will of course be liable to pay [625] additional rent for any land in his possession which is in excess of the land for which he had been before paying rent.

If the rents are found to be enhancible the Court must decide whether the rent fixed by the Revenue Officer for the whole holding is a fair and equitable rent, having regard to the rules laid down in the Tenancy Act for the guidance of the Civil Court in increasing or reducing rents, as the case may be; the burden of shewing that the rent so fixed is not fair and equitable being, as already stated, on the plaintiffs. If it is found that the rents settled by the Settlement Officer are not fair and equitable rents, the Court must decide, in accordance with the prayer of the plaintiffs, what is a fair and equitable rent in respect of the taluks and holdings, having regard, in this respect also, to the provisions of the Tenancy Act.

We much regret to be under the necessity of prolonging this litigation by directing another remand, but it is impossible, as the record now stands, to dispose of the cases finally.

The Subordinate Judge will take them up, and dispose of them with the least possible delay.

The appellants will get their costs in each case other than in appeals 2384 and 1898.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 20th April, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Doulat Koer.....2nd Party, Petitioner

Rameswari Koeri alias Dulin Saheba.....1st Party, Opposite Party.*

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1896), section 145—possession, Order of Criminal Court as to—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Order made by a Civil Court—Power of revision by the High Court.

It is the duty of the Magistrate when the right to possession has been declared within a time not remote from his taking proceedings under section [626] 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to maintain any order which has been passed by any competent Court; and therefore to take proceedings which necessarily must have the effect of modifying or even cancelling such orders, is to assume a jurisdiction which the law does not contemplate.

The power of revision to be exercised by the High Court is limited to matters of jurisdiction, that is to say, to cases in which it is found that the Magistrate by taking proceedings under section 145 has acted without jurisdiction.

IN this case there was a dispute concerning the possession of a village between Rani Rameswari Koeri alias Dulin Saheba and Mussamat Doulat Koer. Originally the village belonged to one Narain Das. After his death there was a dispute among his heirs as to the genuineness of his will, his widow Doulat Koer being one of the parties. Civil suits were instituted, and the District Judge of Gya gave his decision in favour of Doulat Koer. On appeal the decision of the Judge was reversed by the High Court, but the Privy Council finally decided in favour of Doulat Koer on the 15th of December 1897. During the pendency of these proceedings the property of the said Narain Das, deceased, was placed in the hands of a Receiver. On the 11th of June 1898 the District Judge of Gya made an order directing the Receiver to make over possession of the properties to Doulat Koer, and on the 29th of August possession was made over to her, and on the 1st of November the * Criminal Revision No. 128 of 1899, made against the order passed by B. C. Sen, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jahanabad, dated the 31st of January 1899.

Sub-divisional Magistrate of Jahanabad took proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to determine the possession of the village and decided in favour of Dulin Saheba.

The Magistrate found that on the 19th of April 1894 Doulat Koer transferred her right and interest in the village to one Mahadeo Dutt Misser by a deed of dur-mokurari lease, and that Dulin Saheba on the 15th of March 1898 purchased the dur-mokurari right from the heirs of Mahadeo Dutt, and that Dulin Saheba had "securely lodged herself in the village and was only waiting for the formal withdrawal of the Receiver to declare her possession openly."

Doulat Koer obtained a rule to show cause why the proceedings taken by the Magistrate under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be set aside on the ground that they [627] were taken without jurisdiction, inasmuch as they were inconsistent with the orders passed by the District Judge relating to the possession of the property.

Mr. Hill, Mr. P. L. Roy, and Babu Raghunandan Prosad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. C. Gregory, Babu Saligram Singh, and Babu Mukhum Lal, for the Opposite Party.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (PRINSEP and WILKINS, JJ.)

Prinsep, J.—This is a case under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in which the Magistrate has passed an order in favour of Mussamat Dulin Saheba, known as the first party. The rule has been granted on the application of Mussamat Doulat Koer, the second party, to show cause why the proceedings should not be set aside on the ground that they were taken without jurisdiction, inasmuch as they were inconsistent with the orders passed by the District Judge relating to the possession of this property.

In the present state of the law, as we understand it, the power of revision to be exercised by this Court is limited to matters of jurisdiction, that is to say, to cases in which it is found that the Magistrate, by taking proceedings under section 145, has acted without jurisdiction. It is in that sense that we have to consider the point raised on this application.

The property, which is the subject-matter of these proceedings, has formed part of a litigation which has been taken up in appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and the result has been that the case was decided in favour of Doulat Koer by an order declaring that she is entitled to letters of administration in respect of the estate of her deceased husband. It seems to us that Dulin Saheba also holds a share in this property under a different title. In 1893, a Receiver was appointed to manage this property until the final result of that suit, and, having regard to the order passed in favour of Doulat Koer, we must take it that the Receiver has been acting as on her behalf and in her interests. In December [628] 1897, there was some interference on the part of Dulin Saheba in regard to this property, and the District Judge passed an order warning her to abstain from interference. Doulat Koer, having obtained an order in her favour, was consequently entitled to possession of this property, and we find that on the 11th June 1898 she obtained an order from the District Judge of Gya declaring that as soon as the Receiver shall have completed his accounts with reference to these properties, he should make them over to Doulat Koer. It further appears that on the 29th August following, when the Receiver vacated, possession of some sort was made over to her. On the 1st November the Magistrate took proceedings under section 145 to determine the possession of this property so as to prevent a breach of the peace, which, in his opinion, was likely to take place, and he has after a trial decided in favour of Dulin Saheba and against Doulat Koer.

Now the object of section 145, as we understand it, is to enable a Magistrate to intervene and to pass a temporary order in regard to the possession of the property in dispute to have effect until the actual right of one of the parties has been determined by any competent Court. It is consequently his duty, when that right has been declared within a time not remote from his taking proceedings under section 145, to maintain any order which has been passed by any competent Court, and, therefore, to take proceedings which necessarily must have the effect of modifying, or even cancelling, such orders, is to assume a jurisdiction which the law does not contemplate. In this case we have it that so late as the end of August possession was formally given over to Doulat Koer. Nevertheless, the Magistrate has found that Dulin Saheba obtained possession about the same time, and that she and not Doulat Koer is shown to have been in actual possession, and he comes to this conclusion from evidence regarding the receipt of rents from some of the tenants between the end of August and the 1st of November. Dulin Saheba, as has already been mentioned, is a co-sharer in this very property, and, therefore, it would be a matter of no difficulty on her part to obtain such evidence from persons who would be her [629] rayats certainly in regard to that right. Her title, we are told, is derived from one Mahadeo, who is said to have taken a dur-mokurari of the same property from Doulat Koer, the lease being given for the purpose of obtaining money to carry on litigation to the Privy Council, and Dulin Saheba is said to have purchased the dur-mokurari title from Mahadeo. It is not for the Magistrate in this summary proceeding to consider whether as against Doulat Koer this confers a perpetual title to possession. The duty of the Magistrate was to carry out the orders of the Civil Court and to maintain those orders by assisting the possession of any person whose title is found by that Court. Under such circumstances, we are of opinion that the proceedings under section 145 were without jurisdiction, and that the Magistrate, on a breach of the peace being certified to him, ought to have contented himself with declaring that the orders of the Civil Court should be maintained. In this view we think that the proceedings under section 145 were without jurisdiction, and must be set aside, and the possession of Doulat Koer maintained until a competent Court awards possession to some other person.

Wilkins, J.—I generally concur in what has been said. I would like to add that it seems to me that the Magistrate was debarred from exercising jurisdiction in this matter under section 145. for, from 1893, when the Receiver was appointed, the Civil Court was in possession through that Receiver and on behalf of the parties to the suit, and that Court was not concerned with any claims of, or rights which may have accrued to, any third party by reason of any assignment or transfer during the pendency of that suit. Any interference with that possession by any such third party would be a contempt of the authority of the Civil Court. When the petitioner had been declared entitled to the property by the final decree in the suit, the Civil Court had no option but to give her possession of it upon her taking out the usual letters of administration, and, therefore, the order of the 11th June 1898 was not only a legal order, but it was the only order which could properly be made under the circumstances. The Court having been in possession of the property on behalf of the parties to the suit, was bound to give possession to the successful party in that suit. [630] Any one else entering into possession would be a trespasser. This being so, there remained practically no question of possession within the power of any other Court, such as the Court of the Magistrate, to decide. All that the Magistrate could do was to leave it to the Civil Court to dispose of the property and direct Dulin Saheba to assert her rights as she might be advised. It seems therefore quite clear that this was certainly a case in which the Magistrate had no jurisdiction whatever under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and I agree in making this rule absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 353—Deterring a public servant from discharge of his duty—Public servant acting under warrant of attachment—Non-production of the warrant at the trial.

One of the accused was convicted under section 353 of the Penal Code (assaulting or using criminal force to a public servant in the execution of his duty) and two others of the abetment of an offence under that section. But the warrant of attachment under which the public servant was acting was not produced at the trial, nor was any secondary evidence given to show its contents.

Held, in the absence of any evidence as to the terms of the warrant either by the production of the original or in the form of secondary evidence, it was impossible to hold that the conviction was good.

THE Settlement Officer of Comilla made a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act against Tafazzul Ahmed for the cost of certain settlement operations in which Tafazzul Ahmed was concerned. The amount not having been paid, a warrant was issued for the execution of the certificate by attachment of the moveable properties belonging to Tafazzul Ahmed. The Settlement Officer's Nazir proceeded to the house of Tafazzul [631] Ahmed. He was not at home at the time, and the Nazir stated the object of his visit to Abbas Ali, who described himself to be the house-muktear of Tafazzul. Abbas Ali being informed of the amount, asked for time, and went out, saying that he would collect the money and pay. The Nazir waited for about two hours, and when there was still no sign of the house-muktear's return, he made a list of the articles in the boitokhana, had them removed out of the house on to the road, and began despatching them by coolies to the * Criminal Revision No. 253 of 1899, made against the order passed by B. G. Geidt, Esq., Sessions Judge of Tipperah, dated the 16th of March 1899, modifying the order of E. F. Ainslie, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Komilla, dated the 3rd of March 1899.

Settlement Office record room. At this time Tafazzul Ahmed drove up, and having learnt the reason of the Nazir's visit, asked the Nazir to proceed with despatch, so that he might not be put to shame before the people. About this time Chunder Kumar Sen, who is called the estate-muktear of Tafazzul Ahmed, arrived at the place, and after reading the warrant and finding that Tafazzul was described in it as living at Bhattogram, he declared that the attachment of the property at Comilla was illegal. He then urged Tafazzul and others to resist the execution of the warrant. Abbas Ali appeared in front of the Nazir and pulled away a shawl and the warrant, and a list of the attached properties. The Nazir then ran away to the Settlement Officer, and complained of the treatment he had received.

The Deputy Magistrate convicted Tafazzul and Chunder Kumar under section 379, section 147 and section 353 read with section 34 of the Penal Code, and Abbas Ali under section 379, section 147 and section 353 of the Penal Code.

The Sessions Judge, on appeal, altered the conviction of the first two accused into one under section 353 read with section 114 of the Penal Code, and that of Abbas Ali to one under section 147 and section 353 of the Penal Code, and reduced the sentences.

The accused, on application to the High Court, obtained a rule on the ground that the warrant was not a legal one, and therefore the conviction for forcibly resisting its execution could not be sustained. The warrant was not produced in the lower Court, but there was on the record another warrant issued on the failure of the first warrant, though there was nothing to show that the contents of the two warrants were the same, nor was there any-[632]thing to show what the contents of the first warrant were, to whom it was addressed, or for what period it was current.

Mr. Jackson, Moulvi Serajul Islam and Babu Gobinda Chundra Das, for the Petitioners.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim) for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :—

The petitioners have been convicted, one of them under sections 353 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and the others of abetment of an offence under section 353, that is, of assaulting or using criminal force to the complainant, a Nazir, in the execution of his duty as such, with the intention of preventing or deterring him from discharging his duty. The case for the prosecution is that the Nazir was executing a warrant for the attachment of certain property belonging to Tafazzul Ahmed in satisfaction of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act for costs in certain proceedings. In the first instance, the attachment proceeded quietly, but, after a little while, a man who was the muktear of the debtor, appeared and required to see the warrant of attachment. He then declared that this warrant was an illegal warrant, which could not be properly executed, and he instigated the debtor and others forcibly to resist the execution. Thereupon the Nazir was assaulted, and he ran away to the Settlement Officer, by whom the warrant had been issued. Objections were raised in the trial in the lower Court, as well as before us, and it was upon this point that a rule was granted, that the warrant was not a legal one, and that, therefore, the conviction for forcibly resisting its execution could not be sustained.

It is very unfortunate that, after the lengthy proceedings that have been held, we should find at this stage of the case that the warrant has neither been produced in the lower Court, nor has secondary evidence been given, after proper steps taken to produce the original had failed, to show its contents. We have on the record only another warrant issued on the failure of the first warrant, but there is nothing to show that the contents of the two warrants were the same, nor is there any [633] thing to show what the contents of the first warrant were, to whom it was addressed, or for what period it was current. It is impossible, therefore, to say how far it was a valid warrant. The lower Court seems to have held that the warrant was for the attachment of whatever property the Nazir, the officer executing it, might find on search as belonging to the judgment-debtor. The area of the search is not described, and, if it were a valid warrant, it would be competent to the Nazir to seize any property that he believed belonged to the judgment-debtor at any place within the jurisdiction of the Court issuing it. It seems unnecessary to point out the serious objections that there would be to allowing such a warrant to be regarded as a valid warrant. It is different from the form prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, Schedule IV, No. 136, for warrants of this description, inasmuch as it does not fix any responsibility on any person for the attachment of any moveable property which may be found not to belong to the judgment-debtor; whereas the terms of the form, as given in the Code, are express in this respect. In the absence, therefore, of any evidence as to the terms of the warrant, either by the production of the original or in the form of secondary evidence, it is impossible for us to hold that the conviction is good and can be sustained. One of the petitioners has been convicted of rioting, and in respect of that conviction it is only necessary to say that the charge does not declare what was the common object of the assembly by which the riot was committed. It is impossible, therefore, to say that this petitioner has been properly convicted of that offence. The rule is made absolute, the conviction and sentence will be set aside in respect of all the petitioners, and the fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Kedar Nath Mitter.....Defendant

versus

Sarojini Dasi.....Plaintiff. *

Probate—Probate of a part of a will—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), section 25.

Probate can be granted of a portion only of a will to the extent to which the contents are proved where the other portion is lost; and there is nothing in section 25 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) to prohibit such a grant of probate.

THE facts of this case are shortly as follow: One Sarojini Dasi applied for the probate of a will left by her father's sister Thakomoni Dasi; she alleged that the testatrix died in the year 1898, executing a will long before her death by which she bequeathed the major portion of her properties to the petitioner; that the said will was written on two sheets of paper and those two sheets were stitched together, but only the first sheet was found in spite of search having been made for the second sheet. In the second sheet, the petitioner alleged, it was written that Rs. 100 would have to be paid on the occasion of the marriage of her sister's son Monoranjnan Mullick, and the balance should be spent on the testatrix's funeral rites and sraddh; that she came to know that the said Monoranjnan Mullick having been married during the lifetime of the testatrix, the said money was paid by her; and that inasmuch as assets to the extent of Rs. 1,295 would probably come into the hands of the petitioner, she made the present application.

One Kedar Nath Mitter, alleging himself to be the brother's son of the husband of the deceased Thakomoni Dasi, put in a petition of objection to the granting of the probate, on the [635] grounds that the will was a forgery, and that he being the legal heir of the deceased would be entitled to the properties left by her, and as such he prayed that letters of administration of the estate of the deceased might be granted to him.

The lower Court, upon the evidence holding that the will was executed by the testatrix, and that after her death search was made, but only the first sheet of it was found, allowed the petition and granted probate of the piece of the will produced.

Against this decision the objector appealed to the High Court.

Babu Boidya Nath Dutt, and Babu Mon Mohun Dutt, for the Appellant.

Babu Bhowani Churn Dutt, and Babu Lal Mohun Das, for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) :—

Maclean, C.J.—There cannot be any reasonable doubt that the testatrix, Thakomoni Dasi, did execute a will some time in the year 1894, nor any reasonable doubt that the sheet now produced, and of which probate is sought, formed a portion of that will. It appears from the evidence that the will was written upon two sheets of paper, and only one sheet, apparently the first sheet, was to be found, and was found after the testatrix's death amongst her depositories. The sheet we have practically disposes, by means of legacies, of the bulk, though not the whole, of her property. Application is now made for probate of that portion of the will and the application is resisted by the testatrix's heir. We have to consider whether probate of this portion of the will can be properly granted.

The heir contends that, inasmuch as the will remained in the custody of the testatrix, which is not disputed, and only a portion of it—the first sheet—has been found amongst her papers at her death, she must be presumed to have destroyed the second sheet, and that she did so animo revocandi. But this presumption may be rebutted, and has, I think, been rebutted in the present case. Looking at the sheet we have, it would appear from the two small holes at the top left hand corner that it had been tied [636] to the other sheet—it is proved that the will was written on two sheets of paper—by a piece of string. It may be that the testatrix did tear off the second sheet, but the inference I am inclined to draw from the extrinsic evidence afforded by the appearance of the extant sheet is that, either from the string having become rotten—a not unlikely result in this climate— or from some other accidental cause, the second sheet became detached and lost, and that it was not either mutilated or destroyed by the testatrix herself. This view gains a little support from a passage in the evidence of the witness Atul Krishna Dutt, who says that the testatrix never told him before her death that the will had been damaged or destroyed, and the testatrix lived some four or five years after the execution of the will. No evidence is adduced by the heir to show that the testatrix ever spoke of having destroyed the will. It is a fair inference from the circumstances of the case that the sheet in question was lost and not destroyed. This disposes of the first point.

It is next contended for the appellant that under the law prevailing in this country probate cannot be granted of a portion only of a will, where the other portion is lost. It must, I consider, be taken as settled law in England—see Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards, (1876) L. R., 1 P. D., 154, that probate can be granted of a portion of a will, though, if the extant portion be only the residuary clause, some question may arise, as was pointed out by Lord HERSCHELL in the case of Woodward v. Goulstone, (1886) L. R., 11 App. Cas., 469. We are not, however, dealing with any such clause in the present case. It must be taken to be established by the English decisions that, where the contents of a lost will are not completely proved, probate can be granted to the extent to which they are proved. The present will is proved to the extent of the first sheet; but the appellant says that the law in England on this point does not apply to India; that the present case is governed by section 25 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881); and that that section only enables the Court to grant probate, when the contents, not of a part of the will, but of the whole will, are established by evidence. In my opinion that contention is not well founded. There is no prohibitory, no negative, word in the section: it is an enabling section, and to place the narrow construction upon it for which the appellant contends, would lead to manifest absurdities. For instance, we might find a will written on half a dozen consecutive sheets of paper tied together by a piece of string; the first five sheets might dispose in a clear and specific manner of property valued at lakhs of rupees among named legatees, and all that was left to be disposed of by the remaining sixth sheet, might be a sum of perhaps Rs. 10 or 20. The sixth sheet becomes detached from the other and is lost. If the argument of the appellant is to prevail, probate cannot be granted of the first five sheets which dispose of the bulk of the property, and the testator's dispositions, though perfectly well known and proved, are thus rendered inoperative. I am not disposed to accept this view. There is to my mind nothing in the section in question to prevent us from following the rulings on this point of the Courts in England. The learned Judge in the Court below has not gone very fully into the matter, but I think that, save upon the question of costs, his conclusion is right.

With respect to the costs, there is force in the argument of the appellant that the costs in the Court below should have come out of the estate, and under the circumstances this would be right. It is not opposed by the respondents. Subject to this modification, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add a few words with reference to two points raised in the case, namely, first, that the fact of a part of the will being lost raises a presumption that the will had been destroyed or mutilated by the testatrix with intent to revoke it; and second, that no probate can be granted of a part of a will.

As to the first point, judging from the nature of the document, as it stood when complete, as deposed to by the witnesses examined in the case, and judging from the appearance of the part that has been preserved, I am of opinion that the fact of a part being wanting raises no presumption of the destruction [638] or mutilation of the will with intent to revoke it. All that we can say about the condition of the document is, that a part of it has been lost. The appearance and nature of the portion of the document that has been preserved constitute material evidence upon the question as to whether the loss of the remainder should raise any presumption of revocation or not. This stands to reason and common sense, and if authority were needed in support of the view I take, I may refer to the case of In the goods of Woodward, (1871) L. R., 2 P. & D., 206 (208), in which Lord PENZANCE, after quoting certain observations of Sir J. DODSON in the case of Clarke v. Scripps, (1852) 2 Rob. Ecc., 563, observes: "I think that is a very good way of regarding the question, for it is obvious that the mutilation must be of such a part and in such a manner as to afford evidence that the deceased did not intend the document any longer to operate as his will. If, for instance, he should tear off the will or his own signature? Applying the reasoning to the present case, I have come to the conclusion that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the mere cutting off of eight lines at the beginning of the document does not show any intention to revoke the whole will."

As to the second point, it is quite true that the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) does not contain any express provision for the granting of probate of a part of a will. Section 25 of the Act, which relates to the granting of probate of a lost or destroyed will, in terms relates to the grant of probate in respect of a will if its contents can be established by evidence. But then that is only an enabling section, and there is no prohibition in the Probate and Administration Act to the grant of probate of a part of a will, provided such grant is not in any way opposed to reason and justice, and therefore I see no objection to our following the rule laid down in Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards, (1876) L. R., 1 P. D., 154, subject of course to certain qualifications which have been indicated in the case of Woodward v. Goulstone, (1886) L. R., 11 App. Cas., 469. In the present [639] case the grant of probate of the portion of the will that has been preserved does not in any way infringe any of the qualifying rules subject to which such grants ought to be made. The bequest to the petitioner for probate, Sarojini, stands quite independently of the other provisions of the will whatever they might have been. There is nothing to show that those provisions would interfere with the bequest contained in the will in favour of Sarojini in the portion of the will which has been preserved. On the contrary, the evidence would indicate that the bequest to Sarojini was the primary object of the will and that it was intended to be an unqualified one.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 66, clauses 2 and 3—Landlord and Tenant—Suit for arrears of rent—Execution of decree for ejectment for arrears of rent—Extension of time for payment.

Per PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ.—The extension of time authorised by section 66, clause 3, of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be granted by the Court after the decree, and not only when framing the decree under clause 2 of that section.

Per RAMPINI, J.—contra.

Per PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ.—The decree for ejectment passed under section 66, clause 2, of the Bengal Tenancy Act need not incorporate the terms as to the ejectment being avoided by payment within fifteen days from the date of the decree. These terms are rather in the nature of a direction to the Court of execution.

Per PRINSEP, J.—The application for such extension of time may therefore be made by the judgment-debtor on a mere petition, and not in the form of an application for review of judgment.

IN this case the plaintiff, Bodh Narain, obtained a decree for arrears of rent against Mahomed Moosa, under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in the Court of the Munsif of Gya. The decree was signed on the 17th May 1898, and directed that if [640] the decretal amount were not paid within 15 days from the date thereof, the plaintiff would be entitled to eject the defendant in execution of the decree. On the 25th of May, the defendant applied for two weeks' extension of time to pay off the decretal money. The Munsif granted extension of time till the 12th of June, under section 66 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Against this order, the plaintiff decree-holder appealed to the District Judge, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time subsequent to passing the decree, and that the extension could only be granted at the time of passing the decree. The District Judge, having affirmed the order of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal, the decree-holder appealed to the High Court. The appeal originally came on for hearing before BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ., who differed in opinion, and the case was referred under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure to PRINSEP, J., who agreed with BANERJEE, J.

* Appeal from Order No. 353 of 1898, against the order of E. G. D. Brockman, Esq., District Judge of Gya, dated the 23rd of July 1898, affirming the order of N. N. Dbur, Esq., Munsif of Gya, dated the 26th of May 1898.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), and Babu Karuna Sindhu Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, and Moulvi Sirajul Islam, for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court:—

Banerjee, J.—In this appeal, which arises out of an application for extension of time for the satisfaction of a decree in a suit for ejectment for arrears of rent under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the question for determination is, whether the extension of time authorized by sub-section 3 of section 66 can be granted by the Court after decree. The Courts below have answered it in the affirmative, and granted the judgment-debtor's application for extension of time, which was made before the expiry of fifteen days from the date of the decree; and hence this appeal by the decree-holder.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that the extension of time authorized by section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be granted by the Court only at the time of passing the decree, and that after the decree is passed, the Court has no power to extend the time within which it may be satisfied. On the other [641] hand, it is contended for the respondent that there is no such limitation on the Court's power to grant extension of time.

Section 66, after providing in sub-section (1) for the institution of a suit for ejectment of certain classes of tenants for arrears of rent, enacts in sub-section (2) that, "A decree passed in favour of the plaintiff shall specify the amount of the arrear and of the interest (if any) due thereon, and the decree shall not be executed if that amount and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, or when the Court is closed on the fifteenth day, on the day upon which the Court re-opens." And sub-section (3) which provides for extension of time runs in these words: "The Court may for special reasons extend the period of fifteen days mentioned in this section."

The main arguments in support of the respondent's contention are the following:—

In the first place, there is nothing in the language of section 66 to limit the power of the Court in the manner contended for on behalf of the appellant, the section merely providing that the Court may for special reasons extend the period; and in order to give effect to the appellant's contention we must interpolate the words "at the time of passing the decree" after the word "may" in sub-section (3). I may add that the word "extend," to use the language of COTTON, L. J., in In re Yeaton Local Board, (1889) L. R., 41 Ch. D., 52 (58): 58 L. J., Ch., 563 (566), "necessarily infers the existence of an originally limited time;" and I think it carries with it the idea of a subsequent enlargement of time.

In the second place, the general tenor of the section is opposed to any such interpolation. For sub-section (2), while providing that the decree shall specify the amount of the arrear and the interest if any, does not require that the decree shall specify the time, whether it be fifteen days or more, within which it shall not be executed; and sub-section (3) speaks of the period of fifteen days as "mentioned in the section," and not as "specified in the decree," and there is no good reason why when [642] the ordinary period of fifteen days for which execution must be stayed, is not required to be mentioned in the decree, any special and extended period for which the Court may think fit to stay execution should be specified in the decree.

In the third place, ejectment for non-payment of rent, being in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, the provision in sub-section (3) of section 66 for extension of time for payment to avoid the penalty of forfeiture is a remedial provision, and should be construed liberally, so as not to restrict to remedy and make it inapplicable to cases to which it ought obviously to extend, but which it would be prevented from reaching if the appellant's contention be given effect to. Thus, take a case in which the arrear due is a fairly large amount, but the tenant, when the decree is passed, has no special reason upon which he can ask for extension of time for payment. Suppose that he was coming to Court with the money due, in time to be able to deposit it in Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, when he was robbed on the way, and so he finds himself unable to make the deposit in time. He has now a special reason for asking for extension of time, but the Court will have no power to grant such extension if the appellant's contention be correct. Such a result could not have been intended by the Legislature.

The only arguments urged for the appellant in support of the opposite view are: First, that the section contemplates the procedure prior to decree and not any matters subsequent to the decree; second, that if the Court be held authorized to extend the time after the decree, it may extend the time any number of times, and this indefinite extension of time might render the limitation of time in sub-section (2) practically nugatory in many cases: and third, that the cases of Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohun Thakoor, (1874) 22 W. R., 460, and Nubo Kisto Mookerjee v. Ramessur Goopto, (1866) 18 W. R., 412, note: 2 Wyman, 75, go to show that the Court executing a decree for ejectment cannot modify the terms of the decree with regard to the time within which payment should be made.

Let us examine these arguments. As to the first, I do not [643] think it correct to say that section 66 only contemplates the procedure prior to decree when sub-section (2) expressly says: "The decree shall not be executed if that amount" (i.e., the amount of the arrear of rent or interest) "and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree,"—that is, speaks of payment into Court which is to be after the decree.

As to the second argument, though upon the respondent's view there may be granted more extensions of time than one, it does not follow that the proceedings may be indefinitely protracted, when the extension is to be granted not as a matter of course, but only "for special reasons," and when the judicial discretion of the Court will be a sufficient safeguard against any unreasonable extension of time.

As to the third and last argument, the cases cited have no bearing upon the question now before us. They were decided under the former law (Act X of 1859, section 78, and Bengal Act VIII of 1869, section 52), under which the Court had no power to extend the period of fifteen days. In the earlier of the two cases cited, this Court nevertheless allowed a decree directing execution to be stayed for a longer period than fifteen days to stand, on the ground that the Court which had power to determine the matter on the merits might pass such a decree. And in the later case, namely, Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohun

Thakoor, (1874) 22 W. R., 460, the learned Judges of this Court, in distinguishing the earlier case from the one before them, observed: "But we do not think that either of the Judges who gave their opinion in that case intended to lay down that any other Court than the Court which had the merits of the case before it, and therefore was able to pass a sufficient and proper decree between the parties, could modify the terms of the decree with regard to the period within which the payment should be made, in order to save the judgment-debtor from the alternative consequences of the original decree." No doubt that was so under the old law; and as I understand the two cases cited, what they lay down is this, that though under the general power which the Court has to make a proper decree according to [644] the merits of the case, the Court may, when making its decree in a suit for ejectment for non-payment of arrears of rent, under section 78 of Act X of 1859 or section 52 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, provide in the decree that it shall not be executed for any period exceeding fifteen days, yet, after the decree is once made, the Court has no power to extend the statutory period of fifteen days. But the reason of this was that the Court had no power to extend the time under the old law. The present law expressly gives the Court power to extend the time; and if this express provision is to be held to be limited to giving the Court power to extend time only when making the decree, a power which according to the cases cited it possessed under the old law, the express provision of sub-section (3) of section 66 would become mere matter of surplusage.

The cases cited do not, therefore, in my opinion lend any support to the appellant's contention.

Upon weighing the arguments on both sides, I am of opinion that the reasons in favour of the respondent's view far outweigh those on the opposite side; and I would therefore affirm the order of the Lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Rampini, J.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether, when, under the provisions of section 66 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a Court for special reasons extends the period of fifteen days within which, on payment of the arrears due, a decree for ejectment can be stayed, it can do so subsequently to the framing of the decree, or can only do so when framing the decree. The Judge in the Court below has held that a Court may extend this period subsequently to the framing of the decree, and on behalf of the appellant it is contended that his view of the matter is erroneous.

It must be admitted that owing to the section containing no express provision on the point, the question is not free from doubt. But I am inclined to think for the following reasons that the Judge is in error, and that when for special reasons a Court extends the period mentioned in sub-section (2) of the [645] section, it can only do so when framing the decree and not at any later time.

In the first place, the whole section deals with the framing of the decree and the terms in which it should be couched. It does not seem to me to contemplate any proceeding subsequent to the preparation of the decree. It seems to me to prescribe how a decree for ejectment is to be drawn up and what is to be contained in it. It goes on to lay down that a decree for ejectment is not to be executed if the arrears due are paid within fifteen days, and gives a Court power for special reasons only to extend that period. Surely the special reasons must be stated at the time of the preparation of the decree, and the period must be extended there and then. If it were contemplated by the section that the judgment-debtor might subsequently apply for an extension of the period mentioned in the section, would this not have been expressly prescribed, and would not this matter (an entirely separate and distinct matter from the framing of the decree) not have been dealt with in a separate section?

Then, if the period mentioned in the section can be extended subsequently, it can apparently be so extended at any subsequent time as long as the decree remains unexecuted. And, further, it can apparently be so extended repeatedly from time to time. So that it would be within the power of a Court to delay the payment of a landlord's arrears, and yet preclude him from ejecting his recusant tenant for years. I cannot think that the Legislature ever intended to give a Court so great a power and so wide a discretion as this, which would enable it to render the provisions of sub-section (2) of the section entirely nugatory. It is to be remembered that one of the objects of the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act was to give the landlords "reasonable facilities for the recovery of their rents."

Again, once a decree is framed, a Court is judicially functus officio. All subsequent proceedings, except applications for review, must relate to the execution of the decree. But if an order under sub-section (3) can be passed subsequently to the preparation of the decree, then it would seem that in the case of a decree for ejectment the terms of the original decree can be modified in [646] execution, which would appear to me to be contrary to the usual course of judicial procedure.

The history of sub-section (3) would also seem to me to support me in the conclusion I have come to with regard to this matter. The former law (i.e., section 78 of Act X of 1859 and section 52 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869) contained no such provision as sub-section (3) of section 66 of the present Act. But in the rulings of the Courts, under those sections, it was held that the Court passing the decree, or the Appellate Court, but not the Court executing the decree, had a discretion to extend the period of fifteen days by payment within which period execution could be stayed (see Nubo Kisto Mookerjee v. Ramessur Goopto, (1866) 18 W. R., 412, note: 2 Wyman, 75; Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohan Thakoor, (1874) 22 W. R., 460, and Puresh Nath Ghose v. Krishito Lall Dutt, (1874) 23 W. R., 50. Under the old law, then, the period of fifteen days could only be extended by the Court of First Instance at the time of framing the decree, or by the Appellate Court when disposing of the appeal from the decree. It could not be extended subsequently by the Court executing the decree. Sub-section (3) of section 66 of the present Act is no doubt based on these rulings, and it is reasonable to suppose that it is intended to give a Court no further power than in these rulings it was ruled that it was advisable that a Court should have.

For these reasons I would decree the appeal.

Prinsep, J.—In this case a decree for ejectment of a tenant was passed under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section (2) requires that in a decree for ejectment for an arrear of rent, the decree shall specify the amount of the arrear and of the interest, if any, due thereon. The decree would also specify the amount of costs, if any, when made payable under it. The object of this is made clear by the following part of that sub-section which declares that "the decree shall not be executed if that amount and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree or, when the Court is [647] closed on the fifteenth day, on the day on which the Court re-opens."

Sub-section (3) further declares that "the Court may for special reasons extend the period of fifteen days mentioned in the section."

The tenant in this case, before the expiry of the period of fifteen days specified in sub-section (2), applied under sub-section (3) for an order to have that period extended.

The question raised is whether the application should be made to the Court of execution or to the Court which passed the decree.

The lower Court held that the application was properly made to the Court of execution.

The learned Judges who heard this second appeal have differed in their construction of this sub-section. Mr. Justice BANERJEE is of opinion that the application should be made to the Court of execution, while Mr. Justice RAMPINI holds that, as it involves an alteration and a reconsideration of the decree for ejectment, the Court which passed the decree is alone competent to deal with the matter. The appeal has now been referred to me as the third Judge.

At the outset I would observe that the matter under consideration is purely a matter of form. The Court which passed the decree would ordinarily be the Court to execute it. No doubt decrees are occasionally transferred for execution to another Court (see section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure), but having regard to the character of a decree for ejectment of a tenant under section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is very difficult to conceive any case in which such a decree would not be executed by the Court which passed it.

In the present case, too, the application under sub-section (3) to extend the period of fifteen days during which execution under sub-section (2) could not be taken out, is made within that time and before proceedings had been, or indeed could have been, taken by a Court of execution. The application, therefore, could only be made to the Court which passed the decree. The question under consideration in [648] this case is, therefore, purely one of form rather than of substance. It has undoubtedly been made to the proper Court, but has it been made in a proper form? Can it be made, as it has been made, by a mere petition asking for an order under sub-section (3) and setting out special reasons as valid grounds, or if it involves a reconsideration of the terms of the decree, should it not be made in the form of an application for review of judgment?

I propose to consider whether an extension of the term for which execution of a decree for ejectment is suspended is necessarily a modification of the decree. The decree is for ejectment. The law does not require, as in a decree for foreclosure or sale in a suit on a mortgage, that the decree shall specify the date on which the decree shall become absolute in regard to foreclosure or sale, and an order making it absolute. It merely requires that certain items shall be specified in it, and the object of this is to give information to the debtor, so that he may make the necessary payment, and thus avoid the ejectment; and the law then proceeds to declare that the decree shall not be executed, if the amount so specified and the costs of the suit are paid into Court within fifteen days from the date of the decree, or where the Court is closed on the 15th day, on the day on which the Court re-opens. That seems to me to be a direction to the Court of execution rather than to require a Court in passing a decree for ejectment to state these terms in its decree, and it is also a notice to the debtor how he may avoid the operation of the decree against him. Notwithstanding any order under sub-section (3) the decree would remain unaffected in its terms. The object of the application is only to obtain suspension of its execution so as to extend to the debtor further time to satisfy the demand of the landlord decree-holder. Probably, in respect of the procedure to be followed, there would be little difference in dealing with such an application, whether it be regarded as an application to the Court of execution or to the Court which passed the decree. But there would be a great difference in the Court-fees payable. Court-fees would be payable on an application to the Court of execution merely as on an ordinary petition, whereas on an application for review of judgment, the fee payable [649] would be that of one-half of the fee payable on the plaint. The difference would thus be very considerable. Such considerations would alone make me hesitate to hold that in such a matter the Legislature ever intended to impose such a heavy burden on a tenant to enable him for good cause or for special reasons as set out in section 66 (3) to avert ejectment from the lands held by him, if for some unforeseen cause he was unable to liquidate within the prescribed time the arrears of rent for which the ejectment had been decreed.

Again, if we turn to section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure which applies to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, we find that questions arising between the parties to a suit in which a decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree are to be determined by order of the Court executing the decree. It has been said that if an extension under sub-section (3) be allowed in execution of a decree, it may be extended repeatedly from time to time, and that thus a Court will be able to delay payment of a landlord's arrears and also deprive him of the right to eject the tenant. I confess that I can see no hardship in so reading the law. The money due to the landlord will still bear interest, so that pecuniarily he will be protected, and the Court can grant an extension of time only for special reasons, which I understand to be that the tenant must show that he is, for some special reason, entitled to ask for such an indulgence. One of the objects of the Bengal Tenancy Act may be to give landlords "reasonable facilities for the recovery of their rents," and this is not really defeated by an order under sub-section (3). But another and an equally paramount object is not to allow the ejectment of a tenant except for cogent reasons. One of such reasons in the case of a tenant not having a saleable tenant-right is an arrear of rent at the end of a year, and, if this sum is paid within a time for special reasons fixed by the Court beyond the statutory period, I confess that I fail to see where an injustice is done to the interests of any party. The Act throughout is as much for the tenant as the landlord, and, within reasonable limits, it gives a discretion to the Courts under section 66 (3) for special reasons to step in and avert the [650] termination of a tenancy by carrying into execution a decree for his ejectment.

The reported cases on this subject are of little assistance. They were all decided under the now repealed Act X of 1859 and Bengal Act VIII of 1869, which were similar to section 66 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but these Acts were without any such powers as now contained in section 66 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to mitigate the effect of the execution of a decree for ejectment. It was probably because the Courts held that under those laws a decree for ejectment was absolute, that this discretionary power has been given to be exercised for special reasons. I cannot agree that the exercise of such powers modifies the decree itself. It only suspends its execution, and, during this term, it gives the tenant power to prevent that execution by satisfying the claim of the landlord, and I can find no sufficient reason why such power should not be exercised under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as in other matters, between the parties, relating to the execution of the decree.

For these reasons I agree with Mr. Justice BANERJEE in dismissing this appeal with costs.

Mohesh Chunder Addy

Manick Lall Addy.

Practice—Commission, Right of purdahnashin lady to be examined on—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 640.

The defendant applied for a commission to examine a Hindu purdahnashin lady. The plaintiff objected on the ground that the lady had prior to this appeared in public, and had also been examined in Court in a palki. Held, the lady being a purdahnashin she was entitled to be examined on commission.

IN this case the defendant Manick Lall Addy applied in Chambers for issue of a commission to examine a Hindu purdahnashin lady, one Sarut Coomary Dasse. The plaintiff opposed the application.

[651] Mr. Dunne for the Plaintiff.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee for the Defendant Manick Lall Addy.

Mr. Bonnerjee.—Sarut Coomary Dasse is a Hindu purdahnashin lady and is entitled to be examined on commission. Counsel referred to the judgment of TREVELYAN, J., in the case of Chamatkar Mohiney Dabee v. Mohesh Chunder Bose.*

Mr. Dunne, contra.—I submit the Court ought not to issue the commission. Sarut Coomary appeared in Court in 1884, and was examined in a palki; she also appeared in public on another [652] occasion. She ought to come to Court and be examined in a palki.

* The 1st February, 1892.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE TREVELYAN.

Chamatkar Mohiney Dabee

versus

Mohesh Chunder Bose.

The judgment in this case was as follows :—

Trevelyan, J.—This is an application for the examination of a Hindu lady, the plaintiff, under commission. It is opposed on the ground that she is not entitled to the benefit of section 640† of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the first place charges of immorality are made against her. I do not think I need consider them. I don't think they are relevant.

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance.

† [Sec. 640 :—Women, who according to the customs and manners of the country ought not to be compelled to appear in public, shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court.

But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process.]

Stanley, J.—I am quite averse to granting commissions for the examination of witnesses, not merely on account of the expense, but also of their unsatisfactoriness. The laws of evidence are often not adhered to, and the advantage of viva voce examination before the Court is lost. At the same time the Legislature has thought fit to determine that pardahnashin ladies shall not be obliged to appear in public. The question is, is this lady to be examined under commission. On one occasion she did appear in Court in a palki. For so doing she was outcasted. There is evidence that on another occasion mentioned in the affidavits she appeared in public. Undoubtedly on that occasion she did not observe the rules of the pardah, but the statement that she appeared in public is exaggerated. Whether she took a seat beside Mr. Rose as alleged is not very clear. She was however covered with a chudder, which shows that she was not openly defying the rules and customs so strictly observed by Hindu ladies. Even assuming that a pardahnashin lady does offend against the rules of her class, I do not think that that deprives her of her right to be examined under commission. I quite agree with TREVELLYAN, J., in the case to which I have been referred. That was a stronger case than the present. For these reasons I shall issue a commission, and I shall reserve the costs. Commission to issue in terms of summons. Counsel cert fied for.

Attorneys for the Plaintiff: Messrs. Banerjee & Halder.

Attorney for the Defendant Manick Lall Addy: Babu Bhupendro Nath Bose.

Attorney for the Defendant Sarat Coomary Dassee: Mr. Rose.

D.S.

NOTES.

[For similar decisions, see also (1892) 3 C.W.N., 750; (1899) 3 C.W.N., 753 (commission); (1901) 5 C.W.N., ccxxvii.]

It may be Mr. Garth is right, and that they show she has appeared in public. It is then said that she has been in the habit of appearing in public and has no regard to the customs of her country and religion. Her denial is given in general terms, and though there are difficulties in the case I should be exceedingly careful before I forced into the public gaze a woman who may have gone outside the pardah either by way of experiment or otherwise. Many a woman may desire to taste the sweets of unsecluded life and have gone out of the pardah, and may desire to go back. Because a woman may once or twice have gone outside the pardah is the Court to keep her outside? The question is not whether this woman, who does more or less frequently go about in public, should be made to appear in Court, but whether I ought to compel her to appear in public. On the materials before me I think I shall be erring on the right side if I refuse to take away from her the privilege she is entitled to, and which but for the circumstances which have been stated, and which are denied, she would unquestionably have been entitled to. On the whole, it is safer to let the commission go. Costs of motion to be costs in the cause. Costs of examination of the lady to be reserved. With regard to the examination of the other witnesses Mr. Bonnerjee admits the evidence is what would be given on the account, not before the taking of the account. There will be liberty to renew this application as to them on notice. The commission to be executed in Calcutta. As this application is on summons in Chambers, I will certify for Counsel.

[653] FULL BENCH.

The 11th April, 1899.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE,
MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON, MR. JUSTICE GHOSE,
MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE JENKINS.

Girish Chunder Mitter.....Plaintiff

Slander—Cause of action—Damages for insult, loss of reputation and mental pain by the use of abusive language—Suit for libel and slander—Special damage.

Held, by the majority of the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON, HILL, and JENKINS, JJ., GHOSE, J., dissenting) that mere use of abusive and insulting language, such as sala (wife's brother), haramzada (base born or bastard), soor (pig), baper beta (son of the father, that is, ironically, bastard) apart from defamation, is not actionable irrespective of any special damage.

Per GHOSE, J.—A case like the present should be decided according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and therefore it is but just and right that a person thus vilified, who has suffered from insult and mental pain, should be entitled to maintain an action irrespective of any special damage.

THE facts of this case are shortly as follow :—

The plaintiff, Girish Chunder Mitter, who is a respectable gentleman and a kaystha, had erected a fence which the defendant, Jatadhari Sadukhan, who is a kolu, i.e., an oilman, alleged had encroached on his land. Later on, the defendant sought out the plaintiff at his house. There it was alleged the defendant somehow got angry and began to abuse the plaintiff, using the following abusive epithets : sala, haramzada, soor, baper beta, etc. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings against the defendant, and the latter was convicted and fined. The plaintiff then instituted an action, out of which the present appeal arose, to recover from the defendant Rs. 500 as damages for insult, loss of reputation, and mental pain, caused by the abusive words aforesaid.

The defendant denied having abused the plaintiff, and objected to the amount of the damages claimed.

[654] The Munsif held that the defendant had used to the plaintiff the abusive words complained of, and that in consequence thereof he was insulted and must have felt mental pain, and decreed Rs. 50 as damages with full costs of the suit.

On appeal, the District Judge held that what the defendant "indulged in was mere abuse and idle threatening. No one who heard him did or could imagine that he really meant to asperse the chastity of the plaintiff's sister or mother, or thought the plaintiff a pig. There was no defamation or intent to defame. What the defendant did was insulting to the plaintiff, but did not affect the plaintiff's reputation a whit ;" The District Judge also held upon an examination of the cases that mere angry or vulgar abuse was not actionable without proof of special damage. He accordingly dismissed the suit,* but without costs.

* Reference to a Full Bench in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 781 of 1897.

The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the High Court, and the appeal came on for hearing before MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J., who referred the case to a Full Bench with the following OPINION :—

This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant, to recover damages from defendant for insult, loss of reputation, and mental pain, caused by the defendant by the use of abusive language. The defendant denied using the alleged abusive language, and objected to the amount claimed as being excessive.

The first Court decreed the suit in part; but, on appeal by the defendant, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit, on the ground that mere abusive and insulting language, which did not affect the plaintiff's reputation, was not actionable.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff-appellant that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, and that abusive and insulting language, such as was used in this case, the words used being sala (wife's brother), haramzada (base-born or bastard), soor (pig), bayer beta (son of the father, that is, ironically, bastard), which according to the finding of the first Court, not displaced by the Appellate Court, must have outraged the feelings of the plaintiff and caused him mental pain, was [655] actionable, apart from any special damage or injury to reputation, and in support of this contention the following cases are cited, namely, Hossein v. Baker Ali, (1864) W.R., Gap. No. 302; Kanoo Mundle v. Rahamoolah Mundle, (1864) W.R., Gap. No. 269; Gholam Hossein v. Nur Gobind Dass, (1864) 1 W.R., 19; Tukee v. Khoshdel Biswas, (1866) 6 W.R., 151; Osseemooddeen v. Futteh Mahomed, (1867) 7 W.R., 259; Gour Chunder Puteelundee v. Clay, (1867) 8 W.R., 256; Sreenath Mookerjee v. Komul Kurmohar, (1870) 16 W.R., 83; Kali Kumar Mitter v. Ramgati Bhattacharjee, (1871) 6 B.L.R., Ap., 99; 16 W.R., 84; Srikant Roy v. Salcori Shaha, (1878) 3 C.L.R., 181; Ibin Hosein v. Haidar, (1885) I.L.R. 12 Cal., 109; Trailokhya Nath Ghose v. Chundra Nath Dutt, (1885) I.L.R., 12 Cal., 424; Kashiram v. Bhadu Bapuji, (1870) 7 Bom. H.C., A.C., 17; Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) I.L.R., 8 Mad., 175; and Dawan Singh v. Mahip Singh, (1888) I.L.R., 10 All., 425. The respondent, however, contends that some of the above cases support his view. On the other hand, for the respondent, the cases of Phoolbasee Koer v. Parjun Singh, (1869) 12 W.R., 369; Chunder Nath Dhur v. Issur Dossee, (1872) 18 W.R., 531; and Nil Mudhub Mookerjee v. Dookeeram Khottah, (1874) 15 B.L.R., 161, are relied upon as supporting the view taken by the Court of Appeal below.

The respondent further contends that this being a second appeal, the matter is disposed of by the findings of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court.

The cases cited on each side more or less support the contention of that side. In this conflict of decisions, and regard being had to the importance of the question raised, we think it necessary to refer the matter for decision to a Full Bench. The question, for decision of which the case is referred to a Full Bench, is, "Whether abusive and insulting language, such as that used in the present case, is actionable, irrespective of any special damage." And as that question arises in an appeal from an appellate decree, under rule 2 of the rules relating to References to a Full Bench, we must refer the appeal for the final decision of a Full Bench.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, for the appellant, submitted that the question should be answered in the affirmative. Although there is some conflict, the balance of Indian authorities is in the plaintiff's favour. The following authorities are in the plaintiff's favour: Kanoo Mundle v. Rahamoolah Mundle, (1864) W.R., Gap. No. 269; Hossain v. Baker Ali, (1864) W.R., Gap. No. 302; Gholam Hossein v. Hur v. Gobind Dass, (1864) 1 W.R., 19; Tukce v. Khoshdel Biswas, (1866) 6 W.R., 151; Osseemooddeen v. Futteh Mahomed, (1867) 7 W.R., 259; Gour Chunder Futeedundee v. Clay, (1867) 8 W.R., 256; Sreenath Mookerjee v. Komul Kurmokar, (1871) 16 W.R., 83; Kali Kumar Mitter v. Ramgati Bhattacharjee, (1870) 6 B.L.R., Ap., 99; 16 W.R., 84; Srikant Roy v. Satcori Shaha, (1878) 3 C.L.R., 181; Ibin Hossein v. Haidar, (1885) I.L.R., 12 Cal., 109; Jogeswar Sarma v. Dina Itam Sarma, (1898) 2 C.W.N., cxiii; Kashiram v. Bhadu Bapuji, (1870) 7 Bom. H.C. A.C., 17, decided by COUCH, C.J.; Parvathi v. Mannar (1884) I.L.R., 8 Mad., 175, and Dawan Singh v. Mahip Singh, (1888) I.L.R., 10 All., 425. The Calcutta cases cited amount to this, that mental distress caused by abusive words is sufficient to sustain an action for damages. With regard to the particular words used in this case, I submit that the case of Ibin [657] Hossein v. Haidar, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 109, is an authority for the proposition that the word haramzada is actionable per se, and that case is exactly in point. Regard must be had to the effect that the words were calculated to produce, and not to what the bystanders might have believed. Chunder Nath Dhu v. Isurree Dossee, (1872) 18 W. R., 531, and Nil Madhub Mookerjee v. Dookeeram Khottah, (1874) 15 B. L. R., 161, are apparently against the plaintiff. But in the former case it was not necessary to decide the point, and in the latter case, which was the decision of a single Judge, there was merely an opinion against encouraging actions for slander, the point really decided being quite different. Trailokhya Nath Ghose v. Chundra Nath Dutt, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 424, is not against the plaintiff, as it follows Srikant Roy v. Satcori Shaha, (1878) 3 C. L. R., 181.

My second point is that the view I am contending for is in accordance with the principles of "justice, equity and good conscience:" see Regulation VII of 1832, section 9. It is in consonance with Hindu Law [see Narada, pp. 207--212, Vrihaspati, p. 355, Vishnu, pp. 27, 28, 36, &c.—Max Muller's Sacred Books of the East, and Mandlik's Jajnavalka, p. 232, section 205] and with Roman Law, in which personal insult is made the basis of an action. [See Sandars' Institutes of Justinian, 4, 4, 1—p. 418.] I shall state my proposition thus: Every man has an absolute and positive right not to be so insulted as to cause him mental distress; therefore any act in violation of such a right is actionable per se, and general damage, as distinguished from special damage, is recoverable. See Katchffe v. Evans, (1892) L. R., 2 Q. B., 524 (528), and the Indian Penal Code, section 44.

My next point is that my contention is in harmony with the criminal law in this country as contained in the Indian Penal Code. Criminal liability furnishes a safe and proper test of civil liability: see Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukarji, (1881) I. L. R., 3 All., 815 (817); Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemat Chand Shaha, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 867 (871), and sections 499 and [658] 504 of the Indian Penal Code. The present case comes under section 499, or at any rate certainly under section 504. No special damage need be proved when the wrong complained of is in violation of a statutory obligation imposed: see Chamberlaine v. Chester and Birkenhead Railway Co., (1848) 18 L. J., Ex., 494 (496). The criminal law abolishes the distinction between libel and slander.

Lastly, I submit that the distinction which obtains in the English law between libel and slander is based more on authority than on reason, and ought not to be introduced into this country, having regard to the social conditions which prevail here. If the words complained of in the present case were reduced to writing, an action would lie without proof of special damage, according to the English law. There is no reason why there should be any difference, when the words are spoken and not written. The distinction has been condemned by English Judges: See Thorley v. Lord Kerry, (1812) 4 Taunt., 355 (363); 13 Rev. Rep., 626 (634), (per MANSFIELD, C.J.) and Allsop v. Allsop, (1860) 29 L. J., Ex., 315. Women could get no redress when slandered, a state of things which was characterised as barbarous in Lynch v. Knight, (1861) 9 H. L., C., 577 (594). It grew so unsatisfactory that the Legislature was compelled to interfere and to pass the Slander of Women Act, only so late as in 1891. Even the word bastard is not actionable (see Folkard on Libel and Slander, p. 149), it being merely an ecclesiastical offence to call one by that name, unless the use of the word amounts to slander of title. See also Pollock on Torts, 2nd edition, ch. VII, pp. 220, 221.

Babu Sharada Charan Mitra, for the respondent, contended that the case was concluded by the findings of fact. As to the law, the appellant must make out a case of defamation before he can succeed. No hard and fast rule should be laid down. He referred to Phoolbasee Koer v. Parjun Singh, (1869) 12 W. R., 369; Chunder Nath Dhur v. Issuree Dossee, (1872) 18 W. R., 531; Nil Madhab Mookerjee v. Dookeeram; [659] Khottah, (1874) 15 B. L. R., 161; Srikant Rai v. Satcori Shaha, (1878) 3 C. L. R., 181; and Trailokhya Nath Ghose v. Chundra Nath Dutt, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 424, as supporting his contention. The words complained of are the common form of abuse in this country, and knowing how litigation was rampant here, if the question were answered in the affirmative, the result would be simply disastrous. See also Baylis v. Lawrence, (1841) 11 A. & E., 920. [JENKINS, J.—Komul Chunder Bose v. Nobin Chunder Ghose, (1868) 10 W. R., 184; 1 B. L. R., S. N., 12, and Mahomed Ismail Khan v. Mahomed Tahir, (1873) 6 N. W. P., H. C., 38, are in your favour.] The Indian Penal Code satisfies the requirements of public policy.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy, in reply, referred to the cases of Parrat v. Carpenter, Croke's Rep., 502 (38 Eliz); Baker v. Pierce, 6 Mod. Rep., 23 (2 Anne); and Ayre v. Craven, (1834) 2 A. & E., 2 (7), and to Bentham's Theory of Legislation, p. 299, in which it was shown that the absence of any relief granted by law in cases like the present, led to the practice of duelling.

The following opinions were delivered by the Full Bench (MACLEAN, C.J., MACPHERSON, GHOSE, HILL and JENKINS, JJ.):—

Maclean, C.J. (MACPHERSON, HILL and JENKINS, JJ., concurring).—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant for insult, loss of reputation, and mental pain, caused by the defendant by the use of abusive language. The defendant denied using the alleged abusive language, and objected to the amount claimed as being excessive.

The first Court decreed the suit in part; but on appeal by the defendant the Lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit, on the ground that mere abusive and insulting language, which did not affect the plaintiff's reputation, was not actionable.

[660] Against that decision of the Lower Appellate Court this appeal has been preferred, and the learned Judges before whom the appeal came on for hearing, in view of the conflict, or apparent conflict, of decisions, have referred the matter to a Full Bench.

The actual question referred is expressed in these terms :—

"Whether abusive and insulting language, such as that used in the present case, is actionable, irrespective of any special damage." But as the question referred arises in an appeal from an Appellate decree, under rule 2 of the rules relating to References to a Full Bench, the whole appeal is referred.

It has been contended for the plaintiff before us that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, and that abusive and insulting language, such as was used in this case, [the words used being sala (wife's brother), haramzada (base born or bastard), soor (pig), baper beta (son of the father, that is, ironically, bastard)], is actionable. In support of this contention, it has been argued that, in a suit for defamation, based on verbal slander, it is unnecessary to allege or prove such special damage as the English law requires, and that apart altogether from defamation a suit will lie for abuse which causes or is calculated to cause mental distress or pain. The tendency and probable effect of words must be determined in reference to the circumstances under which they are used, and thus in the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court it is said: "No one who heard him did or could imagine that he really meant to aspere the chastity of the plaintiff's sister or mother or thought the plaintiff a pig. There was no defamation or intent to defame. What the defendant did was insulting, but did not affect the plaintiff's reputation a whit."

This finding wholly excludes that which is an essential element of actionable defamation, and it therefore is outside the scope of our inquiry to determine whether or not the English rule which requires special damage to be established in an action for oral defamation should prevail in this country.

We therefore only have to consider whether an action will lie for insult or abuse, with resultant pain and distress of mind, [661] apart from defamation. The first question one naturally asks is what is the gist of this actionable wrong?

In the argument before us it was suggested that the cause of action was the injury to the abused man's feelings, his mental distress and pain.

It is difficult to suppose that the causing of mental distress and pain can per se be actionable. Mental condition of this sort may obviously arise from causes other than abuse or insult, and a moment's reflection makes it clear that the proposition thus widely expressed would lead to manifest absurdities. For instance if A and B are sitting in a room together, and A loses his temper, and uses insulting and abusive language towards B, whose feelings are wounded, B may bring an action against A, or if A uses such language of some relation or friend of B, which equally wounds B's feelings, an action will lie. Such a view does not commend itself to one's common sense, nor is it reasonable.

It is said that the reported decisions of the Indian Courts, and in particular of this Court, support the position that, to cause mental pain and distress by insult or abuse, as distinct from defamation, is actionable, and a large number of authorities have been cited to us as establishing this. It appears to us, however, unnecessary to discuss these cases in detail. Many of them are so inadequately reported that it is impossible to discover what was the state of facts then under consideration.

This is so of the cases of Kanoo Mundle v. Rahamoolah Mundle, (1864) W. R., Gap. No. 269; Gholam Hossein v. Hur Gobind Dass, (1864) 1 W. R., 12; Tuker v. Khoshdel Biswas (1866) 6 W. R., 151; Osseemooddeen v. Futteh Mahomed, (1867) 7 W. R., 259; Gour Chunder Putcedundee v. Clay, (1867) 8 W. R., 256. and Sreenath Mookerjee v. Komul Kurnokar (1871) 16 W. R., 83. From a perusal of those cases in which the facts are set out, it is apparent that in each there was sufficient to support a suit for defamation. In none of the cases on [662] which the plaintiff relies, as we read them, was the point raised or at any rate determined, whether abuse, as distinct from defamation, was actionable, the question rather being whether proof of special damage was an essential condition of the plaintiff's success. On the other hand, this precise point was clearly raised and determined adversely to the view now advanced by the present plaintiff in the case of Komul Chunder Bose v. Nabin Chunder Ghose, (1868) 10 W. R., 184: B. L. R. S. N., 112, and that decision has been followed in the case of Mahomed Ismail Khan v. Mahomed Tahir, (1873) 6 N. W. P. H. C., 38. It will thus be seen that the weight of authority is not in the appellant's favour as he has urged.

Apart then from authority, ought mere personal insult or abuse, as distinct from defamation, and not touching the plaintiff's credit or reputation, to be actionable in this country, if it produce mental pain or distress? It has been urged that insult being punishable under the Penal Code, as it was under the old Hindu penal system, it must be sufficient ground-work for a civil suit. But we think the assumption underlying this argument has no justification, for though the facts, which go to make a penal offence may, in general, suffice to constitute a civil wrong, it requires no exhaustive examination of the forms of civil and criminal liability to show that the latter is no infallible guide to the former. This appears to us to be made clear by the very section of the Penal Code which prescribes a punishment for insult, for the purpose of the penalty imposed is to prevent a breach of the peace.

Do then considerations of public policy demand that we should decide in favour of the proposition for which the appellant contends? We think not. If illustrations were needed of the mischief to which such a decision would lead, it is furnished by this present case. For words of idle abuse uttered in the heat of excitement, incapable of touching the plaintiff's reputation or credit, the defendant has been prosecuted and punished in the Criminal Courts: and then, as though that were not enough, the [663] plaintiff has sued him in the Civil Courts carrying the case for that purpose, through three separate Courts, though it has been found, as is obvious to any one, that the words used "did not affect the plaintiff's reputation a whit." Section 504 of the Penal Code provides a remedy, and that an ample remedy, for conduct such as that of the defendant's; and in our opinion there is no principle of public policy which requires that, in addition, the party complaining should have a remedy by civil suit.

We would, therefore, answer the question embodied in the reference by expressing the view that abusive and insulting language, not amounting to defamation, is not actionable. Section 95 of the Penal Code indicates that harm of a trumpery nature, i.e., "so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of it," is not to be treated as an offence. If mere vulgar abuse, uttered in a moment of anger, abuse to which no person of ordinary sense and temper would attach the slightest importance, is, if it cause mental distress, to afford a ground of action, it is lamentable to think to what an alarming extent the floodgates of litigation would, in this country, become open. We are but little disposed to favour any such view. On the contrary we agree with the expression of opinion of PONTIFEX, J., in the case of Nil Madhub Mookerjee v. Dookeram Khottah, (1874) 15 B. L. R., 161 (166), that actions for verbal slander ought not to be encouraged.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ghose, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench in this case is "whether abusive and insulting language, such as that used in the present case, is actionable irrespective of any special damage."

The words of abuse used by the defendant towards the plaintiff were sala (wife's brother), haramzada (bastard), soor (pig), baper beta (son of father, ironically, bastard) which, according to the finding of the Court of First Instance, not displaced by the Appellate Court, must have caused mental pain to the plaintiff. It appears from the judgment of the Munsif that the plaintiff is a respectable person, and much above the defendant in social [664] position, and that there were several persons present on the occasion when the defendant thus abused the plaintiff.

The learned Judge of the Court below was, however, of opinion that "no one who heard him did or could imagine that he (the defendant) really meant to asperse the chastity of the plaintiff's mother or thought the plaintiff a pig. There was no defamation nor intent to defame: what the defendant did was insulting to the plaintiff, but did not affect the plaintiff's reputation a whit."

The circumstances under which the insult was offered to the plaintiff are thus described by the District Judge: "What happened in this case? The appellant believed or affected to believe that the plaintiff had encroached on his land and ought to retire a particular fence or hedge. Nothing happened when the fence was erected or repaired; but later the appellant sought out the plaintiff at home. He did not begin vilification at once. The plaintiff's witness, Tarini Kundu, says the defendant began by hailing the plaintiff as kaka-babu and dada-babu, but the plaintiff remaining indoors and preserving silence the defendant got angry and launched into abuse of the plaintiff. What the defendant's precise provocation was we don't know. He must have had or thought he had a grievance." According to the opinion of the learned Judge, the plaintiff did not suffer any special damage; but the fact remains that grave insult was offered to him in the presence of other people, and his feelings were outraged, and that the defendant, without any provocation that we know of, but apparently influenced by a desire to avenge the plaintiff for a supposed grievance, vilified him in the manner alleged. And the question is whether for this the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action.

There is no written law on the subject either in this country or in England, except what is provided for in the Slander of Women's Act, 1891 (54 and 55 Vic., ch. 51). The law is to be gathered from the opinions of Judges expressed in different cases from time to time, and from what may be the common law of the country. According to the English law "slander is an actionable wrong when special damage can be shown to [665] have followed from the utterance of the words complained of, and also in the following cases: Where the words impute a criminal offence; where they impute having a contagious disease, which would cause the person having it to be excluded from society; where they convey a charge of unfitness, dishonesty or incompetence in an office of profit, profession or trade; in short, where they manifestly tend to prejudice a man in his calling. This is not so in the case of libel, for it is enough to make a written statement prima facie libellous, that it is injurious to the character or credit (domestic, public or professional) of the person concerning whom it is uttered or in any way tends to cause men to shun his society or to bring him into hatred, contempt or ridicule." (See the Law of Torts by Pollock, p. 230, 5th edition.)

This distinction, however, has been disapproved by several eminent Judges in England [see the observations of MANSFIELD, C.J., in Thorley v. Lord Kerry, (1812) 13 Rev. Rep., 635: 4 Taunt., 355 (363); Lynch v. Knight

(1861) 9 H. L. C., 577 (594); Roberts v. Roberts, (1864) 33 L. J., Q. B., 249.] In the case of Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Mad., 175, TURNER, C. J., sitting with MUTHUSAMI AYYAR, J., condemned the distinction which exists under the English law between slander and libel. He thus expressed himself: "The difference between the extent of the publication of defamatory terms, according as to whether they are committed to print or uttered orally, is in reality accidental. Defamatory matter, when written, is frequently addressed only to a single person; when printed, its publication may be arrested immediately. The publication of a defamatory imputation in a newspaper circulated extensively in a place where the person defamed is unknown may cause him far less injury, whether pecuniary or sentimental, than its publication orally in the neighbourhood in which he resides, to his acquaintances or to persons who can influence his advancement in life. In this country we are not bound to adopt the rules regulating compensation for injuries which are recognised by the [666] English Courts, though it has been the practice of Judges in British India to regard the decisions of the English Courts with the highest respect as embodying the wisdom and experience of a judiciary, whose reputation is second to none for independence and ability. But the distinction drawn by the English law between written or printed and oral slander, which is said to have had its origin in the circumstance that the most frequent instances of oral slander were at one time punishable by Ecclesiastical Courts (2 Salkeld, 694) has been condemned by many eminent English lawyers. Mr. Starkie observes that the distinction 'must be regarded as an absolute peremptory rule not founded in any obvious reason or principle.' In Roberts v. Roberts, (1864) 33 L. J., Q. B., 249, COCKBURN, C. J., and CROMPTON, and BLACKBURN, JJ., pronounced the law of England unsatisfactory and regretted they were bound by it. In Lynch v. Knight, (1861) 9 H. L. C., 577 (594), the Lord Chancellor CAMPBELL expressed the same views, and Lord BROUGHAM, in the same case, declared that the English law was in this respect not only unsatisfactory but barbarous. The Indian Law Commission, of which Lord Macaulay was a member, in its report on the proposed Penal Code, demonstrated that the English law regarding defamation was inconsistent and unreasonable (Introductory Report, note, p. 7, Macaulay's Works, p. 546). The civil law does not recognise the distinction, nor does the Law of Scotland, and the recommendations of Lord Macaulay's commission were approved and accepted by the British Indian Legislature. We, therefore, feel justified in giving effect to our conviction that the rule we are considering is not founded on natural justice, and should not be imported into the law of British India."

Later on, he observed. "Nevertheless, reason suggests that a distinction should be drawn between cases where the slanderer acts from mere carelessness or in an honest but mistaken belief as to his duty, and cases where the slanderer is insolent without any provocation or is influenced by a desire to gratify his enmity. The person defamed may be content to accept a sum sufficient to establish his innocence of the charges made in the former [667] case; in the latter he is entitled to full compensation for the pain inflicted on him."

It is, I think, a well-known maxim of law that all members of a community are under a general duty towards their neighbours to do them no hurt without lawful cause or excuse; and the question here arises whether the act of the defendant is not a violation of the personal right of the plaintiff—a right of protection against any outrage or affront by others, and whether it is not an injury to the plaintiff. Justinian thus defines the word "injury": "Injuria, in its general sense, signifies every action contrary to law: in a special sense it means "sometimes the same as contumelia (outrage), which is derived from contemnere the Greek ὑβρις; sometimes the same as culpa (fault), in Greek ἀδικύμα as in the lex Aquilia, which speaks of damage done injuria; sometimes it has the sense of iniquity, injustice, or in Greek ἀδικία; for a person against whom the proctor or judge pronounces an unjust sentence is said to have received an injuria. Injuria, then, is used in three senses—(1) a wrongful act, an act done nullo jure; (2) the fault committed by a judge who gives judgment not according to jus; (3) an outrage or affront. An injury is committed not only by striking with the fist, or striking with clubs or the lash, but also by shouting till a crowd gathers round anyone, by taking possession of anyone's goods, pretending that he is debtor to the inflictor of the injury, who knows he has no claim on him; by writing, composing, and publishing a libel or defamatory verses against any one; by maliciously contriving that another does any of these things; by following after an honest woman or a young boy or girl; by attempting the chastity of any one;" and, in short by numberless other acts. (See Institutes of Justinian by Sandars, p. 509). And in section 44 of the Indian Penal Code we find the following definition: "The word 'injury' denotes any harm whatever illegally caused to any person, in body, mind, reputation or property." Though this definition is given with reference to a criminal offence, I think it may well be followed in determining the question, whether a civil action may be brought where the plaintiff has sustained an injury either in body, mind, reputation or property.

Bentham in his "Theory of Legislation," observes: "To [668] perceive all the evil which may result from these offences, it is necessary to put all remedies out of view: it is necessary to suppose there are none. Upon this supposition, these offences may be repeated at will. an unlimited career is opened to insolence; the person insulted to-day may be insulted to-morrow, the next day, every day and every hour; each new affront facilitates another, and renders more probable a succession of injuries of the same kind. Now under the notion of a corporal insult is comprehended every act, offensive to the person, which can be inflicted without causing a lasting physical evil, every act which produces a disagreeable sensation, inquietude or pain. But an act of this sort, which, if single, would be scarcely sensible, may produce, by force of repetition, a very painful degree of uneasiness, or even intolerable torture;" and later on he said "what is signified by these verbal assaults is this, that the person assailed is thought worthy of public contempt; but on what particular account is not specified. The probable evil which may result is the renewal of similar reproaches. We may fear, too, lest a profession of contempt publicly made may invite other men to join in it. It is in fact an invitation which many will be ready to accept. The pride of censure, the pleasure of triumphing at another's expense, the spirit of imitation, the inclination to believe all strong assertions, give weight to these sorts of injuries. But they seem to owe their principal importance to the negligence of the laws, and to the usage of duelling—that subsidiary remedy by which the popular sanction has attempted to supply the silence of the laws." And it seems to be obvious that for the peace and well-being of society, verbal abuse, if it is calculated to bring another into contempt, ought to be discouraged.

The distinction between oral and written slander, as it exists in the English law, does not, as I understand it, obtain according to Scotch law, where anything defamatory, which produces uneasiness of mind, is actionable; and so it is under the Roman Law, according to which a party is not only entitled to sustain an action for contumelious words spoken concerning himself, but also in respect of those spoken of others of his family, if they tend collaterally to subject him to degradation and contempt [669] (see Starkie's Law of Slander and Libel by Folkard, 4th edition, p. 19).

If a man commits an assault upon another, though he may not actually touch him at all, or if he lifts up his cane or his fist in a threatening manner at another, or strikes him, however slightly, he is liable to an action for damage; and one fails to see what difference in principle exists between a case like this and a case where a man offers another gross insult in the presence of other people—insult calculated to bring him into contempt and to cause him mental torture.

According to the common law in this country, as expounded in the text of the sages, verbal abuses are punishable (see the Sacred Books of the East by Professor Max Muller, vol. 7, p. 270 and vol. 33, p. 207; Mandlik's Byabahara Mayukha, p. 232). And I find that ever since the establishment of the High Court in this province, it has almost invariably been held that verbal abuse, though no actual damage has been caused, is actionable. In the case of Kanoo Mundle v. Rahamoolah Mundle, (1864) W. R., Gap. No. 269, NORMAN, C.J., expressed himself as follows: "The words, which are of the coarsest abuse, do undoubtedly impute that to the plaintiff which would, if believed, have been hurtful to the feelings of his family and have lowered his character in respect of his caste, and the uttering of them, therefore, amounts to an offence under section 499 of the Penal Code. Applying the test familiar to English law, the uttering of the words in question, standing by itself, was a wrong, and therefore gave to the individual aggrieved by it a right of action independently of any proof of special damage or actual pecuniary injury;" and later on he observed: "No doubt actions for slander are often vexatious. But to prevent people from taking the law into their own hands, and for the preservation of peace and order, it is a matter of the greatest importance that Courts of Justice should afford an effectual remedy to persons feeling themselves aggrieved by wanton and virulent abuse." The same view was adopted in the case of Gholam Hossein v. Hur Gobind Dass, (1864) 1 W. R., 19; in Tukee v. Khoshdel [670] Biswas, (1866) 6 W. R., 151; in Osseemooddeen v. Futteh Mahomed, (1867) 7 W. R., 259; Gour Chunder Puteedundee v. Clay, (1867) 8 W. R., 256; as also in the case of Sreenath Mookerjee v. Komul Kurmohar, (1871) 16 W. R., 83, where MITTER, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed as follows: "We think that the Judge is wrong in holding that the abusive words complained of by the plaintiff in this case are not actionable. It is true that the plaintiff might have instituted proceedings against the defendant in the Criminal Court; but his failure to do so does not deprive him of his right to bring a suit in the Civil Court. The case is governed by the ruling of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Kali Kumar Mitter v. Ramgati Bhattachajee, (1870) 16 W. R., 84, note: 6 B. L. R., Ap., 99. The words alleged to have been used were certainly such as to wound the feelings of the plaintiff." And he remanded the case for the purpose of a finding upon the question whether the defendant did use the words imputed to him or not. In the case of Srikant Roy v. Satcoori Shaha, (1878) 3 C. L. R., 181, MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ., took the same view of the matter. I find also that in the case of Ibin Hossein v. Haidar, (1885) 1. L. R., 12 Cal., 109, FIELD, J., sitting with O'KINEALY, J., took practically the same view of the law: and he observed: "We do not propose to lay down as a general rule that the use of every kind of abusive language is actionable. But we think that language, which, having regard to the definition of defamation in the Indian Penal Code, is calculated to injure the reputation, language which, having regard to the respectability and position of the person abused, is calculated to outrage his feelings, lower the estimation in which he is held by persons of his own class, and so bring him into disrepute, is actionable. We think there is no doubt that the language alleged to have been used in this case comes within this principle:" and in so deciding the learned Judges followed the rulings to which I have adverted. [671] In the case of Trailokyanath Ghose v. Chundra Nath Dutt, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 424, PRINSEP and MACKAY, JJ., adopted the same view, and followed the case of Srikant Roy v. Satcoori Shaha, (1878) 3 C.L.R., 181, and the opinion expressed in Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Mad., 175, to which I have already referred. And, lastly, we have a very recent case decided by BANERJEE and WILKINS, JJ., (unreported) where the learned Judges, upon the point whether slander is actionable in the absence of special damage, expressed themselves as follows: "Though the rule of English law requires proof of special damage to sustain an action for slander except in certain cases, and though there is some conflict of authority in this country, the later cases are in favour of the view that where the abusive language used is such that, having regard to the respectability and position of the person abused, it is calculated to outrage his feelings or lower the estimation in which he is held by persons of his own class, and so bring him into disrepute, it is actionable without proof of special damage." [Dina Ram Sarma v. Jogeswar Sarma, (1898) 2 C. W. N., cxxiii].

In the other provinces also, very nearly the same view of the law has been adopted. In Kashiram v. Bhadu Bapuri, (1870) 7 Bom., H.C., A.C., 17, COUCH, C.J., followed the rulings of the Calcutta High Court, and he held that the case must be decided according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience; and he was of opinion that mere verbal abuse without proof of actual damage was actionable. In the case of Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Mad., 175, the learned Chief Justice, among other matters, observed: "It is often impossible to bring specific proof of the damage which a man may suffer in his business or in his friendships from such an injury. The injury may be occasioned before he has any opportunity of rebutting the slander, and the memory of the slander may survive its contradiction, and may at any time influence his [672] neighbours unconsciously to his disadvantage; nor is the suffering trivial which such a wrong may inflict on its victim." It will be observed that although TURNER, C.J., in one portion of his judgment, expressed that "mere hasty expressions spoken in anger or vulgar abuse to which no hearer would attribute any set purpose to injure character would of course not be actionable," still he held that "the action should be allowed where the defamation is such as would cause substantial pain and annoyance to the person defamed, though actual proof of damage estimable in money may not be forthcoming," and that "a distinction should be drawn between cases where the slanderer acts from mere carelessness, or in an honest but mistaken belief as to his duty, and cases where the slanderer is insolent without any provocation, or is influenced by a desire to gratify his enmity." In the case of Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandra Mukarji, (1881) I. L. R., 3 All., 815, STRAIGHT, J., held that the law of defamation, which should be applied in suits in India for defamation, is that laid down in the Penal Code, and not the English law of libel and slander, and he observed that "the state of society and the condition of things in the two countries is wholly dissimilar, and to lay it down as an inflexible rule that any false and malicious statements, no matter how defamatory, may be made with impunity if only embodied in a petition filed in reference to some pending case, could not but entail the most mischievous consequences."

In Dawan Singh v. Mahip Singh, (1888) I.L.R., 10 All., 425, where, upon the plaintiff being cited as a witness in a suit, and where after giving his evidence the defendant was examined by the Court and stated that there was enmity between him and the plaintiff, and upon the Court inquiring what the reason of this enmity was, he, the defendant, used words conveying the meaning that plaintiff's descent was illegitimate, it was held by BRODHURST, J., that under the circumstances the statement complained of had been made by defendant while deposing in the witness-box, and therefore it was privileged. But MAHMOOD, J., took a very contrary view, and he discussed at length the law upon the subject, and held that the [673] statement was not privileged. He expressed the opinion that the law as laid down by the Calcutta High Court was correct, and he showed why the distinction which obtains in the English law between verbal and written slander should not be adopted in this country; and he observed as follows (at page 444 of the report): "The reasons ordinarily employed against this view are that 'abusive, insulting and unmannerly language which affects not a man's liberty or estate are of too indefinite and uncertain a character to be the subject of an action for pecuniary damages. Such injuries, rather affronts to the feelings, are as incapable of definition as they are of admeasurement. They depend upon the rank, situation and condition of the parties, and on circumstances which may be felt but not defined; they may depend on the tone of voice, the gestures, even looks, by which they are accompanied, and in some instances, silence may be more contemptuous and insulting than direct expressions' (Starkie, p. 17). It is submitted that these objections apply equally to almost all personal injuries (such as assault, defamation, false imprisonment, etc.), in which mental suffering is recognized as an element of assessing damages; so much so that there is no fixed rule for estimating damages in such cases, and the matter is usually left to the discretion of the jury with reference to the circumstances of aggravation or mitigation: as the case may be. In India such questions would have to be decided by the Judge, and I can anticipate no impossibility in arriving at a fair assessment of damages in cases of personal insult as distinguished from defamation." Later on (at page 445) he observed: "Unadvanced countries like India present a state of society where personal insult needs more check than in more civilized countries like England." He also said (at page 446): "Another objection, so far as I can gather from the English text books to recognizing personal insult as a distinct tort, is that it would afford far too large a scope for vexatious litigation, and the ordinary intercourse of society would be impeded and fettered by the apprehension of vexatious and harassing suits for trifling causes. The answer to such an argument is, I think, furnished best by the celebrated dictum of Lord HALL in Ashby v. White, 1 Smith L. C., (10th Ed.) 231 (268): 'As in an action for slanderous words, though a man does not [674] lose a penny by reason of the speaking them; yet he shall have an action. So, if a man gives another a cuff on the ear, though it cost him nothing, no, not so much as a little diachylon, yet he shall have this action, for it is a personal injury. And it is no objection to say that it will occasion multiplicity of actions; for if men will multiply injuries, actions must be multiplied too, for every man that is injured ought to have his recompense.'"

Against this large array of cases in support of the plaintiff's contention, some cases have been quoted on the other side. In the case of Komul Chunder Bose v. Nobin Chunder Ghose, (1868) 10 W. R., 184, where a suit was brought to obtain damages for defamation contained in a letter written and sent by the defendant to plaintiff, and where the only damage alleged was the injury to plaintiff's feelings, it was held that such injury was not in itself a ground for awarding damages in a civil action. No authority is quoted for the decision, and the earlier rulings of this Court do not seem to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges. In the case of Phool-basee Koer v. Parjun Singh, (1869) 12 W. R., 369, it was held that mere verbal abuse without proof of actual damage is not actionable. Here also no authority is quoted and the earlier cases of this Court do not appear to have been considered. In the case of Chunder Nath Dhur v. Isurree Dossce, (1872) 18 W. R., 531, KEMP and GLOVER, JJ., held that though mere verbal abuse without consequent injury would give no claim for damages, yet where a person of some position had been assaulted and grossly abused, and where her reputation must have been injured and her feelings outraged, she was entitled to damages. In the case of Nit Madhub Mookerjee v. Dooker-ram Khottah, (1874) 15 B L.R., 161, where the question was raised whether an action for slander could be brought jointly against several defendants, it was held by PONTIFEX, J., that it could not be so brought, because each person sued for verbal slander was responsible only for what he himself had uttered. And leave was granted to the plaintiff [675] to elect any one of the defendants to sue. The learned Judge, however, seems to have then expressed a doubt whether the words complained of were libellous per se; and it was thrown out that unless special damage was proved the Court would be very much reluctant to give any damage. I take it that the question which arises in this case was not really decided then. In the case of Mahomed Ismail Khan v. Mahomed Tuhur, (1873) 6 N. W. P., H. C., 38, where an action was brought for damage for defamation contained in two letters written and sent by the defendant to the plaintiffs, but where no other publication was alleged and no other injury than the injury to the feelings was caused, TURNER, J., followed the decision in the case of Komul Chunder Bose v. Nohin Chunder Ghose, (1868) 10 W. R., 184, and held that the suit was not maintainable. The earlier rulings of the Calcutta High Court do not seem to have been then brought to the learned Judge's notice, and I take it that he considerably modified his opinion when as Chief Justice of the Madras High Court he decided the case of Parvathi v. Mannar, (1884) I. L. R., 8 Mad., 175.

I have now referred to all the Indian authorities upon the subject that have been brought to our notice, and I have also referred to what is the common law in this country as expounded by sages; and it seems to me that the balance of authority is decidedly in favour of the proposition that the action does lie.

It may no doubt be said, as it has been said, that it is very difficult to measure the damage caused to a person's feelings by reason of insult offered to him, and that if the view I have expressed be adopted, it would lead to the logical result that an action may be brought for damage if a person defames another's nearest relations in his presence, causing thereby mental pain.

As regards the first mentioned matter, all that I desire to say is that the question of the amount of damage is always left to the judge of facts, and he has to consider with [676] reference to all the circumstances, under which the insult was offered, and the character thereof, whether any and what damage should be awarded.

The Indian Penal Code in section 95 lays down "that nothing is an offence by reason that it causes, or that it is intended to cause, or that is known to be likely to cause any harm, if that harm is so slight that no person of ordinary sense and temper would complain of such harm." This rule of law may, I think, well be adopted by the Civil Courts in determining suits for damages by reason of an insult offered.

I do not myself apprehend that a judge of facts would be under any real difficulty in assessing damage in any given case. Indeed no such difficulty is said to have been experienced in any of the various cases that I have referred to.

As regards the other matter, it seems to me that in such a given case, an injury would be rather indirect or remote; and for my own part I should hesitate to hold that an action would lie for such an injury, though I find that according to the Roman law an action does lie, and so perhaps according to the Scotch law, as expounded in the case of Mackenzie v. Read, (2 Murray's Rep., 149); for there, if there is anything that produces uneasiness of mind, it is actionable. But it is not necessary to express any decisive opinion upon the point in this case, and I should prefer to confine myself to the facts of the case before us. I am bound, however, at the same time to say, having regard to the fact that other systems of law allow actions for verbal abuse, without any proof of special damage, that the contention raised on behalf of the plaintiff in this respect cannot be said to be unreasonable.

As a consideration of public policy, it has been pointed out that section 504 of the Indian Penal Code provides sufficient remedy for conduct such as the defendant's, and that it is not desirable that a party should have, in addition thereto, a remedy in the Civil Court. The Penal Code, however, affords a remedy to a person only where the slanderer intends or knows it to be likely that the insult offered will cause him to break the peace, or commit any other offence. But this does not cover other cases [677] of the kind that may arise, and where the slanderer without any justifiable cause grossly vilifies another. I may add that where the person abused is known to the slanderer to be a person of meek and quiet disposition—one who would not under any circumstance break the peace—he would be left without any remedy, because in that case the wrong-doer could not be punished under section 504 of the Penal Code. And yet this would be a case which stands most in need of remedy. A case like this, as it seems to me, should be decided according to the principle of justice, equity and good conscience (See section 37, Act XII of 1887). And, having this principle in view, I am of opinion that it is but just and right that a person thus vilified should be entitled to maintain an action.

I would answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the affirmative.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th March, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE, MR. JUSTICE HILL AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Nitayi Behari Saha Paramanick and others.....Plaintiffs
versus
Hari Govinda Saha and others..Defendants.*

Sale for arrears of rent—Sale of right, title and interest, of a registered tenant—Effect of sale of a tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by a co-sharer landlord against the registered tenant alone.

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to set aside the sale of a shikmi taluk, or in the alternative for a declaration that the sale did not affect their rights, on the allegation that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who were the proprietors of a certain share of the estate under which the said taluk was held, having obtained a collusive decree for arrears of rent for the years 1298 and 1299 (B. S.) against defendant No. 1 who was a joint owner of the taluk with the plaintiffs, in execution thereof fraudulently caused the disputed property to be sold, and defendant No. 1 purchased it in the benami of [678] defendant No. 2, the defence (inter alia) was that the sale was not brought about by fraud or collusion, and that the rent suit having been brought against the registered tenant, defendant No. 1, the whole tenure passed by the sale.

Held, by BANERJEE and HILL, JJ. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting) that inasmuch as it appeared that the share sold away stood in the name of defendant No. 1 alone; that the zemindar used to sue defendant No. 1 for rent for the said share; that the defendant No. 1 used to realize a rateable share of costs, road cesses, &c., which he was bound to pay under rent decrees obtained against him, from the plaintiffs sometimes amicably and generally by contribution suits; and that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who were the fractional shareholders of the zemindari sued the defendant No. 1 as usual for rent for the years 1298 and 1299 B. S., and obtained a decree, the sale though in terms only a sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, really passed the right, title and interest, not only of the registered tenant, but also of the unregistered co-owners whom he represented.

Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, followed.

THE facts of the case are shortly these: The plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 were joint owners of a certain share of a shikmi taluk. This share stood in the name of defendant No. 1 alone in the zemindar's sheristha. Rent for the years 1298-1299 B. S., having fallen into arrears from defendant No. 1 on account of the share standing in his name, defendants Nos. 3 and 4, two of the landlords, instituted a suit for rent against him, making the other co-sharer landlords pro forma defendants, and obtained a decree. The plaintiffs' allegation was that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in collusion with defendant No. 1 got this decree, executed it, and in execution thereof fraudulently, without getting the sale proclamation properly served, had the said taluk sold, and defendant No. 1 purchased it at an inadequate price in the benami of his servant defendant No. 2. They further alleged that they knew nothing about the decree, attachment, sale proclamation, sale, or taking possession of the disputed property by defendant No. 2 till October 1895. They, therefore, prayed that the said sale be set aside, or in case the sale could not upon evidence be legally set aside, for a declaration that their right and possession were not affected and injured in any way, and they also prayed for confirmation of possession.

[679] Defendant No. 2, the auction-purchaser, who alone appeared, pleaded (inter alia) that the sale was not brought about by fraud & collusion; that he was a bonâ fide purchaser and not a benamidar for defendant No. 1; that he having purchased the property at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent his title was complete; that the whole property standing in the name of defendant No. 1 alone having been sold the plaintiffs had no cause of action; and that the plaintiffs, having neglected to register their names in the sheristha of the zemindar, and having waived their rights to be parties in all suits for rent for the share standing in the name of defendant No. 1, could not now set up their title against a bonâ fide purchaser.

The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit holding that defendant No. 2 was a benamidar for defendant No. 1, and that the sale in execution of the decree passed only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor defendant No. 1.

On appeal the Lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the first Court, and dismissed the suit.

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, and Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, for the Appellants.

Babu Srinath Das, Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, and Babu Faruck Nath Chakrabarti, for the Respondents.

The High Court (HILL and RAMPINI, JJ.) delivered the following judgments:—

HILL, J.— The question raised by this appeal is one of some importance. It is not, so far as I am aware, met precisely by any direct authority, but its solution depends, as it appears to me, on the application of principles which have been recognized in analogous cases.

The facts are sufficiently simple. The plaintiffs and the first defendant are co-tenants of a 2 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share in a certain shikmi taluk, the name of the first defendant alone being registered in respect of the share in the zemindar's sheristha. The other shareholders in the taluk have opened separate accounts with the zemindar. The third and fourth defendants, who [680] are fractional shareholders in the zemindari, sued the first defendant alone for the entire rent due in respect of the 2 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share of the taluk for the years 1298 and 1299, and obtained a decree in execution of which the share in question was brought to sale and purchased by the second defendant on the 11th December 1894. The plaintiffs now sue to set aside this sale, alleging fraud and collusion between the first defendant and the third and fourth defendants, and contending further that all that could, according to law, pass to the purchaser by the sale of the 11th December was the interest in the taluk of the first defendant, on which footing they also ask for relief. It is only with the latter contention that we are now concerned, the former having been negatived by the findings of the Courts below, and the sole question for our determination is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the extent of their own interest in the taluk to have the sale in execution set aside.

The suit was dismissed by the Lower Appellate Court, the learned Subordinate Judge being of opinion that the case fell within the principles laid down by this Court in Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996. He quotes with approval from the judgment of the Munsif the following passage: "The defendant has proved, and it is to a certain extent admitted by the plaintiffs, that the share sold away (i. e., 2 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share) stood in the name of the defendant No. 1 alone; that the zemindar used to sue defendant No. 1 for rent for the share; that the defendant No. 1 used to realize a ratable share of costs, rent, cesses, &c., which he was bound to pay under the rent decree from the plaintiffs sometimes amicably and generally by contribution suits; and that such was the state of affairs for many years." He further finds specifically that it is proved that "the said taluk (comprising the 2 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share) was sold and purchased by the defendant No. 2." Under those circumstances, and in view of the consideration that the third and fourth defendants had sued the first defendant as representing the ownership of the whole tenure, he considered that the sale ought to operate as a sale of the plaintiffs' interest as well as of those of the first defendant and he accordingly dismissed the suit.

[681] It may be added that there was no question before us, or, indeed, throughout the suit, but that the plaintiffs were jointly interested with the first defendant in the taluk and liable equally with him in respect of the rent. Further, it was admitted that the proceedings in execution under which the second defendant purchased were bad under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. But I may point out with advertence to a consideration to which some weight appears to have been given by GARTH, C.J., in the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, that the third and fourth defendants being merely fractional shareholders in the zemindari had no option but to proceed with the execution of their decree under that Code. I may say also that after a careful examination of the documents bearing upon the sale of the tenure, I think the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that what was sold was the entirety of 2 annas 13 gundas 1 cowri 1 krant share in the taluk. I do not think it necessary in order to support this view to refer now to these documents in detail, more particularly as the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the point was not, as I understood, contested before us. The appellants contented themselves here with the assertion of the principles that a person, who is not a party to a suit, cannot be affected in person or property by anything that is done in the suit, and that a sale in execution of a decree held under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot pass anything beyond the right and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property sold. These they relied upon as general and indisputable propositions which needed no authority in support of them; and they also placed reliance in particular upon the cases of Kristo Chunder Ghose v. Rajkristo Bandyopadhyaya, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 24; and Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 390, as well as on certain remarks made by the learned Judges who decided the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 302.

The first of these cases, however, does not appear to me [682] to help the appellants or to be in point. What happened there was, that one of two shareholders in a zemindari brought a suit for rent against the person recorded as tenure-holder. He obtained a decree, and under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure the interest of the judgment-debtor in the tenure was brought to sale. Prior to the institution of the suit, however, the tenure-holder had transferred the tenure to certain persons from whom it devolved upon the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had frequently sought to compel the landlords to register their names as transferees of the tenure, but without success, and it was decided under these circumstances, firstly, that the plaintiffs might, notwithstanding the non-registration of their names, make a good title to the tenure under the transfer; and secondly, that, if in point of fact, the decree under which the sale in execution took place had been obtained by a person who was interested in the zemindari only to the extent of 8 annas, the sale would pass only the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor. That was, it seems to me, a wholly different case from the present. There, if the plaintiffs' case were true, the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor at the time when the sale took place were nil, while the plaintiffs were, to the knowledge of the landlord when he brought the suit (for that must be taken to be so), exclusively entitled to the tenure. There was no question of representation in the case, or of any of the equities upon which the decision of the Lower Appellate Court has proceeded in the present case.

Then, the case of Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 390, merely affirms the principle which is not disputed, that an attachment of a tenure or holding in execution of a decree obtained by a fractional co-sharer for arrears of rent of his separate share is not such an attachment as is contemplated by section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and it seems to me to be unnecessary to say anything more about it.

Lastly there is the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 302, which, however, I venture to think, is quite as helpful to the case of the respondents as it is to that of [683] the appellants. Briefly stated, the facts there were that the Maharajah of Dumraon granted a tacca lease to two persons, Nowrong and Ramanund, of a certain village. These two persons belonged to different families, but Ramanund was a member of a family consisting of several persons. The Maharaja obtained a decree for rent against Nowrong and Ramanund alone, and in execution of his decree he attached certain properties (other than those affected by the lease) which belonged to Ramanund and the other members of his family. Upon this a claim was preferred by the other members of Ramanund's family to the property attached, on the ground that they were separate in estate from Ramanund, and that they were in separate possession of the attached property according to their respective shares. The claim was allowed; and then a suit was brought by the decree-holder to have it declared that the other members of Ramanund's family were joint with him and participated in the benefits of the leasehold property; that they were, therefore, liable to pay the amount covered by the decree for rent; and that the properties which had been attached were consequently liable to be sold in execution of that decree. The first question to which the learned Judges addressed themselves was whether such a suit would lie. That question they answered in the affirmative. They then went on to consider whether the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on the merits and held that he was not. When introducing the discussion of the latter branch of the case it is observed by GHOSE, J.: "The success of the plaintiff's suit depends upon proof that the defendants were members of a joint undivided family with Ramanund, and that the decree was obtained against Ramanund in his representative capacity." The finding of the learned Judge on one of the questions thus proposed, as well as his discussion of the evidence, have unfortunately been left out of the report; but he sums up in these terms: "Upon all these grounds I am unable to say that the decree obtained by the Maharaja against Ramanund was in the latter's representative character, and that for satisfaction of that decree the property of the other defendants is liable to be sold." PRINSEP, J., was, moreover, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge had rightly characterized the evidence brought [684] to show the existence of a joint Hindu family as "vague, conflicting and unsatisfactory." The remarks of Mr. Justice GHOSE have, however, been seized upon by the appellants as indicating that it is only in the case of members of a joint undivided Hindu family that the doctrine of representation can come in. But I venture to think that they cannot have been intended to convey such a meaning. The suit was based wholly on the assertion of the principle that, in consequence of the fact of Ramanund and the other members of his family constituting a joint undivided family, they, as well as he, were interested in and took the benefits of the lease which stood in his name, and were represented by him, and the only questions, therefore, which arose for decision were whether, in point of fact, the family was joint and was represented by Ramanund. It was only in so far as it bore on the case set up by the plaintiff that it was necessary to lay down the law, and the remarks of the learned Judge must be taken and understood in relation to the facts of the case then before him. It would have been going far beyond the scope of the case to pronounce any opinion upon the general question whether the doctrines of representation are inapplicable in the case of persons who are not members of a joint Hindu family. The judgment of PRINSEP, J., to which also reference was made, appears to me to carry the matter no further than that of GHOSE, J. The case, however, appears to me to be of importance as recognising the principle which, indeed, had often been recognised before, that a decree-holder may sue to have it declared that the interests of third persons may be made liable for the satisfaction of a decree made in a suit to which they were not parties, although the decree was one in execution of which ordinarily the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor alone could be disposed of; and I think that, if such a suit will lie at the instance of a decree-holder, it must be open to the defendant in a suit brought, as in the present case, to impugn a sale in execution, to avail himself in defending the sale, of grounds similar to those upon which a decree holder might rely in the converse case. Indeed, it was laid down by the Privy Council in Nanomi Babrasin v. Modhun Mohun, (1885) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 21 : L. R., 13 I. A., 1, that a purchaser [685] at a sale in execution, if he has bought the entirety, may defend his title on any ground which would have justified the sale. That case was no doubt in its facts somewhat different from the present, but the principle is, I think, equally applicable here.

I now pass to the case made by the respondents. It is no part of their case, I may observe, to controvert either of the rules, regarding them as general propositions, upon which, as I have said, the appellants rely; and their case is, in effect, that the appellants were in fact co-sharers with the first defendant in the tenure and were only, as such, interested in the share of the taluk which was sold; that they were equally liable with the first defendant for the rent in respect of which the sale took place; that the first defendant, being the only registered tenant, represented the other co-sharers in the tenure; that the landlord was entitled to look to him alone as tenant; that the share of the taluk was sold in respect of the entirety of the rent; and that what was sold was the entirety of the share. And they contend that it would be unjust and inequitable, under these circumstances, to allow the sale now to be set aside at the instance of the appellants.

I think that this contention ought to prevail. The cases shew clearly that the fact that a sale in execution has been had under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure is not in itself conclusive of the question whether the interests of persons other than the judgment-debtor have passed under the sale. It is sufficient to mention the cases of Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawani Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 302, and Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884)

I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, to both of which reference has already been made,*and the case of Jotendro Mohun Tagore v. Jogul Kishore, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 357, for the purpose of showing this. In the last mentioned case it is said at p. 364 of the report: "It has been held over and over again, not only in this Court, but by the Privy Council, that the words 'right, title and interest' of the execution-debtor must not be construed strictly, [686] but with reference to the circumstances under which the suit is brought, and the true meaning of the decree under which the sale takes place. And this was the more necessary in the case of sales which took place under the old Civil Procedure Code, because by section 249 of that Code the proclamation in every case was for the sale only of the interests of the execution-debtor. And as a matter of form and practice all sales under that Act were of the right, title and interest of the execution-debtor. It is, therefore, the duty of the Court in each case to ascertain carefully what was intended to be sold," and this I think embodies the rule by which I ought to be guided in the present case.

The case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, was strongly relied upon by the respondents in support of their case generally; and unless it is distinguishable on the ground urged by the appellant it certainly appears to me to be conclusive in their favour. It was a case in which a fractional sharer in a zemindari estate brought a suit against one Gupta Lal, the sole registered tenure-holder, for rent due in respect of the tenure. It appeared that Gupta Lal had two brothers who, along with him, constituted a joint family, and that Gupta Lal being the eldest brother was the manager of the joint property. The tenure was ancestral. The landlord having obtained a decree brought to sale the rights and interests of Gupta Lal in the tenure, and the purchaser having taken possession of the whole tenure, the brothers of Gupta Lal sued to recover their shares on the ground that nothing passed by the sale beyond Gupta Lal's interest. In delivering the judgment of the Court GARTH, C.J., after discussing and distinguishing the cases of Doolur Chand Sahoo v. Jalla Chabeel Chand, (1878) L.R., 6 I.A., 47, and Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh, (1879) L. R., 6 I. A., 233, deduced from them these two general propositions: (1) "When it is clear from the proceedings that what is sold, and intended to be sold, is the interest of the judgment-debtor only, the sale must be confined to that interest, although the decree-holder might have sold the whole tenure if he had taken proper steps [687] to do so, or although the purchasers may have obtained possession of the whole tenure under the sale: (2) but if, on the other hand, it appears that the judgment-debtor has been sued as representing the ownership of the whole tenure and that the sale, though purporting to be of the right and interest of the judgment-debtor only, was intended to be, and in justice and equity ought to operate as, a sale of the tenure, the whole tenure then must be considered as having passed by the sale, and if the question is a doubtful one on the face of the proceedings, or one part of these proceedings may appear inconsistent with another, the Court must look to the substance of the matter and not to the form or language of the proceedings." The latter branch of this proposition, it may be mentioned, is founded on a passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh, (1879) L. R., 6 I. A., 233, where it is said "in execution proceedings the Court will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to set aside an execution on mere technical grounds when they find that it is substantially right." Having laid down these two propositions the learned Chief Justice then proceeds to apply the law to the case before him. He remarks that Gupta Lal was not only the manager but also the sole registered owner of the tenure, and that the fractional sharer in the zemindari took the ordinary and proper course of suing the tenant who in the zemindar's sheristha represented the entire tenure. The judgment then proceeds: "Moreover, when she had obtained her decree, she was unable, as she only owned a share in the zemindari interest, to sell the whole tenure under section 59. She could only obtain her execution in the way she proceeded to enforce it, namely, by selling the right and interest of the judgment-debtor under section 64. But as between her and the persons interested in the tenure she had a right to treat Gupta Lal as the sole owner of the tenure, and when she sold his right and interest for the rent due she was in our opinion selling the tenure itself. As his name was registered as the sole owner of the tenure he represented his brothers' interest in it as well as his own. The rent was due [688] from them all, though he alone was sued for it, and as they were equitably liable to pay the amount of the decree it was only just that their interest as well as his should be sold to satisfy it."

Now with the one exception, that the first defendant in the present case was not the manager of a joint Hindu family, it appears to me that it is incapable of being distinguished from the case before GARTH, C.J. But it is said that that fact in itself involves a vital distinction. I confess I am unable, on a very careful consideration of Sir RICHARD GARTH'S judgment, to discover that he laid any particular stress upon that consideration. It is certainly not referred to in the second of the two general propositions quoted above—the particular proposition which he thought applicable to the case before him; and it is only referred to once in the latter part of the judgment where, so far as I am able to perceive, it occupies a very subordinate place. What the learned Chief Justice does appear to me to insist upon are the considerations that Gupta Lal was properly sued as the registered tenant; that the person who sued him was incapable of obtaining relief otherwise than by selling the right and interest of Gupta Lal; that she was entitled as between herself and the persons interested in the tenure to treat Gupta Lal as the sole owner of the tenure; that by virtue of his being the sole registered owner he represented the interests of his brothers: and that as the latter were equitably liable to pay the amount of the decree it was only just that their interests as well as those of Gupta Lal should be sold to satisfy it. All these considerations are directly applicable to the state of things existing in the case now before us, and are in my opinion sufficient to dispose of it.

Is there, however, the vital distinction contended for between the case of the members of a joint Hindu family who have put forward or allowed one of their members to represent them, and that of a group of joint tenants who not being so connected have done the same? Without entering upon the question of the position and authority of the manager of a joint Hindu family, it would seem that the ultimate ground upon which the property of the remaining co-sharers may be made available for [689] the satisfaction of a decree obtained against him alone is simply their liability for the debt upon which the decree is founded, and that liability arises in the case of a lease from the fact that they as well as the manager are interested in and take the benefit of the lease. GARTH, C.J., in the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad held that the fact of the eldest brother alone being registered as tenant was sufficient to establish his representative character, there being in that case no question of the interest of the remaining brothers in the tenure, which was ancestral. In Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, GHOSE, J., held that it lay on the plaintiff only to show that the defendants were members of a joint undivided family with Ramanund, for the purpose presumably of establishing the necessary community of interest; and that Ramanund was sued in his representative capacity. Given, in other words, the community of interest and the necessary representation, and that is all that is required. These principles do not appear to me to be peculiar to the Hindu law or to be restricted in their application to cases in which one has to do with a joint undivided Hindu family. It seems to me that any group of persons might by their action place themselves in such a situation as to bring themselves within the sphere of their application. Thus in Nobin Chandra Roy v. Magantara Dassya, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 924, for example, GARTH, C.J., said: "It is clear that if two out of three partners are sued for a debt due from the partnership and a decree is obtained against those two and execution issues against the partnership property, if the third partner should apply successfully in the execution proceedings to have his share in the property released, the plaintiff's only remedy would be a regular suit, not for the purpose of making the third partner personally liable for the debts, but for the purpose of making the share of the third partner available to satisfy the decree." This was said not with advertence to any doctrine peculiar to Hindu law, but, as I understand it, generally; and if a decree-holder may in such a case show that the property of the third partner is available for the satisfaction of the decree then, on the principle to which I have referred in an earlier part of my judgment, when [690] the sale has actually taken place, the purchaser at an execution sale, if he be sued by the third partner, may defend his title on similar grounds.

As to the equities, I am unable to perceive any material distinction between the case of persons subject to the Hindu law and of those who are not; or why if the property of a Hindu may be made available under the circumstances now in contemplation that of other persons should be exempt. Now in the present case the liability of the plaintiffs for the rent of the share of the tenure in question, as a consequence of their community of interest in it with the first defendant, is not disputed, and the learned Subordinate Judge has found for the same reason as that upon which GARTH, C.J., proceeded in Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad that the appellants were represented as between them and the landlord by the first defendant. In this I certainly consider that he was right. He has not, it is true, found in specific terms that the first defendant was sued in a representative capacity. But I take it he intended so to find, and looking at the substance of the matter I myself entertain no doubt on the question. The first defendant was to the landlord the sole representative of the tenure, and as such was sued in respect of the entire rent; and it is found as a fact that on previous occasions "the zemindars used to sue defendant No. 1 for rent for the share," and that he was in the habit of afterwards realizing their proportion of what he was compelled to pay from the plaintiffs, sometimes amicably, but generally by means of contribution suits—a state of things which had gone on for many years." In no case does it appear that the plaintiffs disputed, at all events successfully, their liability along with the first defendant for the sums recovered as against him alone as the person representing the tenuro; and it is only now when the sale of the tenure has been brought about, that they seek to repudiate him as their representative. It certainly appears to me that there are ample grounds here for holding that the first defendant was treated by his co-sharers as their representative, and that he was sued in that character, and it appears to me that one of the primary objects which the rules in relation to the registration of tenants is intended to subserve, which is, I think, to protect landlords from difficulties of the kind [691] raised by the plaintiffs in this suit, would be defeated if it were to be held otherwise. In the case of Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh, (1879) L. R., 6 I. A., 233, the Privy Council "assumed" the representative character of the defendant, although there was nothing to show that he was the "manager" of the family which he was held to represent,—at least no reference is made by the Privy Council to that consideration; and it was in that case that their Lordships laid down the principle to which I have already referred that "in execution proceedings the Court will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon merely technical grounds when they find that it is substantially right."

Having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, I think it would be inequitable and would work manifest injustice if we were now to set aside the sale in question at the suit of persons who admittedly were liable for the rent decreed against the first defendant, and who, as it appears to me, were duly represented as between themselves and their landlord by the first defendant, not only qua the lease, but also in all the proceedings taken by the landlord to secure the recovery of the rent—persons, moreover, who make no offer, but take their stand simply on what they assert to be their legal right.

The further question was raised whether the Subordinate Judge was right in his finding that the purchase by the second defendant was not benami for the first defendant. But I see no reason for differing from the learned Subordinate Judge on this point. I have not thought it necessary, I may add, to say anything specifically as regards the position of the second defendant as a bona fide purchaser without notice, as the case was placed before us simply on the grounds indicated above.

I would dismiss the appeal; but as my brother RAMPINI differs from me in this respect, the case must be submitted to the Chief Justice in order that he may appoint a Judge to decide it. Our difference of opinion, as I understand, relates to the effect to be given to the documents of sale—a matter which, for [692] reasons that I have already indicated, I do not, however, regard as conclusive of the case, and to the representation of the plaintiff by the first defendant.

Let the case be laid before the Chief Justice for orders.

Rampini, J.—In this suit the plaintiffs sue to have the sale of a certain shikmi taluk, in which they have a share, set aside so far as they are concerned, and to have it declared that the sale in question did not affect their interests in the taluk. The plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 are admittedly the owners of this shikmi taluk. It was sold on the 11th December 1894 in execution of a decree for rent obtained by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, who are fractional shareholders of the zemindari, against the defendant No. 1. The taluk was purchased at the sale by the defendant No. 2, who contends that he purchased the whole taluk, and that the right of the plaintiffs as well as of the defendant No. 1 passed to him at this sale. The Subordinate Judge found against the plaintiffs and dismissed their suit. They now appeal and contend on various grounds that his judgment is wrong.

It is sufficient, I think, for the purposes of this appeal to confine our attention to the question whether the right of the plaintiffs can be regarded as having passed at the sale held in execution of a decree given in a suit to which they were no parties, and in my opinion this question must be answered in the negative. The Subordinate Judge admits that the sale having taken place in execution of a decree obtained by fractional shareholders in the zemindari cannot be regarded as a sale under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It must have been, he admits, a sale held under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. This is also conceded by the learned pleader for the respondents in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, considers on the authority of the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, that the defendant No. 1, who was the only tenant of the shikmi taluk recognized by the landlord, must be held to have represented the plaintiffs to the [693] zemindar, and that being so, that their rights must be considered to have been affected by the decree in the suit against the defendant No. 1, and the sale held in execution of the decree. The learned pleader for the respondents adopts the same line of argument, and in support of the view taken by the Lower Appellate Court, the following cases have been cited, viz., Jotendro Mohun Tagore v. Jogul Kishore, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 357; Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 70; L. R., 14 I. A., 187; Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 40; L. R., 15 I. A., 195; Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 302, and Hari Vithal v. Jairam Vithal, (1890) I.L.R., 14 Bom., 597. In all these cases, however, the registered tenant or person held to represent the unregistered tenants or others were held to represent the others under some doctrine of Hindu law. Thus, in the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I.L.R., 10 Cal., 996, the joint holders of the tenure were all members of a joint Hindu family, governed by the Mitakshara law, and the registered tenant, who was held to represent the others, was the managing member of the family. This was pointed out by GHOSE, J., in the case of Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, (1895) I.L.R., 23 Cal., 302, at p. 317 of the report. In that case, i.e., Radha Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, the persons interested in the lease were also members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, but as it was held that the ostensible lessee was not sued in his representative capacity, the other persons interested in the lease were not found to be bound by the sale which took place in execution of the decree obtained against him. The facts of Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand, (1887) I.L.R., 15 Cal., 70; L. R., 14 I. A., 187, are similar. In the cases of Jotendro Mohun Tagore v. Jogul Kishore, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 357, and Hari Saran Moitra v. Bhubaneswari Debi, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 40; L. R., 15 I. A., 195, the defendant was a Hindu widow, who was on this ground held to represent the others interested in the property.

But these cases seem to me to be no authority for holding that [694] the plaintiffs in this case are bound by the sale held in execution of the decree obtained against the defendant No. 1, for (1) it does not appear that the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 are members of a joint Hindu family; (2) they are not said to be governed by the Mitakshara law; (3) there is nothing to lead to the conclusion that the defendant No. 1 was sued as representing them; and (4) it does not appear that what was sold was the shikmi taluk. On the contrary, from the proclamation of sale (Exhibit C), the sale certificate (Exhibit D), and the order confirming the sale (Exhibit 15), it is clear, I consider, that the sale which took place under section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure purported to convey only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 1, in the shikmi taluk. A consideration of these documents in detail seems to me to put this matter beyond a doubt. The first of them, the proclamation of sale (Exhibit C) issued under section 287 of the Code of Civil Procedure proclaims that "the property of the aforesaid judgment-debtor" (i.e., defendant No. 1) "as mentioned in the following Schedule shall be sold." The sale certificate (Exhibit D), declares that what was sold was "the judgment-debtor's right to the 2 annas 13 gandas 1 cowri 1 krant share in the said taluk." The order confirming the sale, (Exhibit 15), commences with the preamble that "whereas the following title, ownership and interest were on the 11th day of December 1894 sold by the Nazir," and concludes by certifying that "the sale proceeds of the judgment-debtor's right to the 2 annas 13 gandas 1 cowri 1 krant share in the taluk amounted to Rs. 160."

Further, both the lower Courts have, I think, found as a fact that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 1. Thus, the Munsif at page 11 of the paper book says: "It appears, moreover, from Exhibit C, Exhibit D, Exhibit 12, and Exhibit 15, that the interest only of defendant No. 1 in the property purchased in the name of the defendant No. 2 was sold at the execution of the rent decree. Consequently, on that ground also the sale does not and did not affect the right and interest of the plaintiffs in the property sold and purchased in the name of the defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1." The Subordinate Judge does not displace [696] this finding of fact of the Munsif. On the contrary, he seems to accept it, for at page 16 he says: "It was contended that in the sale notification, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor was advertised for sale. But that does not confine the property to be sold to the interest of the defendant No. 1 alone. By right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor it means the right, title and interest of all the co-sharers of the taluk, i.e., plaintiffs and defendant No. 1, the former being as much judgment-debtors of the decree as the latter who had been sued as representing all the holders of the shikmi taluk." I cannot, however, agree to the interpretation put by the Subordinate Judge on the terms of the proclamation of sale, there being nothing, as already said, on the record, as far as I can see, to show why the defendant No. 1 should or could represent the plaintiffs in the rent suit, or that he did do so, and therefore I can see no reason why the plaintiffs' property should be held to have passed at the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 1, in the taluk—a sale held in execution of a decree obtained in a suit in which they were not parties. This sale was certainly not one under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the purchaser, defendant No. 2, cannot have purchased the whole tenure, nor can the plaintiffs' right be affected by it. In support of this view, I would cite the cases of Kristo Chunder Ghose v. Raj Kristo Bandyopadhyaya, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 24; Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 390, and Jagan Nath Goral v. Watson & Co., (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 341. These cases seem to me to be ample authority for the view taken by me. It would indeed be impossible, I think, for defendants Nos. 3 and 4, by suing under the Civil Procedure Code, to proceed to attach and sell the property of persons not parties to the suit brought by them and in no way shown to have been represented in it.

I would accordingly set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Munsif.

There being a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges, the case was referred, under section 575 of the Civil [696] Procedure Code, to Mr. Justice BANERJEE, who delivered the following judgment:—

Banerjee, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which, after the amendment of the plaint allowed by the first Court, must be taken to have been brought by the plaintiffs, appellants, for setting aside the sale of a shikmi taluk sold in execution of a decree as fraudulent and collusive, or in the alternative, for obtaining a declaration that the sale did not affect the rights of the plaintiffs; and for recovering possession of the plaintiffs' shares in the shikmi taluk.

The main allegations upon which the suit was brought were, that the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 were owners of a 2 annas 13 gandas 1 cowrie 1 krant share, bearing a separate rent, of a shikmi taluk named Kanai Balai; that defendants Nos. 3 and 4, the proprietors of a certain share of the estate under which the shikmi taluk was held, brought a suit for arrears of rent due to them in respect of that share of the shikmi taluk and obtained a collusive decree; and in execution of that decree the defendants 3 and 4 fraudulently suppressing the usual sale proclamation brought about a sale, at which defendant No. 1 purchased the said share of the taluk benami in the name of defendant No. 2.

The defendant No. 2, who alone contested the suit, denied the allegations of collusion, fraud and benami, and urged that the rent suit had been rightly brought against defendant No. 1, who was the sole person registered in the landlord's sheristha as the holder of the share of the taluk in question; that the sale in execution of the rent decree was properly held; and that he was a bona fide purchaser of the shikmi taluk on his own behalf and not as benamdar for any one.

The first Court held that defendant No. 2 had purchased benami for defendant No. 1, and that the sale in execution of the decree passed only the the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, defendant No. 1 and it accordingly gave the plaintiffs a decree.

On appeal, the Lower Appellate Court has reversed that decree and dismissed the suit, holding that the allegation of fraud was not [697] made out; that defendant No. 2 had purchased on his own behalf, and that defendant No. 1 being the only person registered in the zemindar's sheristha in respect of the share of the shikmi taluk in question, the sale in execution of the decree for rent against him passed not only his own share but that of the plaintiffs as well.

Against that decision the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal on the ground that the sale in question could not pass anything more than the share of defendant No. 1. And as the two learned Judges before whom the appeal was heard have differed in opinion, the case has been referred to me under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The contention on behalf of the appellants is that a sale in execution of a decree cannot affect the interest of any person who is not a party to the suit, and that the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, upon the authority of which the Lower Appellate Court has dismissed this suit, is distinguishable from the present case, as the decree in that case was against a person who was not only the registered tenant in respect of the tenure for which the rent was claimed, but was also the managing member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, and was therefore rightly held to represent the other members of the family who brought the suit for reversal of the execution sale. On the other hand, it is contended for the respondents that, though the person against whom the rent decree was passed in the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad was a managing member of a Hindu family, the decision of this Court is based, not upon that fact, but upon the fact of his having been the registered tenant in respect of the tenure for which rent was claimed.

Mr. Justice RAMPINI accepts the appellants' contention as correct, while Mr. Justice HILL takes the view contended for on the other side.

After considering the arguments on both sides, I agree with Mr. Justice HILL in thinking that this case must be governed by that of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, and that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is correct.

[698] The general rule, no doubt, is that a sale in execution of a decree cannot affect the interest of any one who is not a party to the decree. But the rule is subject to certain exceptions; and upon the facts found by the Lower Appellate Court the present case comes under one of these exceptions, namely, the one enunciated by GARTH, C.J., in Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad in the following manner : "But if on the other hand it appears that the judgment-debtor has been sued as representing the ownership of the whole tenure, and that the sale, although purporting to be of the right and interest of the judgment-debtor only, was intended to be, and in justice and equity ought to operate as, a sale of the tenure, the whole tenure then must be considered as having passed by the sale. And if the question is a doubtful one on the face of the proceedings, or one part of those proceedings may appear inconsistent with another, the Court must look to the substance of the matter and not the form or language of the proceedings."

And a little further on Sir RICHARD GARTH adds : "Now in the present case, Gupta Lal, the defendant No. 4, was not only the manager but the sole registered owner of the tenure, and Adhikari Koer in claiming against him the entirety of her share of the rent, took the ordinary and proper course of suing the tenant who in the zemindar's sheristha represented the entire tenure."

The facts found in the present case are, "that the share sold away (that is 2 annas 13 gandas 1 cowri 1 krant share) stood in the name of defendant No. 1 alone ; that the zemindars used to sue defendant No. 1 for rent for the share ; that the defendant No. 1 used to realise a rateable share of costs, road cesses, etc., which he was bound to pay under the rent decree from the plaintiffs, sometimes amicably and generally by contribution suits, and that such was the state of affairs for many years," and "that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, who are fractional shareholders of the zemindari, sued the defendant No. 1 as usual, for rent of 1298 and 1299 and obtained a decree in execution of which the said taluk (comprising the 2 annas 13 gandas 1 cowri 1 krant share) was sold and purchased by defendant No. 2 on 11th December 1894."

[699] It is clear, therefore, that here, as in the case of Jeo Lal v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, the person sued for rent was the sole registered holder of the tenure in question, and that the persons who brought the rent suit and caused the sale of right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the tenure were some of the shareholders in the zemindari and sued the registered tenant as usual. It is true that in the case cited, the person sued for rent was also the manager of the joint family that owned the tenure, but that circumstance is only incidentally noticed, and does not form any ground for the decision arrived at.

The reason for the decision is that, as the law required tenants to register their names in the landlord's office, unregistered co-owners of a tenure by their omitting to have their names registered, must be taken to have acquiesced in the registered tenant representing them in their dealings with the landlord ; that in a suit for rent against the registered tenant, he must be taken to have been sued as representing the ownership of the whole tenure ; and that a sale in execution of the decree obtained in such a suit, though in terms only a sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, must be held really to pass the right, title and interest, not only of the registered tenant, but also of the unregistered co-owners whom he represents ; and that reason holds good quite as much in this case as in the case relied upon.

The principle enunciated by Sir RICHARD GARTH in the case of Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 996, in the passage quoted above, no doubt contains an important condition which must be satisfied, namely, that the sale in question must be one which "in justice and equity ought to operate as a sale of the tenure." Having regard to the facts found in this case, namely, that the position of affairs for many years was for the defendants 3 and 4 to sue defendant No. 1 alone for the rent and for defendant

No. 1 to realise from the plaintiffs the amount payable by them; that the amount covered by the decree in execution of which the sale took place, was really due, and that the plaintiffs took no steps to pay [700] the amount of rent due in respect of their share, I think the above condition is fully satisfied.

It was contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that as the plaintiff in the rent suit brought against defendant No. 1 did not state that he was the sole registered tenant, there was nothing on the face of the execution proceedings to show that the decree was made against defendant No. 1 as representing the ownership of the whole tenure, and so defendant No. 2 could not have bid for and purchased anything more than the share of defendant No. 1. I do not consider this contention valid. The defendant No. 1 was sued as the person representing the ownership of the whole tenure for the whole rent due on account of the same in respect of the shares of defendants Nos. 3 and 4; and intending purchasers could, and in all likelihood did, ascertain what was the fact, namely, that the defendant No. 1 was the sole registered tenant in respect of that tenure.

It was then contended for the appellants that the Lower Appellate Court was wrong in dismissing the suit without coming to any finding upon the question of value which had an important bearing upon the question whether the sale was intended to be, and ought in justice and equity to operate as, a sale of the whole tenure and not merely of the right, title and interest of defendant No. 1. The question of value may have some bearing upon the last mentioned question; but the plaintiffs do not appear to have raised the question in that form in either of the Courts below. It is true they said in their plaint (paragraph 4) that the property was sold for an inadequate price; but they said so only to support the allegation that the sale was fraudulently brought about by suppressing the issue of the sale proclamation, and their allegation of fraud has been found by the Lower Appellate Court not established.

As for the cases of Kristo Chunder Ghose v. Raj Kristo Bandyopadhyaya, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 24; Beni Madhub Roy v. Jaod Ali Sircar, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 390, and Radha [701] Pershad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 302, relied upon in support of the appeal, I think they are quite distinguishable from the present case as Mr. Justice HILL has shown.

I, therefore, agree with Mr. Justice HILL in thinking that the decision of the Lower Appellate Court is right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Principal and Agent—Holding out, by the principal, of the agent's authority.

The right of a third party against the principal on the contract of his agent, though made in excess of the agent's actual authority, was nevertheless enforced where the evidence showed that the contracting party had been led into an honest belief in the existence of the authority to the extent apparent to him.

APPEAL from a decree (16th April 1896) of the High Court, reversing a decree (14th December 1893) of the Subordinate Judge at Mozufferpur.

The appellant was the son and representative of Girdhari Lal, whose firm, styled Jit Mal Girdhari Lal, carried on a Bank at Mozufferpur, and who commenced this suit on the 27th May 1892 against Mr. G. Marshall, proprietor of the Meah Chapra Indigo Factory, the Honourable F. R. Byng, and Mr. C. Amman. The two last-named were defendants only in the Court of First Instance, where a decree was made against Mr. Marshall alone.

In 1890 Mr. Marshall purchased the interest of Mr. Byng in the factory, who till then managed it on his account, and continued to manage it on behalf of the new proprietor from the 1st November 1890, when the indigo season, 1890-91, [702] commenced, till March 1891, when he left and was succeeded in the management by Mr. Amman.

The plaintiffs' firm, after the transfer, continued to supply cash for the management upon the manager's order. From time to time in payment of advances, hundis were drawn by him on a Calcutta firm, which financed the indigo concern, and were handed over by him to the Bank. Copies of the accounts were interchanged between the Bank and the manager.

This suit was for the balance alleged to be due to the Bank on the accounts as they stood at the end of the indigo season on the 31st October 1891. That debit balance on that date against the factory was alleged by the defendant to have been increased unduly by a debit which had been carried into the accounts of November and December 1890, and which had been paid off in January 1891 by hundis delivered to the Bank in the course of business as above stated. The Bank's right to appropriate the payment in this latter month to a debt not incurred by the defendant was disputed as unauthorized.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The question in the suit now raised on this appeal was whether the Bank was justified in appropriating the money which they received in January 1891 to payment of the advance which had been antecedent to the transfer of the factory. On this the Courts below had differed.

The Subordinate Judge upheld that appropriation. He considered that the mode in which the business was conducted justified the Bank in believing that the defendant, Mr. Marshall, merely stepped into the place of his predecessor, Mr. Byng. The plaintiffs' claim was accordingly decreed against Mr. Marshall, and dismissed as against the other defendants.

The High Court reversed that decree.

The Judges were of opinion that there was no evidence to show that Mr. Marshall had agreed to take over the liabilities of the factory as they stood on the 31st October 1890; and no evidence that Mr. Byng, as manager for Mr. Marshall, had authority to consent to the appropriation of payment made by the Bank in January 1891.

[703] On the defendant's appeal,—

Mr. H. H. Asquith, and Mr. W. Whateley for the Appellant.—The Bank took the hundis in January 1891 in good faith, believing the payment to be made by a manager having authority to allow the amount to be credited against the debit then existing. The transfer of the ownership of the factory was not even known to the Bank till the latter days of December. The error of the High Court was in taking the question between the parties to be one of the actual authority of the manager; while the real point was whether or not the Bank had reasonable grounds for believing, and in good faith believed, that he had authority.

That the accounts had remained at the disposal of the defendant to examine, was referred to; and it was argued that the accounts had virtually been settled, and that no sufficient ground for re-opening them had been shown. The London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, (1892) L. R., A. C., 201, was referred to.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Respondents.—The High Court had rightly held that the appellants were not authorized to make appropriation of the payment in January to a debt owed by the proprietor at a date anterior to the transfer. There had been no such course of dealing as would preclude the principal from showing that his agent had exceeded his authority, as, in fact, he had. The payment made in July by the defendant would have been sufficient to cover any balance on the present accounts if the unauthorized appropriation in January had not been made.

Counsel for the appellant was not called upon to reply.

On a subsequent day, 10th December 1898, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The appellant, Ram Pertab, is the son and legal representative of Babu Girdhari Lal, a banker, deceased, carrying on business at Mozuffierpur in Behar. In January 1890 Girdhari Lal began to act as banker to the Mesh Chapra Indigo Factory in Tirhoot. In the accounts it is called Indigo Concern. At that time the Honourable Francis Russell Byng was the proprietor and manager of the factory, having an absolute right [704] to a half-share in it, and being the lessee of the remaining half-share. The respondent, Mr. Marshall, is the brother-in-law of Mr. Byng, and he held a mortgage of the half-share of which Mr. Byng was the owner. From the 7th January 1890 to the 31st October 1891 Girdhari Lal, whom it will be convenient to call the Bank, supplied funds for carrying on the factory upon tankhas (orders) drawn by the manager on the Bank. The concern was financed by Messrs. Gisborne & Co., Calcutta. Mr. Byng used to draw hundis upon them, and these were made over to the Bank, which obtained the proceeds of them and credited them in the account with the concern. Monthly accounts of receipts and disbursements used to be sent by the Bank to the indigo factory in duplicate.

One of these used to be signed by the gomastha of the Bank; this used to be retained in the factory, and the other, sent without any signature, used to be signed by the manager and sent back to the Bank. These accounts were put in evidence. The first relied on at the hearing of the appeal is for February 1890 and is headed "Jumma-kuruch account of money of the Meah Chapra Concern, pergunnah Bisara, as per tankhas signed by Mr. Francis Russell Byng, manager and proprietor of the said concern through the banking firm of Babus Jit Mal and Girdhari Lal, mahajuns of Mozufferpur." It shows a balance due from the concern to the Bank of Rs. 11,395-12-6, and at the end there is a statement signed by Mr. Byng that this is correct. Their Lordships observe that the account begins with a balance of Rs. 7,975-5 due to the Bank on an account for January 1890, headed in the same manner, but not signed by Mr. Byng as correct. For this reason apparently, their attention was not called to it in the argument. The accounts continued to be headed and attested by Mr. Byng in this way up to and including that for December 1890. The headings of the accounts for January, February and March 1891 are altered, Mr. Byng being no longer called proprietor, but only manager of the Meah Chapra Concern. He ceased to be the manager about the end of March 1891, and Mr. Amman became the manager, his name appearing in the accounts, which were attested by him down to and including October 1891.

[705] Mr. Marshall was examined upon interrogatories under a commission, and in answer to the 7th interrogatory he said: "My connection with the concern after the 1st November 1890 was that of proprietor of Mr. Byng's 8 annas (half share), and I leased the other 8 annas . . . I acquired Byng's 8 annas through an agreement made on my behalf by Messrs. Gisborne & Co. of Calcutta . . . The agreement was made in January 1891 and dated back to 1st November 1890. By the same agreement I became lessee of the other 8 annas." In his answer to another interrogatory he said that he acquired Byng's 8 annas by obtaining a release of his equity of redemption under the mortgage to him. Gisborne & Co., who held a second mortgage, joined in the deed for the purpose of completing his title.

The first debit item in the account for January 1891, in which Mr. Byng is for the first time only described as manager, is a balance of Rs. 19,897-15-9, brought forward from the account for December 1890. On the credit side there is, under the date 10th January 1891, "five hundis for Rs. 25,000 drawn on Gisborne & Co. by Mr. Byng in favour of the bank." As to this entry Ram Sahai said that the munib-gomastha (principal clerk) of the Bank deposed that he applied about the account to Mr. Byng, personally and by letters. Mr. Byng replied that arrangements were being made for the outlay of the year following, and that the Bank's money would be repaid when the arrangements were completed; that on the 7th January 1891 he got five hundis for Rs. 25,000 from Rusdhari Lal, a clerk of the factory, who gave them, saying "Mr. Byng has given these hundis to you, saying, mahajun was getting alarmed. Now there will be a balance in my favour." Rusdhari Lal deposed that he was a clerk in the Meah Chapra Indigo Factory from 1883 to 16th September 1893; that in January 1891, he took hundis for Rs. 25,000 from the factory by order of Mr. Byng and gave them to Ram Sahai; that Ram Sahai asked for what these hundis had been given, and he said: "You have old balance due to you; deduct it and give me what I want." Mr. Byng had directed him to say he wanted Rs. 8,000. Ram Sahai gave him that sum, and he took it to the factory. The money was mostly required to pay rent to the maliks, also for [706] other expenses. Mr. Byng, who was examined by interrogatories, deposed that he did not give authority to the Bank to take any of the proceeds of the hundis for Rs. 25,000 in payment of any money due by him in respect of prior season's operations or borrowings by him on account of working previous to 31st October 1890.

The account for October 1891 showed a balance due to the Bank for principal and interest of Rs. 25,058-11-1½, and on the 27th May 1892 Girdhari Lal brought a suit against Mr. Marshall to recover Rs. 19,179-8-0, the balance after giving credit for Rs. 7,348-3-7½ received on the 1st May 1892. The defence was that the Rs. 7,385-2-4½ was the balance due on account of the concern for advances and payments from 31st October 1890 to 31st October 1891, and the defendants had paid that on the 1st May 1892; that the plaintiff had wrongfully appropriated part of the Rs. 25,000 to the payment and satisfaction of the balance of Rs. 17,673-8-9; and that Byng had no authority from the defendant to permit the plaintiff to make that appropriation.

Now the real case is not, as is said in the defendant's written statement, that the claim in the suit is in fact for that balance. It is for the sum due on the whole account from February 1890, and the defendant is seeking to set aside the appropriation and to apply the amount of that balance in satisfaction of what would be due on the accounts from 31st October 1890 after the payment of the Rs. 7,385-2-4½. If the Bank was not entitled to make the appropriation, the Rs. 17,673-8-9 remained the money of Marshall, and should be applied towards payment of what was due from him on the accounts from October 1890. If nothing had been due on those accounts he would have had to sue to recover back the money. This may be important in considering the evidence in the case. It was admitted that the munib-gomastha, who conducted the business of the Bank, acted in good faith. He might honestly and reasonably have believed from the previous transactions that the Rs. 25,000 were intended to be applied in the same manner as the payments had been applied in the previous accounts. The course of business was rather between the Bank and the indigo [707] factory than between it and the actual proprietor. It was not proved that the Bank had any intimation of the change of the proprietorship, except what appeared in the heading of the accounts. Nor was there any evidence of the terms of the agreement under which Marshall became the proprietor. There may have been, probably was, some notice of the debts or liabilities of the concern. Their Lordships cannot agree with the High Court when they say that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove this agreement by obtaining discovery and inspection of documents. If Mr. Byng was careless, as he said in his evidence he was, in signing the accounts as correct, and Mr. Marshall was negligent in not examining the accounts, copies of which were at the factory, the loss ought not to fall on the Bank. Having regard to the nature of the transactions between the Bank and the indigo factory, and to the only information which the Bank had of the change of proprietorship (Mr. Byng continuing to be manager) their Lordships think the munib-gomastha might reasonably suppose that Mr. Byng had authority, and that in the honest belief of that fact he continued to make the advances. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the High Court, to dismiss the appeal to the High Court with costs, and to affirm the decree of the first Court. The respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

Hindu law, Alienation—Alienation by widow—Mortgage taken from Hindu widow—Unpaid interest claimed on her deceased husband's mortgages—Will, Construction of.

A pardanashin widow executed a mortgage of part of the family estate to secure payment of the balance of interest alleged to be due on three [708] previous mortgages, which had been executed by her husband in his lifetime. Justifying necessity for her to encumber was not shown, nor enquiry by the mortgagee as to her authority. Even if the transaction had been properly explained to her, as a Hindu widow she would have exceeded her powers.

By his will her husband had declared that his widow should have full powers, but that, during the life of his minor son, she should not have power to transfer without legal necessity ; and that she should have power to mortgage to pay revenue and other debts.

Held, that the will conferred on her no greater power of alienating the family estate than she had under the Hindu law ; and that, under the circumstances, the mortgage executed by her was invalid.

Notes promising to pay interest, additional to that contracted for in the mortgages had been signed by the husband, which it was held could not affect the right to redeem, being unregistered.

APPEAL from a decree (25th February 1895) of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, modifying a decree (11th April 1892) of the District Judge of Fyzabad.

The plaintiff, appellant, claimed on the liabilities alleged to arise upon the execution of four registered mortgage bonds, of which three were executed by Raja Mehpel Singh, talukdar of Surajpur, who died on the 8th October 1892. He left a widow Rani Chabraj Kunwar, the first defendant, who had executed on the 18th March 1885, the fourth mortgage. This widow mortgaged a village in the estate to secure Rs. 8,000 alleged to be due for interest on the three previous mortgages.

The defendant, now respondent, was the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, the agent of the Court of Wards, who defended on behalf of the minor son of the deceased Raja.

The claim, filed on the 22nd October 1889, was for Rs. 14,336. An addition had been made to the interest originally fixed in the Raja's mortgages, by unregistered rukkas, or notes, signed by the Raja, one of which followed upon each of these mortgages.

The principal issue, and the only question now material was whether the widow's charge on the family estate was, under the circumstances, binding thereon.

The facts of the case, including a provision made in the Raja's will, dated 27th April 1882, which purported to declare the [709] authority of the widow in the matter of her alienation of the estate, are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The District Judge decreed the claim. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner, and the Additional Commissioner, concluded that the mortgage by the widow had been beyond her powers, and was invalid; and that so much only of the claim as consisted of a sum of unpaid principal, Rs. 2,000, due on the Raja's mortgages with interest thereon at the rate agreed upon in his registered deeds should have been decreed; but not upon the widow's mortgage.

On the plaintiff's appeal,—

Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the Respondent.

Their Lordships' judgment was afterwards, on the 11th March, delivered by Lord Macnaghten.—This is an appeal against a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh varying an order of the District Judge of Fyzabad. The suit in which the decree was pronounced was brought to enforce a claim under four deeds of mortgage, three of which were executed by the late Raja Mehpal Singh, talukdar of Surajpur, and one by the Rani his widow after his death. The appellant Tika Ram, who represents the mortgagee, was plaintiff. The defendant in the suit was the present respondent, the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, who is now, under the Court of Wards, manager of the Surajpur estate on behalf of the minor son of the late Raja.

The only question argued at the Bar which, in their Lordships' opinion it was competent for the appellant to raise was, whether the circumstances under which the fourth mortgage was executed by the Rani were such as to make it binding on the minor's estate.

The three mortgages executed by the Raja were—

(1) A mortgage of the village of Baghora to secure Rs. 10,000, dated 15th January 1880.

[710] (2) A mortgage of the village of Mau to secure Rs. 6,000, dated 30th November 1880.

(3) A further charge by way of mortgage on the village of Mau to secure Rs. 8,000, dated 30th May 1882.

The rate of interest specified in each of these mortgages was 15 per cent. per annum, but with each mortgage the borrower gave the lender a rukka or written promise to pay 6 per cent. more bringing the rate of interest in respect of each mortgage up to 21 per cent. per annum. These rukkas were not registered, and it seems to have been the intention of the parties that they should be kept off the Register.

On the 8th of October 1882 the Raja died. By his will he declared that the Rani should have full powers, but that during the life-time of his son, the minor on whose behalf the respondent is manager, the Rani should not have power to transfer without any legal necessity any portion of his property; but that to pay off the Government revenue and to liquidate other debts payable by him, the Rani should have power to mortgage the property. It was held by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, and as their Lordships think rightly held, that this will "conferred on the Rani no greater power of alienating her minor son's estate than she had under Hindu law" as its manager on her minor son's behalf."

The circumstances under which the fourth mortgage was executed are not in dispute. In March 1885, two years and a half after the Raja's death and before the Court of Wards assumed the management of the estate, one Beni Ram, an accountant acting on behalf of Tika Ram, settled up accounts with the karinda of the Rani. The balance due for interest calculated at 21 per cent. per annum was found to be Rs. 9,228-14-3. It was arranged that a mortgage should be given for Rs. 8,000 and that the balance should be paid in cash.

The arrangement was carried out by the payment of Rs. 1,228-14-3 in cash and the execution of the fourth mortgage on the 18th of March 1885.

Their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioner's Court in thinking that the mortgage cannot stand. It seems to be open to every possible objection. It turned interest into principal [711] without any apparent reason. No enquiry was made into the means and circumstances of the widow. The widow, who was a pardanashin lady, stated in her deposition taken by commission that the account had never been put before her or settled by her, and that she did not know the mortgage was on account of interest—a statement not improbable in itself and certainly not contradicted by any evidence, while there is evidence to the effect that on the 18th of March 1885 there was a cash balance to the credit of the estate of Rs. 14,000.

Mr. Arathoon who argued the case strenuously on behalf of his client insisted that their Lordships ought to infer that extreme pressure was being put on the Rani, that the estate was in immediate peril of being sold up unless the Rani submitted to the mortgagee's demands, while by submission she gained the advantage of extension of time and reduction of the rate of interest from 21 per cent. per annum to 15 per cent. in future. It is enough to say that there is no evidence whatever in support of any one of these suggestions. Neither in the fourth mortgage deed nor in any other document, nor even in the oral evidence is there any trace of any agreement or any understanding that there should be any time given or any reduction of interest allowed. It was as much open to the mortgagee immediately after the execution of the fourth mortgage, as it was before, to enforce his rights without forbearance or allowance of any kind.

One proposition was advanced in the course of the argument which perhaps ought to be noticed. It was urged that the rukkās, though not registered, fettered the equity of redemption. The learned District Judge was of that opinion clearly. But their Lordships have a difficulty in understanding how an unregistered instrument, which the statute declares is not to affect the mortgaged property, can fetter the equity of redemption in that property. It seems to be a contradiction in terms.

Their Lordships were asked to give the appellant a decree against the estate of the deceased Raja based on his personal liability under the rukkās. The learned Commissioners expressed their opinion on the matter as if it were properly before them. But the truth is that this question was not raised in the [712] plaint or referred to in the pleadings or issues. In their Lordships' opinion it was not competent for the Court in this suit to deal with it.

The result is that the appeal fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that it ought to be dismissed.

The appellant will pay the costs of the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), sections 78, 79—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 60—Suit for rent—Unregistered proprietor.

There is nothing in section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to render a suit for rent by an unregistered proprietor unmaintainable, it being sufficient, if during the pendency of the suit and prior to decree, his name is registered.

Dhoronidhur Sen v. Wajidunnissa Khatoon, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 708, dissented from.

Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lall Sen, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 87, explained and followed.

Belchambers v. Hussan Alli Mirza Bahadur, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 498, followed.

THE plaintiff, Moulvie Abul Khair, was originally the malik of taluk Ram Dass No. 6662 of the noabadi mehal of Mouza Baraduara, Chaklay Satkania, in the District of Chittagong, and had his name registered as proprietor under Bengal Act VII of 1876. The defendant, Meher Ali, held an et mam under [713] the plaintiff in the said taluk. After some rapid changes of hand, brought about by a revenue sale, the said taluk came back to the plaintiff, who purchased it in the benami of one Mahomed Ismail, whose name was registered as proprietor. A suit brought for possession by Mahomed Ismail against the present defendant was dismissed on the ground that Mahomed Ismail was a benamdar for the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit for rent.

The defendant contended, among other things, that the name of the plaintiff not having been registered under Bengal Act VII of 1876, he was not competent to bring the suit, under section 78 of the said Act, and that the defendant was not bound to pay the rent to the plaintiff. The plaintiff got his name registered during the pendency of the suit, but subsequent to its institution.

The Munsif decreed the suit, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision, and dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff, who was not the registered proprietor at the time when the suit was brought.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Moulvie Sirajul Islam, for the Appellant.

Babu Jatra Mohan Sen, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Macpherson and Stevens, JJ.) was as follows :—

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2325 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Jadu Nath Dass, Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 14th of September 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Pankaja Kumar Chatterjee, Munsif of Satkania, dated the 4th of January 1897.

„ The Subordinate Judge has reversed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the sole ground that the plaintiff's name not having been registered as proprietor at the time when the suit was brought, although it was registered while the suit was pending, the plaintiff, under the provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act and section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, could not maintain a suit for arrears of rent. In so deciding the Subordinate Judge has cited the decisions in the cases of Dhoronidhur Sen v. Wajidunnissa, (1888) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 708, and Surja Kant Acharya Bahadur v. Hemant Kumari Devi, (1889) I. L. R., 16 Cal., 706. He considered that the decision in the case of Dhoronidhur Sen v. Wajidunnissa, so far [714] from being overruled, was considered to be correct by a majority of the Judges of the Full Bench in the case of Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lall Sen, (1895) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 87.

We are unable to adopt this view. In the Full Bench case it was decided that sections 78 and 79 of the Registration Act, Bengal Act VII of 1876, offered no bar to a person whose name was not registered, as proprietor or manager, bringing a suit for arrears of rent, and that it was sufficient if, during the pendency of the suit and prior to decree, his name was registered. That was a suit instituted in the Small Cause Court in Calcutta, and the majority of the Judges, who took the view expressed above, thought it was unnecessary to consider whether or not the case of Dhoronidhur v. Wajidunnissa was rightly decided, as it might have been affected by the provisions of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. NORRIS, J., one of the Judges who formed the majority, alone said that he thought the case of Dhoronidhur v. Wajidunnissa was wrongly decided. Certainly the Subordinate Judge is not right in saying that the case of Dhoronidhur v. Wajidunnissa was approved of. The most that can be said is that it was distinguished from the case before the Full Bench, and that the majority of the Judges thought it unnecessary to say whether the decision was or was not right. The effect of the decision of the majority of the Judges was, we think, clearly this: that apart from the provisions of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, sections 78 and 79 of the Land Registration Act did not prevent an unregistered proprietor from bringing a suit for arrears of rent. What we have, therefore, to consider in the present case is whether the provisions of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act render a suit by an unregistered proprietor unmaintainable. It seems to us that that section has no such effect. It provides that when rent is due to the proprietor, manager, or mortgagee of an estate, the receipt of the person registered as proprietor, manager or mortgagee of that estate, shall be a sufficient discharge for the rent, and that the person liable for the rent shall not be entitled to plead in defence to a claim by the person so registered that the rent is due to any third person. It follows that the receipt of an [715] unregistered proprietor would not prevail against the claim of the registered proprietor; nor would it do so under the provisions of section 79, Bengal Act VII of 1876. If the suit is maintainable, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 78 and 79 of Bengal Act VII of 1876, we do not see anything in the provisions of section 60 which renders it unmaintainable; and although the case of Dhoronidhur v. Wajidunnissa is not expressly overruled by the decision of the Full Bench to which I have referred, we think we must apply the principle on which the majority of the Judges acted, and following that principle, we think the Subordinate Judge was wrong.

. I would also point out that in the case of Belchambers v. Hussan Alli Mirza Bahadur, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 493, it was held that the mere non-registration of the name of the plaintiff at the time that the rent suit was instituted, furnished no ground for the dismissal of the suit.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside, and the case must be sent back in order that any questions arising in the appeal may be disposed of. The appellant will get his costs in this Court.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 15th May, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

W. R. Fink

Buldeo Dass and others.*

Jurisdiction—Evidence as to jurisdiction at hearing—Letters Patent, High Court, clause 12—Agreement to pay as per account—Acknowledgment of debt—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), section 19—Agency, Termination of—Accounting agents—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), schedule II, article 89—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sections 201 and 216.

The plaintiff as Receiver to the estate of S instituted a suit on the 11th July 1898 against the defendants to recover the sum of Rs. 2,808-13-2, a portion of the said sum being the rent of a house occupied by the [716] defendants at Mandalay since January 1894 till the 11th July 1898, the remaining portion being the price of goods sold by the defendants as agents of S. The plaintiff at the institution of the suit obtained leave under clause 12 of the Charter. The defendant contended that the Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the plaint on its face did not shew that the cause of action or any part of it arose in Calcutta ; that the cause title alone represented the defendants as carrying on business in Calcutta, and that portion of the plaint was not verified; nor could the plaintiff give evidence to prove that his cause of action arose in Calcutta, as it would be varying the cause of action, and that fresh leave would have to be granted, which could not be done in this suit. Held, that the Court had jurisdiction, and the plaintiff was entitled to give evidence at the hearing to show that his cause of action arose in Calcutta. To admit evidence of that fact, and if necessary amend the plaint by adding a statement that part of the cause of action did arise in Calcutta, does not cause a variance in the original cause of action. It is sufficient to show that the cause of action or part of it arises in Calcutta when the suit comes on for hearing.

It was also contended by the defendants that the plaintiff's claim to rent prior to July 1894 was barred, and that as the sale of the piece-goods was completed by the defendants in June 1894, that claim was also barred. The plaintiff submitted that the letters written by the defendants to the plaintiff within three years of the institution of the suit agreeing to pay as per account enclosed by them to the plaintiff was a sufficient acknowledgment to save the claim for rent from being barred. Further, that although the sale of the goods was completed in June 1894, the defendants did not cease to be the plaintiff's agents until they had accounted to him for the price of the goods which had not yet been done.

Held, that the plaintiff's claim for the portion of rent claimed beyond three years was not barred; the defendant's letters were a sufficient acknowledgment to save limitation; there being an admission that there was an open account between the parties, and that there was a right to have it taken, implied a promise to pay. Prance v. Sympson, (1854) 1 Kay., 678 and Banner v. Berridge, (1881) L. R., 18 Ch. D., 254, referred to.

Held, also, that the defendants were liable to the plaintiff as agents until they had accounted to him, and therefore his claim as to the piece goods was not barred. Babu Ram v. Ram Dayal, (1890) 1 L. R., 12 All., 541, followed.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiff as Receiver to the estate of Sewbux Sureka against the defendants to recover the sum of Rs. 2,808-13-2.

[717] The plaintiff alleged that the defendants were partners in a business which was carried on at Mandalay on behalf of the estate of Sewbux Sureka under the name and style of Sewbux Soorujmull, and in Rangoon and Calcutta under the name and style of Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, and as such partners were in occupation of a house in the Chane Thazan quarter in Mandalay belonging to the said estate. The business at Mandalay having come to an end the defendants entered into a written agreement which was signed by Buldeo Dass, the first defendant, to vacate the house on or before the 21st January 1894, and if they failed to do so to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 35 per month. The defendants failed to vacate the house, and a sum of Rs. 2,047-14-4 became due from them to the said estate as rent up to the 30th June 1898. There was also a sum of Rs. 587-8 due by the defendants to the said estate on account of piece goods sold by them in Rangoon. The plaintiff also claimed interest on the above sums. On 1st April 1897 the plaintiff as Receiver wrote to the first defendant demanding payment of the said amount. On the 17th April 1897 the defendants caused their attorneys, Messrs. Cowasjee and Cowasjee, to write the following letter to the plaintiff admitting the defendants' liability to the estate of the deceased in the sum of Rs. 320-13 and enclosing an account in the hand-writing of the first defendant.

"Our client Buldeo Dass has put into our hands your two letters addressed to him and dated the 1st instant, with his instruction to reply that the accounts closed in your letter under reply are not correct. We hereby furnish you with copies of our client's accounts which show that our client is indebted to the estate of the said deceased in the sum of Rs. 320-13 only; our client denies his liability to pay interest. You have evidently failed to give credit to ours for the various items shown in our client's accounts. Our client is willing to furnish you with further particulars that you may deem necessary."

The plaintiff relied upon this and two other letters as an acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act, which prevented his claim as to the rent from January to June 30th, 1894, from being barred by lapse of time. The other letters were one of the 5th April 1896 from Buldeo Jowala Persaud as follows :—

“ You have written to this effect ; you said at the time of your departure [718] that, after looking into our rent account, you would send us hundi Bhaiji, that is right. We will make no objection with regard to what may be found as per account, to be receivable by and due to you for rent,” and another dated 8th September 1897 written by Buldeo Jowala Persaud in which he said :—

“ We have been earning our livelihood honestly ; we have not committed any act of dishonesty towards Sewbuksh Ji Soorujnull ; nor have we misappropriated any money belonging to Sewbuksh Ji Soorujnull. We will not at all deviate from what you may say with regard to anything that may be (found) receivable and payable as per account. We will not in any way refuse to accept what may be (found) receivable and payable as per account. But for the last twelve months or two years, our business is not going on (well), in consequence of which we have been in difficulties, and we have not been able to make any profit, hence the delay.”

The defendants having failed to pay the amount claimed the plaintiff brought this suit, having obtained leave under clause 12 of the Charter and under section 44 Rule A of the Civil Procedure Code, to institute it.

The defendants pleaded want of jurisdiction and denied that they ever resided or carried on business in Calcutta, and alleged that the second defendant was not a partner in the business carried on at Mandalay. They also stated that there was no agreement that the rent should be payable at Calcutta, and that the plaintiff could only claim rent for a period of three years prior to the filing of the suit which was on the 11th July 1898, and not as alleged by them from the 21st January 1894. The defendants further stated that the sale of the piece goods was completed by June 1894, and that the plaintiff's claim thereto was barred.

Mr. Dunne, and Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Mitter, and Mr. Chowdhry, for the first Defendant.

Mr. Sinha, and Mr. Monnier, for the second Defendant.

Mr. Chowdhry.—I submit the Court has no jurisdiction to try this case. There is nothing on the face of the plaint to show that the cause of action arose in Calcutta ; the cause title alone represents the defendants as carrying on business in Calcutta, but that portion of the plaint is not verified ; that allegation is also denied by the defendants. It must be shewn that [719] the defendants do in fact carry on business in Calcutta. As to carrying on business see Subbaraya Mudali v. The Government, (1863) 1 Mad. H. C., 286 ; Emrit Lall v. Kidd, (1864) 2 Hyde, 117, Chinnammal v. Tulukannatammal, (1866) 3 Mad. H. C., 146. It is not sufficient that one of the defendants should carry on business in Calcutta. The word “ defendants ” in clause 12 of the Charter means all the defendants—Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Mahomed Hadjee Joosub, (1874) 13 B. L. R., 91.

The grant of leave under clause 12 of the Charter must be held to relate only to the cause of action contained in the plaint as presented to the Court at the time of the grant. To allow the defendants to give evidence that the agreements were signed in Calcutta is a variance of the original cause of action, and leave as to that varied cause of action cannot be granted after the institution of the suit—Rampurtab Samruthroy v. Premsookh Chandamal, (1890) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 93. The defendants owe the plaintiff rent for three years prior to the institution of the suit in July 1898, that is, from July 1894 and not from January 1894 ; the claim for rent from January to July 1894 is barred. The sale of the piece goods was completed by the defendants in June 1894, and their agency must be taken to have terminated then, and therefore the plaintiff's claim to that is also barred.

Mr. Dunne, contra.—The Court, I submit, has jurisdiction. The plaintiff clearly states in the cause title that the defendants carry on business in Calcutta. If the plaintiff is permitted to give evidence on that point it cannot be said that it would be a variance of the cause of action. The cause of action remains the same. There is no additional cause of action disclosed for the first time.

Nor is any portion of the rent claimed by the plaintiff barred. The letters written by the defendants to the plaintiff are a sufficient acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act. They send the plaintiff accounts and agree to pay what should be found due to him as per the accounts. It has been [720] held that where there was an admission of the existence of an open account between the parties an undertaking to pay was thereby implied—Prance v. Simpson, (1854) 1 Kay, 678. I further submit that the claim to the price of piece goods sold for the plaintiff by the defendants is not barred. Taking it that the sale of the goods was completed in June 1894 that does not terminate the agency which continues until the defendants have fully accounted to the plaintiff—Babu Ram v. Ram Dayal, (1890) I. L. R., 12 All., 541.

Stanley, J.—The action was brought in this case by Mr. Fink as Receiver of the estate of Sewbux Sureka, deceased, against the two defendants carrying on business in co-partnership as merchants at Mandalay, Rangoon and Calcutta, and at the time the writ was issued, in Rangoon and Calcutta, under the name and style of Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,780-4-2 in respect of the rent of a house in Mandalay, and for recovery of a sum of Rs. 587-8, being the price of goods sold by the defendants for Sewbux Sureka and also for interest on these respective sums.

Neither of the defendants has appeared to give evidence, but in their statement of defence they rely upon the Statute of Limitation, and they also say that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on the ground which I shall presently refer to. The defendant Jowala Persaud, who is a son of the defendant Buldeo Dass, also alleges in his statement of defence that he is not and never was a partner with Buldeo Dass in any business in Calcutta.

The first question for determination is the question of jurisdiction. In the statement of claim there is no averment that the agreements, in respect of which the action is brought, or either of them, was executed in Calcutta, and there is nothing otherwise to show jurisdiction save it be in the title of the action in which the defendants are represented as carrying on business in Calcutta.

The learned Judge before whom the application for admission of the plaint was made was satisfied that there was jurisdiction, [721] and he allowed the writ to be issued under clause 12 of the Charter. Now, it has been proved that the contracts sued upon were as a matter of fact executed in Calcutta. I am asked to hold that, allowing proof of the signing of the agreements in Calcutta is a variance of the original cause of action, and that consequently it would be necessary to have the leave of the Court before I could make such an amendment or allow the action to proceed, and therefore I am asked to hold that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. If I did so hold, the result would be that I should have to dismiss the action, and the following day an application might be made to me for liberty to issue a writ in respect of the very same cause of action, the only difference being that in the statement of claim it would appear that the agreements were entered into in Calcutta. I am of opinion that it does not in any way cause a variance in the cause of action to admit evidence of the fact, and if necessary amend the plaint by adding a statement, that the contracts were entered into in Calcutta; and moreover I am of opinion that it is quite sufficient if, upon the hearing of the action, it is established to the satisfaction of the Court that the cause of action or part of the cause of action did arise in Calcutta. The authorities to which I have been referred do not seem to me to carry the defendant's contention far enough. They only establish that where there is an additional cause of action for the first time brought to light at the trial, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, inasmuch as it is a materially different cause of action from that originally sued on. This applies to the case of both defendants.

The next defence is a defence under the Statute of Limitation, and is common to both statements of defence. I deal with it treating both defendants as being partners. The rent claimed is rent which accrued from the 21st January 1894 to the 30th June 1898 under an agreement of the 7th December 1893. In that agreement, which is signed by the defendant Buldeo Dass, he states that Sowbux Sureka has a house in Mandalay in which he has been living, and he says as follows:—

"I shall vacate the same to you on or before the 15th daylight side in Pous. If I make delay (in doing so) I shall pay [722] you rent (at) Rs. 35, in letters thirty-five, per month for the upper and lower (storey). I shall pay, if I occupy (the same), otherwise not."

Now it appears that he did occupy the house and is occupying it up to the present time, and the rent sought to be recovered is the rent due up to the 30th June 1898. There was an agreement that the rates and taxes and repairs were to be defrayed by the landlord, and as a matter of fact an allowance has been made by the plaintiff in respect of all rates, taxes and repairs which have been proved to have been paid by the defendants, and the sum of Rs. 1,780-4-2 sued for represents the balance.

The plaintiff relies upon an acknowledgment as taking the case out of the Statute of Limitation, namely, a letter of the 8th September 1897 written by Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, as follows:—(reads letter of 8th September, ante p. 718).

The account referred to in this letter included the rent of the house at Mandalay.

In addition to this there is a letter of the 5th April 1896 from Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, as follows:—(reads letter of 5th April 1896, ante p. 717).

This is a clear admission by Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, whoever were the members of that firm, that they would pay this rent as per account, and the account rendered by both defendants sets forth accurately the rent claimed. There is also a letter from the defendant Buldeo Dass' solicitors, dated the 17th April 1897, in which they state to the effect that the defendant Buldeo Dass does not dispute the amount of the rent due, but they say that he claims to set-off certain items as against it which would reduce the amount due:—(reads letter of 17th April 1897, ante p. 717).

These letters constitute in my opinion a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take the case out of the statute.

Mr. Dunne referred to the old case of Prance v. Sympson, (1854) 1 Kay, 678, in which it was held that where there was an admission that there was an open account between parties an undertaking to pay was to be implied. I find that the case is commented upon in a [723] more recent case by Mr. Justice KAY, viz., in the case of Banner v. Berridge, (1881) L. R., 18 Ch. D., 254. Mr. Justice KAY refers to Prance v. Sympson, (1854) 1 Kay, 678, and at page 273 he says: "But be that as it may, Mitchell's Claim, (1871) L. R., 6 Ch., 822, certainly shews in the plainest possible manner that it was Lord Justice MELLISH's opinion that if there was an admission that an account must be taken, and that there was a right to have it taken, it would be consistent with principle, and with the previously decided cases, that you must infer from that a promise to pay. If I may venture to express my own opinion upon the subject, that seems to me to be quite reasonable. I suppose there is no doubt at all about the law that, if there be an unqualified admission of a debt, that acknowledgment implies a promise to pay; and surely it seems quite as reasonable that if there is an unqualified admission that there is a pending account between two parties which has to be examined, that is, pending in the sense that it is not a settled account binding upon them, but is an account which either party is at liberty to examine, surely it is reasonable to say that the admission that there was such a pending account is an admission from which you may infer a promise that when the account is settled the balance shall be paid." It seems to me that here the principle is carried a little further than in the case of Prance v. Sympson, (1854) 1 Kay, 678.

These letters satisfy me that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of this debt in respect of rent to take the case out of the statute.

Now I come to the question of the Statute of Limitation in regard to the sale of the goods. In this case the statement of claim inaccurately describes the cause of action as for the price of goods sold by the plaintiff to the defendants, but the parties understood perfectly well that it was in respect of the goods entrusted to the defendants for sale that the action was brought. The error in the claim is trivial, and may properly I think be rectified. The goods being entrusted to [724] the defendants for sale on behalf of Sewbux Sureka they became the agents of Sewbux Sureka for the sale of the goods and liable to account as such. That being so, the contention of Mr. Chowdhry that the Statute of Limitation would run the moment any particular item of the goods was sold is unsustainable. The law is very clearly laid down in the case of Babu Ram v. Ram Dayal, (1890) 1 L. R., 12 All., 541, and it seems to me that that case governs the present. In that case the plaintiffs were merchants trading at Agra and they consigned at different dates in 1881, 152 bags of jeera or cummin seeds to the defendants on commission sale. On the 8th December 1881, the defendants sent the plaintiffs an account of 119 out of the 152 bags. No account was ever rendered of the 33 bags which were sold in January 1882, and the plaintiffs made no inquiry and took no action regarding these bags until the 27th December 1886, when they demanded from the defendants the price realised on sale of the 33 bags, the demand being refused. The suit was instituted, and in the Munsif's Court, as also in the Court of the District Judge, who agreed with the Munsif, the action was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by the Statute of Limitation, the Court holding that on the sale of each bag of the cummin seed the statute began to run, and also on the ground that the plaintiffs were guilty of laches and delay in not prosecuting their claim until after the lapse of six years.

On appeal, the decision of the Lower Appellate Court was reversed by Mr. Justice BRODHURST and Mr. Justice TYRRELL, and at page 545 they say as follows: "It was argued with much ingenuity that under section 201 of the Contract Act the agency had terminated immediately on the sale of the goods by the business of the agency being completed. But section 218 of the same statute provides that an agent is bound to pay to his principal all sums received on his account. Clearly then the business does not terminate on receipt of the money by the agent, inasmuch as there is a subsequent obligation to account for the sums and to pay them. Moreover, there was no allegation that their business relation had terminated when the action was brought in the Court [725] below, and there was no justification in law or in fact for holding that the agency terminated as soon as the defendants sold the property. Applying, therefore, article 89 of the Limitation Act, the suit is not barred and the case must go back to the Court of First Instance." The headnote of the case is as follows: "Where an agent for the sale of goods receives the price thereof, the agency does not terminate, with reference to sections 201 and 218 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872), until he has paid the price to the principal; and a demand made by the principal for an account of the price is made 'during the continuance of the agency' within the meaning of Schedule II, article 89 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); and a suit by the principal to recover the price is, therefore, within time if brought within three years from the date of such demand. The agency does not terminate immediately on the sale of the goods. It does not terminate at the time when the plaintiff obtained knowledge of the defendants' breach of duty."

That decision seems to me to govern the present case; according to it the Statute of Limitation will not begin to run until the agency is determined. As a matter of fact the agency does not appear to be determined in this case as yet, because until the defendants have fully accounted the agency is still subsisting.

This being so it is unnecessary for me to refer to the letters which have been relied upon by the plaintiff as in any case taking the case out of the statute as amounting to acknowledgment in writing, signed by the defendants, or their agent, of the existence of this agency debt.

The only other point in the case is that raised by Mr. Sinha on behalf of his client, namely, that he never was a partner in the firm of Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud. The evidence is altogether one way. Jowala Persaud has not come forward to give evidence and to deny that he was a partner in this firm. The clearest evidence is given by Heera Lall that Jowala Persaud carried on business here in Calcutta, that he paid money for the firm, that he attended to the business and wrote letters in reference to the business, and I see no reason to doubt that that evidence is truthful. I do not think he took as prominent a part [726] in the Calcutta business as Buldeo Dass, but the evidence satisfies me that he did take a part as a partner, and held himself out to the public as being a partner with Buldeo Dass his father. But if there were any doubt as to the truth of the oral evidence which has been given, it seems to me that the letters which were written by Jowala Persaud himself would clear away such doubt. Amongst others there is a letter, exhibit IV, written by Jowala Persaud, in which towards the end he refers to certain rubies which were in the custody of the present plaintiff and he says as regards these particular rubies: "The rubies belonging to you and ourselves in partnership must be sold either at a high or a low price." Jowala Persaud treats himself in this letter as being a partner with his father Buldeo Dass, and refers to these rubies as being property belonging to himself and his father as partners. Again in the letter, exhibit K, which letter is signed by Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, and in the letter, exhibit M, which is written by Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud, there is an acknowledgment that there is an account outstanding between the plaintiff and defendants; in the letter, exhibit O, written by Buldeo Dass Jowala Persaud the defendants refer to this account as an account for which they were both liable.

Upon this evidence I can only come to one conclusion, and that is that Jowala Persaud was a partner in this firm, and on all grounds, therefore, I decide in favour of the plaintiff for the amount of principal proved to be due namely, in respect of rent Rs. 1,780-4-2 and in respect of the goods Rs. 587-8-0. The interest I disallow because the custom to pay interest which is alleged by the plaintiff has not been established. I may state as regards the rates and taxes which I was asked at all events to set off against this debt, that there is no evidence whatever that any rates and taxes have been paid by the defendants, except a sum of Rs. 86 and some annas which had been allowed, and is credited in the accounts of the plaintiff. If additional rates and taxes have been paid the defendants will have an opportunity of setting off the sum paid against the rent which has accrued since this action was instituted. I decree, therefore, the amounts I have mentioned with costs on scale No. 2.

Auction-purchasers.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 244, 266 and 318

—Questions for Court executing decree—Sale of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by a co-sharer landlord —Effect of such a sale—Bengal Tenancy Act

(VIII of 1885), sections 22, 65, 73 and 168.

A decree for rent obtained by some of certain co-sharer landlords and not by the whole body of them, is not a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

* Appeal from Order No. 447 of 1898, against the order of Babu Debendra Lal Shome, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 29th of September 1898, reversing the order of Babu Govinda Gopal Gupta, Munsif of Perozepur, dated the 27th of May 1898.

Prem Chand Nusker v. Mokshoda Debi, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 201, and Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Judu Ghose Alkushi, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 47, referred to.

An occupancy holding which is not transferable by custom, as also the interest of the judgment-debtor in the said holding, are not saleable in execution of such a decree.

Bhiram Ali Shaik Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Shaha, (1897) I.L.R., 24 Cal., 355, referred to.

A judgment-debtor, whose occupancy holding, which was not transferable by custom, had been sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained by some of the co-sharer landlords, objected to the application made by the auction-purchaser after the confirmation of the sale for delivery of possession of the said holding, on the ground that the sale was illegal.

[728] Held, that the confirmation of sale was no bar to the application that was made by the judgment-debtor to have it declared that in execution of such a decree the holding could not be sold, the question being one which related to the execution, discharge, and satisfaction of the decree.

Basti Ram v. Fattu, (1886) I. L. R., 8 All., 146, referred to.

THE facts of the case are shortly these: The judgment-debtors were two brothers, whose property, an occupancy holding, was sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained by some of the co-sharer landlords. The decree-holders purchased the holding. After the purchase one of the brothers applied to have the sale set aside under section 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but that application was rejected. The sale was in due course confirmed and a certificate of sale was granted to the auction-purchasers. An application was made by them under section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure for delivery of possession, whereupon the other brother put in a petition, objecting to the sale on the ground that there was no saleable interest in the property, and also opposing the application of the decree-holders under section 318 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Munsif, upon the evidence, held that the occupancy holding of the judgment-debtor was not transferable by custom and therefore not saleable, and rejected the decree-holder's application for delivery of possession.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the first Court, disallowed the objections of the judgment-debtors, and ordered the sale to be confirmed.

Against this decision the judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

Babu Chunder Kant Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Joy Gopal Ghosha for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows :—

This is an appeal which arises out of two applications, one made by the judgment-creditors, who are also the auction-pur-[729]chasers at a sale in execution of the decree under section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for an order for delivery of possession of the property purchased by them, and the other by the judgment-debtors under section 244 of the Code, objecting to the propriety of the sale, and asking, in effect, that the sale be set aside.

The decree in question was obtained on the 24th April 1894. It purports to be a decree for rent, and it was made in a suit instituted by certain fractional shareholders of a zemindari. Having obtained this decree in respect of their share of the rent they brought the property in the occupation of the defendants, the judgment-debtors, and in respect of which the rent was claimed, to sale on the 5th of June 1896, and purchased it themselves. The sale seems to have been confirmed on the 14th July 1896. They then applied for an order under section 318 of the Code for delivery of possession. Thereupon, as already indicated, the judgment-debtors came in, in the first place, opposing the application of the decree-holder under section 318, and secondly insisting that the sale itself was bad and should, therefore, be set aside.

It is unnecessary to refer to the earlier stages of the proceedings in the Courts below in connection with this matter. It is sufficient to say that the last order that was made by the Court of First Instance on the 27th May 1898 was to the effect that the sale being a sale of a kursa holding was not a good sale, for the raiyat had no disposing power in it, and accordingly set aside the sale, though the actual words used in the judgment were to the effect that the property was not saleable, but which, we understand, really amounted to an order setting aside the sale.

On appeal against this order by the purchasers, the Subordinate Judge has held, having regard to the provisions of sections 22, 65 and 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that, in execution of a decree for rent, the occupancy right possessed by the defendants, judgment-debtors, was capable of being sold, though the decree itself was obtained by certain co-sharers in the zemindari. He has, however, observed that the other co-sharers might refuse to recognise the purchase on the part of the decree-holders; but that so far as the judgment-debtors [730] are concerned, it is not open to them to contest the right of the decree-holders to bring to sale the holding in question. Accordingly he has ordered that the sale be confirmed, and that the objection of the judgment-debtors be disallowed.

It seems to us that the initial mistake that the learned Subordinate Judge has fallen into is this: He has regarded the decree in execution of which the property was sold as a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree no doubt was a decree for rent, but it was obtained by some of the co-sharers in the zemindari, and not by the whole body of zemindars; and therefore it could not be regarded as a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act (See in this connection section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the cases of Prem Chand Nuskur v. Monkshoda Deln, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 201, and Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jadu Ghose Alkushi, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 47.

If it was not a decree under the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is obvious that the proceedings in execution thereof could only be in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and not with those of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree may well be regarded as a decree for money, in execution of which the property or rather the right, title and interest of the raiyat defendant in it were sold, if such right, title and interest in the holding were saleable under the law. The question that here arises is whether, having regard to the provisions of section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the holding was saleable; whether the raiyat had a disposing power in it. If he had not, it is obvious that it could not be sold in execution of the decree obtained by certain fractional shareholders in the zemindari.

The Court of First Instance, in the judgment to which we have already adverted, held that the holding was not saleable by custom or otherwise, but the Subordinate Judge has rather assumed than found that it was saleable. It has, however, been contended before us by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the sale having already been confirmed the question is no longer an open question between the parties, but it seems to us that the confirmation [731] of sale is no bar to the application that has been made by the judgment-debtors to have it declared that in execution of the decree obtained by certain co-sharers in the zemindari the holding could not be sold; that he had no disposing power in it: and that therefore the sale has passed no interest whatever to the purchaser. The enquiry which should have to be made upon an application like this would be an enquiry under the provisions of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, uncontrolled by the provisions of sections 311 and 312, which deal with irregularities in the conduct of sale and the confirmation of sale where such irregularities are not made out. In the case of Basti Ram v. Fattu, (1886) I. L. R., 8 All., 146, decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, where a judgment-debtor, whose occupancy tenure had been sold in execution of a decree for money, brought a suit against the purchaser for recovery of the property, on the ground that the sale of the occupancy right in execution of the decree was illegal and void, being in contravention of the provision of the Rent Act which obtains in the North-West Provinces, it was held that the question involved in the suit was one of the nature referred to in section 244 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure as determinable only by order of the Court executing the decree, and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. In delivering the judgment of the Court Mr. Justice OLDFIELD made the following observations, which are pertinent to the present enquiry: "In the case before us, the judgment-debtor has sued the auction-purchaser to recover the property sold in execution of the decree, on the ground that the property, which is a tenant's right in land, is not by law saleable in execution of decree. This question is one which arose between the plaintiff judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, who is also the purchaser, and was determined against the former by the Court which executed the decree prior to the sale, and it is a question which must be considered to relate to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. It is in effect whether any property was liable to attachment and sale to satisfy the decree. Certain things are by section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure not liable to attachment and sale. The question regarding liability to attachment and sale arising out of the [732] provisions of section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure would clearly be questions within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question of the liability of the property, the subject of this suit, to attachment and sale, arises out of a provision in the Rent Act; but equally with questions under section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is one which falls within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure." We concur in these observations.

But then a difficulty arises in this wise: An order for sale was made, and in furtherance of that order, the property was sold, whatever may be the effect of that sale. If the judgment-debtors were parties to that order, or were aware of it, and did not appeal against it, they are now precluded from questioning the propriety of that order, and consequently of the sale that has taken place under that order. They say, however, in their application, to which we have already referred, that they were not aware of the proceedings in attachment of this property, nor of the proceedings in connection with the sale thereof, clearly indicating that they were not parties to the order for sale; and they say that this was owing to the fraud on the part of the decree-holders. The Courts below have not gone into this question. In the view we take of this case it would be necessary to enquire into the matter and determine whether the judgment-debtors were parties to the order for sale or were aware of it. If this question be answered in the affirmative, then we are clearly of opinion that it is not open to them now to question the propriety of the sale that has already taken place.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has, however, argued that, assuming that, by custom or usage, the holding in question is not saleable, yet the interest of the judgment-debtors, whatever that might be worth, is saleable, and that it is certainly saleable at the instance of an execution-creditor, the contention being that the sale would be a sale only of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the property in question. In the case of Bhiram Ali Shaik Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Shaha, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 355, decided by Mr. Justice BANERJEE and Mr. Justice RAMPINI, where a question somewhat similar to the one now before us was raised and discussed, the following [733] observations, occurring in the judgment, are pertinent to the question now before us. After referring to the provisions of some of the sections of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which have been quoted in the judgment of the Court of Appeal below in this case, those learned Judges said as follows: "That no doubt makes an occupancy holding saleable at the instance of the landlord in execution of a decree for rent; but though that is so, it does not follow from that that an occupancy holding is saleable at the instance of the occupancy raiyat or of any creditor of his other than his landlord seeking to obtain satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent" (the word "landlord" here used we take to refer to the whole body of landlords) "such an inference is, in our opinion, clearly negatived by the absence in chapter V of any provision relating to the transferability of occupancy holdings. Nor does section 73 warrant any contrary conclusion, seeing that there are cases in which occupancy *raiya*ts may transfer their holdings without the consent of the landlord; we mean cases in which such holdings are transferable by custom or local usage" and so on.

We think, having regard to the observations we have just referred to, that if the holding was not saleable according to custom or usage, it was not open to the creditors (for we cannot regard the decree-holders in this case in any other light than mere creditors) to bring to sale the interest of the occupancy raiyat in this holding, that it is open to the latter, having regard to the provisions of section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to raise the objection which they did raise in the Court below, namely, that the holding was not a saleable property.

We observe that the Court of Appeal below has come to no decision or finding upon the question, whether the holding was saleable either according to custom or usage. When this case is taken up again under the order of remand that we propose to make, this matter will also have to be gone into.

Upon these grounds we think that the order of the Court below should be set aside and the case sent back to that Court for retrial with reference to the foregoing observations. Costs will abide the result.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE AND MR. JUSTICE RAMPINI.

Mukhoda Dassi.....Defendant No. 1
versus

Gopal Chunder Dutta, (Plaintiff), and others.....Defendants Nos. 2 and 3.*

Sale in execution of decree—Mortgage decree, Sale in execution of—Purchase by a third party, while the decree and the order for sale are valid—Effect on sale of reversal of ex parte decree—Right of redemption of mortgagor.

A mortgagor is not entitled to redeem the property which was purchased by a third party at a sale held in execution of an ex parte mortgage decree and confirmed whilst the ex parte decree was still in force, though the said decree was set aside and subsequently reaffirmed after trial.

THE plaintiff brought a suit upon a registered mortgage bond executed by defendant No. 1 for a consideration of Rs. 100. This suit was heard and decided ex parte against defendant No. 1 alone, and in execution of that decree the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by a third party. The whole of the decretal amount not having been realized by the sale, the plaintiff followed some other property of defendant No. 1, whereupon she appeared and applied to set aside the ex parte decree, and the application was granted. On the case coming on for trial again she pleaded that defendant No. 2 was the rightful owner of the property in suit; that she was benamdar for defendant No. 2 by whom she was prevailed upon to execute the mortgage in suit; that no consideration-money was paid for the mortgage bond; and that therefore she was not liable for the debt due thereunder. It was also urged by her that the auction-purchaser defendant No. 3 was not a bona fide purchaser, but was a benamdar for the plaintiff.

The Munsif, upon the evidence, held that the defendant failed to substantiate her pleas, and passed a personal decree against defendant No. 1 for the sum remaining due after part satisfaction of the debt realized by the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property.

On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, a new point was taken by the defendant No. 1, that the ex parte mortgage decree having [735] been set aside, the sale which took place in accordance with that decree could not stand, and that an opportunity should be given to her to redeem the mortgaged property by paying to the auction-purchaser the amount of the purchase money. The Subordinate Judge decided against it and dismissed the appeal.

Against this decision the defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Jagat Chunder Banerjee for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows:—

Banerjee, J.—The question raised in this appeal, which arises out of a suit to enforce a mortgage, is, whether upon an ex parte decree made in a mortgage suit being set aside, and subsequently reaffirmed after trial, the mortgagor becomes entitled to redeem the property, not only as against the mortgagee, but also as against a third party who purchased it at a sale held in execution of the ex parte mortgage decree and confirmed whilst the ex parte decree was still in force.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1751 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Kumar Bose, Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 17th of August 1897, confirming the decree of Babu Jadupati Banerjee, Munsif of Alipur in that district, dated the 4th of March 1897.

The Court of Appeal below has answered this question in the negative, relying upon the cases of Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 18 : L. R., 13 I. A., 106 ; and Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Ashgar Ali Khan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 166 : L. R., 15 I. A., 12.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the defendant, mortgagor, that the decree of the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in law, and that the cases relied upon in the judgment of the Court below, which are cases of sale in execution of money-decrees, are distinguishable from a case like the present, in which the auction-purchaser, whose rights have been held to remain unaffected by the subsequent reversal of the decree in execution of which he made his purchase, was an auction-purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree.

We are of opinion that so far as the present question is concerned, there is no real distinction between an auction-purchaser [736] at a sale in execution of a money decree and an auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The way in which the learned Vakil for the appellant sought to distinguish this case from the cases relied upon by the Lower Appellate Court was this : He contended in the first place that the reason of the rule in the cases of Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 18 : L. R., 13 I. A. 106, and Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Ashgar Ali Khan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 166 : L. R., 15 I. A., 12, was the same as the reason for the decision in the case of Jan Ali v. Jan Ali Choudry, (1868) 1 B. L. R., A. C., 56 : 10 W. R., 154, which is stated in the following passage in the judgment in the last mentioned case : " If the sale of the chattel should be avoided the vendee would lose his chattel and his money too and thereupon a great inconvenience would follow ; " and he argued that that was a reason which could not hold good in the case of a sale in execution of a decree in a mortgage suit, as the mortgagor being required to redeem the property the mortgage money will always go to recoup the auction-purchaser. He also argued that in the case of a sale in execution of an ordinary money decree, the reversal of the decree does not amount to a reversal of the order for sale, under which the sale in execution was held, but that the reversal of a decree in a mortgage suit means, and, in terms carries with it, a reversal of the order for sale which is part and parcel of the decree itself. In the second place it was argued that as a purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree acquires all the interest that the mortgagor and mortgagee can jointly transfer, and that as, if the decree-holder had been the auction-purchaser, the reversal of the decree would result in the reversal of the sale, the purchase at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree being, in part at least, the representative in interest of the mortgagee decree-holder, the purchase by him would become inoperative upon the reversal of the mortgage decree.

We are of opinion that these contentions ought not to prevail. With reference to the first contention, we would observe that the real reason for upholding a sale, notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree, in execution of [737] which it takes place, is stated in the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 18 : L. R., 13 I. A., 106, in these words : " To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchases under executions. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he has as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues." In other words, a sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld, notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree, because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale, and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales. So again in the case of Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Ashgar Ali Khan, (1887) I. L. R., 10 All., 166 : L. R., 15 I. A., 12, their Lordships of the Privy Council observe : " It appears to their Lordships that there is a great distinction between the decree-holders who came in and purchased under their own decree, which was afterwards reversed on appeal, and the bona fide purchasers who came in and bought at the sale in execution of the decree to which they were no parties, and at a time when that decree was a valid decree and when the order for the sale was a valid order."

There is no real distinction between the two cases, namely, the case in which a sale takes place in execution of a money decree and that in which a sale takes place in execution of a decree on a mortgage, by reason of the order for sale in the one case being distinct from the decree and in the other case being part of the decree itself. In both cases, the order is a valid order as long as the decree remains unreversed, and in both cases it would lose its force upon reversal of the decree. Nor is there any real distinction between the two classes of cases by reason of the money paid by the auction-purchaser being irrecoverable in the one case and recoverable in the other, as will appear from the following considerations.

[738] The property sold in execution of a mortgage decree would not necessarily sell for exactly the amount of the mortgage debt. In many cases it may sell for more, and the difference between the amount of the mortgage debt, which will go to the decree-holder, and the purchase-money, might, before the decree is reversed, be seized and taken out of Court by any creditor of the mortgagor, in which case the mere fact of any subsequent decree ordering redemption of the mortgaged property may not be sufficient to reimburse the auction-purchaser.

Then, again it may be that the decree made after the reversal of the decree, in execution of which the sale took place, may be for a very much smaller amount, in which case also an order for the redemption of the mortgaged property would not reimburse the auction-purchaser. It was argued that in such cases the Court might put the judgment-debtor to terms. So might the Court do in any case in which a sale in execution of a money decree takes place ; but that has not been considered a sufficient reason for holding that, after the reversal of the decree, the sale ought to be held liable to reversal when a third party was the auction-purchaser.

Then as to the second branch of the appellant's contention, although it is true that the purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree may avail himself of the rights of the mortgagee, for certain purposes such as to meet the claim of any subsequent mortgagee, or other person claiming any right to the property created after the date of the mortgage, still it could not be said that he was for all purposes a representative of the mortgagee decree-holder ; and in so far as the rights claimed by the auction-purchaser are derivable from the mortgagee decree-holder, those rights will be available or not, according as the mortgage decree stands or not. In the present case no such question arises.

We should add that though the ex parte decree was set aside it has subsequently been practically reaffirmed ; in other words, according to the facts found, it appears that the same decree that was originally made would have been made if the suit had been a contested suit from the beginning. We should also add that the [739] defendant No. 1 who is the sole appellant before us, in her defence disclaimed all interest in the property sold.

We are unable on the grounds suggested in the argument for the appellant to distinguish this case from the class of cases in which the rule has been laid down that where a third party purchases in execution of a decree whilst that decree is in force, the subsequent reversal of that decree cannot affect his rights. The fact that the decree in execution of which a sale took place was an ex parte decree subsequently set aside, might perhaps under certain circumstances form a ground for distinguishing the case of such a sale from the cases cited. But it is unnecessary to consider this point, as it was not raised in this Court or in the Courts below, and as, moreover, the appellant before us in her written statement in the first Court disclaimed all interest in the property sold.

The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Assanullah Bahadur.....Plaintiff

versus

Mohini Mohan Das and others.....Defendants.*

Landlord and Tenant—Accretion to parent estate, Assessment of rent in respect of—Reg. XI of 1825, section 4, cl. (1)—Act X of 1855, section 1—Reg.

VII of 1852—Act IX of 1847—Act XXXI of 1858—Bengal

Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 52.

In a suit brought by the talukdar of a certain mouzah against the dur-talukdar for a declaration that he was entitled to get rent at a certain rate annually, also for arrears of rent at that rate, and in the alternative for compensation for use and occupation of the disputed land which was an accretion to the said mouzah, and in respect of which a settlement was made with him by Government treating it as a separate estate, the defence (inter alia) was that the suit was not maintainable unless a rent was assessed in the first instance, and that no arrears of rent could be claimed as there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2373 of 1897, against the decree of Amrita Lal Pal, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 17th of September 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Bepin Behary De, Munsif of Kaligunge, dated the 4th of January 1897.

[740] Held, the landlord could not treat it as a separate tenure altogether; that the increment was to be regarded as part of the parent estate, and treating it as part and parcel of the parent estate he was entitled to get assessment of rent on the disputed land; but he was not entitled in the suit to back rent or compensation for use and occupation.

THE plaintiff as lessee under Government, of a certain dearah mehal 10,842 of the Dacca Collectorate, from April 1891 to March 1901, sought to recover arrears of rent from 1299 B. S. to 1302 B. S., at a certain rate specified in the plaint, by adjudication of his right to obtain the same, or at any other rate which, on enquiry, might be assessed by the Court for the use and occupation of the said mehal during the period in suit. The allegation in the plaint was that he was the proprietor of chur Rampore bearing Towji No. 5035 of the Tipperah Collectorate as well as lessee under Government of the aforesaid dearah mehal which was contiguous to it: that the defendants were the dur-talukdars under him of asli chur Rampore; that he attempted to collect rent from rai-yats who held land in the said dearah mehal, but they refused to pay rent to him on the ground that they had paid their rent to the defendants for such land; that the defendants were in wrongful possession of the said dearah mehal, by collecting rent from the rai-yats; that the defendants who were only dur-talukdars of asli chur Rampore had no right to remain in possession of the dearah mehal by collecting rent from its rai-yats without payment of a separate jama in respect of it for their use and occupation; that on measurement of the dearah mehal by his own men the sum of Rs. 44-5 as. 11 pie. was assessed to be its annual jamabandi, and that he was entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 39-14as. after having deducted Rs. 4-10as. as collection expenses, from the defendants as provided for in their dur-talukdar pottah; that the defendants, notwithstanding repeated demands, did not pay the said jama together with cesses and interest, and therefore the present action was brought.

The defence mainly was that the suit was not maintainable unless a rental was assessed in the first instance, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim arrears of rent as there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The Munsif dismissed the suit, holding that inasmuch as there was no [741] relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties the action for recovery of arrears of rent would not lie.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Srinath Das, and Babu Bussunt Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Sarada Churn Mitter and Babu Jnanendro Mohan Das, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Banerjee, JJ.) was as follows:—

The plaintiff is the talukdar of mouzah chur Rampore, the defendant is the dur-talukdar of that property. Certain lands accreted to chur Rampore, and the Government, having taken proceedings, as we understand it, under Act XXXI of 1858 and Act IX of 1847, settled the accretion, treating it as a separate estate, with the talukdar, the plaintiff in the present case. Subsequently, this suit was brought claiming certain reliefs as against the defendant, the dur-talukdar, in respect of the said increment.

There are two or three contradictory statements in the plaint as to the position of the defendant, but ultimately it treats him as one entitled to hold the increment as tenant, and asks that it be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to obtain annually Rs. 39-14-11 as rent from the defendant in respect of such lands, and that a decree for rent in respect of the years from 1299 to 1302 at the said rate be awarded. And as an alternative relief it asks for compensation for the use and occupation of the lands in question by the defendant.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit, being of opinion, as we understand their judgments, that neither under the Bengal Tenancy Act, nor under the provisions of Regulation XI of 1825, is the plaintiff entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by him in his plaint.

Referring to Regulation XI of 1825, section 4, clause 1, we find it enacted that when land is gained by gradual accretion, [742] whether from the recess of the river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed, whether such land or estate be held immediately from Government by a zamindar or other superior landholder, or is a subordinate tenure held by any description of under-tenant whatsoever. Provided that the increment of land thus obtained shall not entitle the person in possession of the estate or tenure to which the land may be annexed to a right of property or "permanent interest therein beyond that possessed by him in the estate or tenure to which the land may be annexed," and so on. That is to say, the land thus formed by the gradual recess of a river or of the sea shall be considered an increment to the parent estate or tenure, or, in other words, it shall be regarded as a part of that estate or tenure the land having been gained by gradual accession.

Referring in the next place, to Act XXXI of 1858, under which the Government proceeded in settling the accretion with the landlord, we find that, though under section 1 of that Act, it is competent to the Government to settle the increment as a separate estate, yet under section 2 it is provided that: "Nothing contained in the preceding section shall affect the rights of under-tenants in alluvial land under the provisions of clause 1, section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825. It shall be the duty of all officers making settlement of such land, whether the land be settled separately or incorporated with the original estate, to ascertain and record all such rights according to the rules prescribed in Regulation VII of 1822, and determine whether any and what additional rent shall be payable in respect of the alluvial land by the person or persons entitled to any under-tenure in the original sum," and so on; that is to say, whatever may be the mode adopted by Government in settling the increment, it would not affect the rights of any under-tenant in the same property—rights which he may possess under the provisions of the Regulation just cited.

Now what are the rights conferred by clause 1, section 4, of Regulation XI of 1825 upon an under-tenant to whose property land may accrete by gradual accession? As we understand the [743] matter, the tenure-holder is entitled to possess the increment in the same right and upon the same footing as that upon which he holds the parent estate, see the cases of Gobind Monee Debia v. Dino Bundhoo Shaha, (1871) 15 W. R., 87, and Golam Ali v. Kali Krishna Thakur, (1881) I. L. R., 7 Cal., 479: 8 C.L.R., 517. What may be the limit of the demand which the landlord is entitled to make as against the tenure-holder, is not clearly prescribed by the section.

In this connection we may refer to section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but before doing so it would be just as well to notice the last portion of clause 1, section 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, as it existed before it was repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. That portion ran as follows: "Nor if annexed to a subordinate tenure held under a superior landholder shall the under-tenant, whether a khudkasht raiyat holding a mourasi istemrari tenure at a fixed rate of rent per bigha or any other description of under-tenant liable by his engagement or by established usage to an increase of rent for the land annexed to his tenure by alluvion, be considered exempt from the payment of any increase of rent to which he may be justly liable." The substance of this portion seems to have been embodied with modifications in section 52 of the Tenancy Act. That section runs thus: "Every tenant shall be liable to pay additional rent for all land proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which the rent has been previously paid by him, unless it is proved that the excess is due to the addition to the tenure or holding of land which, having previously belonged to the tenure or holding, was lost by diluvion or otherwise, without any reduction of the rent being made." Sub-clause (b) speaks of abatement of rent which we need not consider. Then in clause 2 it is provided that in "determining the area for which rent has been previously paid, the Court shall, if so required by any party to the suit, have regard to the origin and conditions of the tenancy, for instance, whether the rent was a consolidated rent," and so on, and then clause 3 provides: "In determining the amount added to the rent the Court shall have regard to the rates payable by tenants [744] of the same class for lands of a similar description and similar advantages in the vicinity, and in the case of a tenure-holder to the profits to which he is entitled in respect of the rent of his tenure, and shall not, in any case, fix any rent which under the circumstances is unfair and inequitable," and so forth.

Now reading this section with Regulation XI of 1825 and Act XXXI of 1858, to which we have already referred, it seems to us that, if the increment is to be regarded, as we think it ought to be regarded, as part of the parent tenure, the landlord cannot treat the increment as a separate tenure altogether, but that treating it as a part and parcel of the parent tenure he can claim such relief as under the law he is entitled to obtain as against the tenure-holder.

Having made these observations which we think arise upon a consideration of the law upon the subject, let us see what are the reliefs to which the plaintiff in the present case is entitled. It seems to us in the first place that the plaintiff is not entitled to any back rent, and that for two reasons: first, there has been no contract between the parties as regards the separate payment of any rent in respect of the additional lands; and, secondly because under the law the plaintiff cannot recover the rent of such additional lands separately from the original part of the tenure. It has, however, been contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant, and at one time we were impressed by this contention, that, though the plaintiff may not be allowed to recover back rent in the present suit, he may yet be allowed to obtain compensation for the use and occupation of the land by the defendant. But it seems to us that if we were to give effect to this contention, we should have to hold that the landlord is entitled to treat the additional lands as a separate property, for which he is entitled to receive from the defendant compensation for the use and occupation. We think that the landlord is not entitled to any such relief in the present case. Indeed, there can be no claim for compensation for use and occupation, seeing that the law makes the defendant a tenant of the accreted land from the time of accretion, and the claim, if any, must be one for rent. But then the plaintiff asks [745] for the assessment of rent upon the land in question. We are of opinion that there is no reason why he should not be entitled to this relief. The lands have formed as an accretion to the defendant's tenure; rent must be assessed upon such lands, and the plaintiff cannot recover any rent from the defendants until it be in the first instance determined what is the additional rent he ought to pay for it, though, no doubt, if he had taken proceedings under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the purpose of recovering rent in respect of the entire tenure, including the lands which have formed by way of accretion to the defendant's tenure, relief might have been given to him after such investigation as the provisions of that section require. But the fact that he has not taken that course does not, we think, disentitle him to a declaration how much additional rent should be paid for the land in question. In determining what is the additional rent which ought to be assessed upon the land the Court will have to be guided by the provisions of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, indicating the principle upon which such additional rent may be claimed for any excess area in the occupation of a tenure-holder or a raiyat. We think it right and proper to remand the case to the Court of First Instance with the view of determining what is the additional rent which the plaintiff, the landlord, is entitled to obtain from the defendant, the tenure-holder, on account of the lands which have accreted to his tenure. It will be open to both parties to adduce such further evidence as they may be advised to adduce. As regards the costs we are of opinion, having regard to the conflicting statements made in the plaint as to the position of the defendant, and to the somewhat conflicting reliefs which the plaintiff asked for, that the ends of justice require that the respondent should have all the costs of this litigation up to the present stage. The costs which may be incurred in future will abide the result of the trial we now direct.

We desire to add that, though this order of remand is expressly with the view of trying the question of assessment of rent upon the additional area in the occupation of the defendant, yet it would not debar the Courts below from trying any other questions which legitimately arise between the parties in the case.

Revision—High Court's power of revision—Presidency Magistrate, Proceedings of—Order for further inquiry—Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1896), sections 423, 435 and 439—Letters Patent, High Court, 1865, clause 28.

The High Court has under sections 435 and 439, read with section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the power to revise the proceedings of a Presidency Magistrate and order a further inquiry to be made. It has the same power under clause 28 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

* Criminal Revision No. 240 of 1899, made against the order passed by Syed Ameer Hossein, Esq., Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 3rd of March 1899.

THE complainants filed a complaint against the accused before the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta for having committed offences under sections 417 and 418 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence on behalf of the prosecution, was of opinion that no prima facie case had been made out against the accused and ordered his discharge under section 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The complainants moved the High Court and a rule was granted for the purpose of considering whether the High Court had not power to order a further inquiry into the matter, and also for determining whether the order of discharge made by the Presidency Magistrate should not be set aside.

Mr. Garth, Mr. Zorab, and Babu Tarak Chunder Chakrabati for the Petitioners.

The judgment of the High Court (Ghose and Wilkins, JJ.) was as follows:—

This rule was issued upon the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause "why his order discharging the accused should not be set aside in order that it may be considered whether this Court has not, under section 15 of the Charter Act, power to [747] order a further inquiry or otherwise deal with the matter as it may appear proper." As we understand this rule, it was granted for a double purpose, first, for the purpose of determining whether the order of discharge made by the Presidency Magistrate should not be set aside, and secondly, that it may be considered at the same time whether this Court has not, under section 15 of the Charter Act, power to order a further inquiry into the matter. So far as the first mentioned purpose is concerned, it seems to us, upon examining the judgment of the Presidency Magistrate, and after hearing Mr. Garth in support of the rule, nobody appearing on the other side to show cause, that the Presidency Magistrate has not dealt with the matter before him in the way in which he should have dealt with it. He seems to have thrown out, in the course of his judgment, that he has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint, because the offence, if any, was committed at Shalimar within the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate of Howrah. But it appears to us that the monies having been received from the complainants' firm at Calcutta, and the false accounts, as stated by the complainants, having been rendered in Calcutta, the Presidency Magistrate had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint in question. The Magistrate has in this connection referred to the evidence of one Mr. Morse as showing that the accounts used to be sent to Kidderpore and the money drawn from that place. But, as we understand it, the transactions out of which this particular complaint has arisen are transactions which took place subsequent to the time of Mr. Morse and, therefore, are not affected by the evidence that was given by that gentleman.

Then, as regards the grounds upon which the Magistrate holds that no prima facie case has been made out, we are of opinion that that officer has misguided himself. He seems to have been under the impression as if the main (if not the whole) question before him was whether the accused was justified in paying the coolies at higher rates than the rates at which the complainant says they ought to have paid. But, according to the case for the prosecution, as laid before us, there were no payments made by the accused at all to many of the coolies; and it is further alleged that the accused, having made certain false [748] entries in the shape of payments made to the coolies, and having submitted his accounts at the head office in Calcutta, drew further sums of money from that office and, in that way, cheated the complainants' firm of a considerable sum of money. It seems to us that this part of the case has not been, as it ought to have been, gone into by the Presidency Magistrate; and that this ought to be now done. It follows, therefore, that the order of discharge is erroneous, and should be set aside.

As regards the other purpose for which the rule was granted, it seems to us that, under sections 435 and 439 read with section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, this Court has the power to revise the proceedings of the Presidency Magistrate, he being subject to the Appellate jurisdiction of this Court. But beyond this, on referring to clause 28 of the Letters Patent bearing date the 28th December 1865, it appears that this Court has the power to revise the proceedings of the Criminal Courts subject to its Appellate jurisdiction. The Courts of the Presidency Magistrates are subject to our Appellate jurisdiction; and it follows, therefore, that this Court has the authority to revise the proceedings now before us under the said clause of the Letters Patent, not section 15 of the Charter Act, mentioned in the rule, which was obviously a mistake for clause 28 of the Letters Patent. With these remarks the rule is made absolute, the order of the Presidency Magistrate being set aside, and a further inquiry being directed into the complaint instituted. We further direct that the trial of this case should be held by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Let the records be sent down to his Court.

Warrant of arrest—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1895), section 80—Notification of substance of warrant—Penal Code (XLV of 1860), section 225 B.

[749] An arrest by a police officer without notifying the substance of the warrant to the person against whom the warrant is issued as required by section 80 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not a lawful arrest, and resistance to such an arrest is not an offence under section 225 B of the Penal Code.

A WARRANT of arrest was issued for the purpose of obtaining the attendance of a person who was a party to certain proceedings under section 110 of the * Criminal Revision No. 272 of 1899, made against the order passed by B. C. Mitter, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Faridpur, dated the 9th February 1899.

Criminal Procedure Code. At the time of making the arrest the police officer did not notify the substance of the warrant, as required by section 80 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but merely showed the warrant, which he held in his hand along with other warrants, to the person to be arrested. The petitioners resisted the execution of the warrant, and were convicted of an offence under section 225 B of the Penal Code by the Deputy Magistrate of Faridpur. The District Judge on appeal upheld the conviction. The petitioners moved the High Court, and obtained a rule contending that the conviction under section 225 B could not stand, inasmuch as the substance of the warrant under which the arrest was made was not notified to the person arrested as required by section 80 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. P. L. Roy, Mr. C. R. Das, and Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee appeared on behalf of the Petitioners.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :

The petitioners were convicted by the Appellate Court under section 225 B of the Indian Penal Code.

On this rule, we have to consider whether the conviction is a valid conviction because the arrest was not lawfully made within the terms of section 80 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, inasmuch as when the police officer, who was resisted, made the arrest, he did not notify the substance of the warrant which he held to the person to be arrested. As an authority for this we have been referred to the case of Abdul Gafur v. Queen-Empress, (1896) I. L. R., 23 Cal., 896, in which it was held that an arrest so made is not a lawful arrest, resistance to which is an offence under the Penal Code. The arrest here made was not for an offence for which a police [750] officer was competent to make the arrest without a warrant. It was for the purpose of obtaining the attendance of a person who was a party to certain proceedings instituted under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure; that is, who had been required to show cause why he should not give security for good behaviour. It has, however, been said that the person to be arrested, and the petitioners were aware that the police constable had a warrant of arrest, and that, although he did not notify its substance, he showed it on the occasion of the arrest. We are not satisfied that this in itself would be sufficient to make an arrest valid without any notification of the substance of the warrant, or an opportunity given to the person to be arrested by showing him the warrant so that he might read it. In this case the warrant was held in the hand of the police officer along with six other warrants, and thus shown to him, and it was impossible for any one to know what the substance of the warrant may have been, or indeed for him to satisfy himself that the police constable really held a warrant for the arrest he was making. The conviction and sentence must, therefore, be set aside and the rule made absolute.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th March, 1899.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE AMEER ALI.

Chhatrapat Singh.....Judgment-debtor

versus

Gopi Chand Bothra and others.....Decree-holders.*

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 148, cl. (h)—Assignee of decree—Trustees applying for execution for benefit of assignor's heirs.

The word "assignee" as used in section 148, clause (h), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, does not include trustees who execute decrees under an assignment which is not for their own benefit but for the benefit of the heir of the assignor.

RAI DHUNPUT SINGH obtained two decrees against the appellant for arrears of rent on the 10th of July 1896, in respect of two [751] putni mehals situated in Pergunnah Haveli. On the 27th of June 1893 he had sold his right and interest in the said Pergunnah to one Bhugwanbuti Chowdrani. The above rent decrees were on account of rents due from the appellant for a period prior to the date of the sale.

On the 19th of July 1896 Rai Dhanput Singh executed a deed of trust in favour of the respondents, by which he conveyed to them various properties, both moveable and immoveable, upon certain trusts; the above two decrees against the appellant were included in the said deed. The following is a copy of the deed without the schedule of properties:—

"I, Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadur, son of the late Babu Protap Singh, by caste Oswal, by occupation zemindar, etc., inhabitant of Azimgunge, division Asanpura, Sub-Registry Baluchur, district Moorshedabad, execute this trust deed, i.e., (nyaspatra) in respect of immoveable and moveable properties as follows:—

In the month of February of the year 1893, owing to the unjust proceedings of one Kastur Chand, Rai Bahadoor, I being declared an insolvent by an order of the Hon'ble High Court at Calcutta in its Original Insolvent Jurisdiction, dated the 16th February 1893, was involved in considerable debts. By sale and mortgage, I have lately paid off a large amount of debt, but still I have debts to a large amount. It is necessary for me to make a settlement for the purpose of liquidating the said debts in due (time). Owing to physical and mental uneasiness, I am personally unable to do business any more in a satisfactory way, and it is the wish of most of my creditors that I should make over my properties to the hands of trustees, for the purpose of liquidating my debts. For all these reasons, I make over all my immoveable and moveable properties, that is to say, all kinds of property of which I am now the owner, by appointing as trustees Gopi Chand Bothra, son of the late Fakir Chand Bothra, by caste Oswal, and Kirat Chand Srimal, son of the late Mogni Ram Srimal, inhabitants of Azimgunge, occupation service, and Surja Coomar Adhikari, son of the late Bhagwan Chunder Adhikari, by caste Brahmin, occupation service, now residing at Baluchur. The trustees, on being entitled to and coming into possession of all my properties as proprietors (maliks) and causing their names to be registered, etc., in the Collectorate, etc., according to law, shall pay my debts from the profits of the properties or by mortgage and sale of all or some of them; and as to those sums which are due to me, they on becoming representatives in my place, shall realise amicably or by aid of Court, and shall hand over the same also to the extent practicable for the liquidation of my debts, and shall in the first place pay the expenses that may be incurred on account of doing all these acts, as well as on account [752] of litigation. They shall discharge debts by even selling those properties which I have mortgaged. As to those properties which may be left as surplus, or which it may be unnecessary to sell, they are to give back the same to me or to my heir Srimon Maharaj Bahadoor. I give below a list of the properties, of which I am now the owner, but if owing to mistake any property be omitted from the list, it shall also be included in this trust deed. Prior to the liquidation of my debts, neither I nor my heir shall be able to interfere with the acts of the trustees, and unless they commit an act of waste, neither I nor any of my representatives shall be able to revoke the said trust; the trust shall operate in an irrevocable way. For preparing a list of my debts, the trustees shall ascertain (the same) by inspection of my khata papers, and shall not acknowledge any debts not covered by rokas, hatchittas or hundis, bearing the signature of me or of my munib gomashlas or decrees. As to any arrangements which the trustees may make, with respect to the preservation and supervision of the properties, neither I nor anybody else shall make objections to the same, and they may, according to their wish, dismiss the old amlas and appoint new amlas. As to the sale of the properties, they may sell properties to any one whom they like at the value which they may think to be proper, and any kobala signed by them and which is registered shall have the same force as one bearing my signature or the signature of my representatives. If it be necessary to borrow money by mortgaging properties, the trustees shall do the same, but the interest on such mortgage shall not exceed Rs. 9 (nine) per cent. per annum. As to the realization of the moneys remaining due, the trustees have become the representatives in my place and they shall act by using their respective names as trustees. This trust deed shall remain in force until my debts are satisfied, that is to say, not only during my lifetime, (but) also after my death, and my heirs and representatives shall be bound by the terms of this trust deed. If all or any of the trustees be willing to give up the trust, they must appoint another trustee and he shall act according to the trust. But if any of the trustees should resign without appointing another trustee, or if he should die before the appointment of another trustee, then any person whom I, during my lifetime or after my death, my widow Rani Mina Kumari or my youngest son Maharaj Bahadoor, if he had (?) of age, may appoint as trustee, shall be the trustee. This trust deed shall be treated as a deed of conveyance of property. As to those landed properties, jotes and junmas which are made over to the hands of the trustees under this trust deed, they shall be the persons fully entitled to realize the arrears and outstandings, etc., and all kinds of dues relating to them. To this effect I execute this trust deed in a sound state of mind.

* Appeal from Order No. 351 of 1897, against the order of Babu Chakradhar Prosad, Subordinate Judge of Purneah, dated the 2nd of September 1897.

Dated the 5th Srabun 1303, corresponding with the 19th July 1896."

Dhunput Singh died in the month of September 1896, and on the 3rd of December following the trustees, respondents, applied [753] for execution of the said two decrees. The appellant, judgment-debtor, raised several objections, contending amongst other things, that, under section 148, clause (h) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the application for execution of the decree by the trustees was not maintainable inasmuch as the landlord's interest in the land had not become vested in them.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the objections and ordered the execution of the decrees.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose, and Babu Joy Gopal Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Pramatha Nath Sen, for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACPHERSON and AMEER ALI, JJ.).

Ameer Ali, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of two decrees obtained by one Rai Dhunput Singh Bahadoor against the present appellant in respect of certain putni rents. The application is dated the 3rd of December 1896.

It appears that on the 27th of June 1893 Rai Dhunput Singh, who was the owner of Pergunnah Haveli within which the putni mehals are situated, sold his right and interest to one Mussammat Bhagwanbuti Chowdrani. On the 10th of July 1896, he obtained the decrees in question for the rents due from the appellant for a period prior to the sale; and on the 19th July 1896 he executed a trust deed in favour of one Gopi Chand Bothra and others by which he conveyed to them various properties, both moveable and immoveable, upon certain trusts. The two decrees against the appellant were included in the said trust deed.

Dhunput Singh died in September 1896; and on the 3rd of December following, as already stated, the trustees applied for execution.

On the 3rd March 1897 a petition of objection was put in on behalf of the judgment-debtor in which he contended, first, that the trustees' power came to an end on the death of Dhunput Singh, and that, therefore, they had no authority to apply for [754] execution; secondly, that the decree-holder's adult sons Gunpat Singh and Nurput Singh, together with his minor son, Maharaj Bahadoor Singh, were his legal representatives; thirdly, that, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor's right in the properties had already been sold, and purchased by one Bibi Jarno Kumari Saheba, the respondents were not entitled to proceed against the tenure; and fourthly, that under section 148, clause (h), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the application for execution of the decree on behalf of the trustees was not maintainable.

Upon these objections the Subordinate Judge laid down the following points as arising for determination:—

"1st.—Is the application for execution of the decree on behalf of the trustees maintainable?"

"2nd.—If maintainable, whether the decree under execution can be treated as a first charge on the properties sought to be sold, and whether they should be considered rent decrees?"

"3rd.—Whether Maharaj Bahadoor alone is legal heir and representative of the deceased Babu Rai Dhunput Singh, the original decree-holder?"

"4th.—Whether a subsequent application by Maharaj Bahadoor for being added as an applicant, remedies the defect which the judgment-debtor seeks to press?"

It is to be noticed that on the 7th of August 1897 Maharaj Bahadoor, the infant son of Dhunput, joined in the application for execution.

The Subordinate Judge holds that the power of the trustees did not expire with the death of Dhunput, and that the trustees are entitled to execute the decrees; he holds further that inasmuch as the rents for which the decrees were obtained accrued when the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between Dhunput and the judgment-debtor, the lien still continues and that the trustees are entitled to enforce the same. He also holds that any technical defect in the application arising from the non-joinder of the personal representatives of Dhunput was cured by the fact of Maharaj joining in the application. And the learned Judge accordingly overruled the judgment-debtor's [755] objections, directed execution of the decrees at the instance of the trustees and Maharaj Bahadoor, and declared that the putni tenures were liable to be sold in execution of those decrees.

The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court. His case has been argued with considerable ingenuity, and the same objections which were taken in the Court below have been pressed before us.

I think, however, that those objections are not tenable.

First, with regard to the authority of the trustees the contention is that they were merely agents of Dhunput Singh, and that consequently upon the death of Dhunput the agency came to an end, and the trustees became practically functi officio, all authority vesting in them by virtue of the trust deed falling to the ground. In my opinion this argument proceeds upon a somewhat fallacious reasoning. The passages cited from Lewin on Trusts must be read with the documents on which the cases referred to in the text-book proceeded. Each case must, it seems to me, be dealt with upon its own special facts; and we have, accordingly, to see what the document in the present case directs and provides. In other words, we must see whether, as is contended by the appellant's pleader, it only gives to the trustees an authority to do certain acts, constituting them merely as his agents for certain purposes, or whether, as the learned Subordinate Judge finds, it conveys a legal estate to the trustees and virtually amounts to an actual transfer in their favour, subject to certain trusts. For this purpose it is necessary to refer to the terms of the trust deed. It begins by reciting that the executant Dhunput was largely involved in debt, and that it was necessary for him to make a settlement for the purpose of liquidating the same and accordingly, as he himself was "unable to do business any more in a satisfactory way," and it was the wish of most of his creditors that he should make over all his properties, moveable and immoveable, "that is to say, all kinds of properties of which he was then the owner," to certain trustees for the purpose of liquidating his debts, he, accordingly, made over all his immoveable and moveable properties to the persons therein named. The deed then goes on to provide that the trustees were to hold possession [756] of all his properties as proprietors, to get their names registered in the Collectorate, and pay the debts from the profits of the properties or by mortgage and sale of all or some of them. After the debts were discharged they were to give back the surplus or whatever remained to Dhunput or his heir, Maharaj Bahadoor. The deed then declares that neither he nor his representatives shall be able to revoke the said trust, and that it shall operate in an irrevocable way. And it then goes on to state as follows:—

"This trust deed shall remain in force until my debts are satisfied, that is to say, not only during my life-time (but) also after my death and my heirs and representatives shall be bound by the terms of this trust deed. If all or any of the trustees be willing to give up the trust they must appoint another trustee and he shall act according to the trust. But if any of the trustees should resign without appointing another trustee, or if he should die before the appointment of another trustee, then any person whom I, during my lifetime, or after my death, my widow Rani Mina Kumari or my youngest son Maharaj Bahadoor, if he had (?) of age may appoint as trustee, shall be the trustee." And it winds up by declaring: "This trust deed shall be treated as a deed of conveyance of property. As to those landed properties jotes and jummas, which are made over to the hand of the trustees under this trust deed, they shall be persons fully entitled to realize the arrears and outstandings, etc., and all kinds of dues relating to them. To this effect I execute this trust deed in a sound state of mind."

Upon the terms of the deed there can be no doubt that it purports to convey to the trustees, absolutely, the properties covered by it subject to certain trusts. In my opinion there is no ground whatsoever for saying that it was merely an authority to the so-called trustees to do certain acts, which authority ceased with the death of the principal. The properties were conveyed to the trustees for the purpose of discharging his debts, and then returning any residue left either to Dhunput or his heir. It was to be irrevocable on the part of his heirs and representatives, was to take effect as a conveyance, and was to continue in force, not only in his lifetime, but after his death, until the purpose for which [787] it was executed had been fully discharged. In my opinion there is no ground for contending that the trustees under such a conveyance had no power to execute the decrees. I hold, therefore, that the first objection is wholly untenable.

It is also clear from the recitals contained in the document printed at page 44 of the Paper Book, which bears date the 30th June 1893, and from the entire evidence on the record, that the two adult sons of Dhunput separated from him in 1887, and ceased to have any interest whatsoever in the properties covered by the deed of trust, and that Maharaj Bahadoor, Dhunput's minor son, alone is the person entitled to the benefit of the trust. No question of limitation is raised in this case. Maharaj has by a petition joined in the application for execution; and I think the learned Judge in the Court below was right in holding that Maharaj, in conjunction with, or separately from, the trustees, was entitled to execute the decrees obtained by his father.

It was contended that under clause (h) of section 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the trustees were not entitled to execute the decrees. That clause runs as follows :—

“(h) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an application for the execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord shall not be made by an assignee of the decree unless the landlord's interest in the land has become and is vested in him.”

In my opinion there is no force in this contention. From one point of view the trustee is an assignee, inasmuch as the property is conveyed to him as has been done in this case. But to my mind the Legislature never intended to include in the word “assignee” used in clause (h) persons in whom a legal estate was vested by an act of the owner, but who had no independent interest in the property. I think that the provision in question applies only to outside purchasers for consideration.

There remains then only one question to consider, namely, whether, in view of the fact that the putni mehal had been sold in execution of a money decree and purchased by one Bibi Jarao Kumari, the applicants are entitled to proceed against the tenures for the satisfaction of their rent decrees. As the learned [788] Judge points out certain rents had become due from the appellant whilst he held the tenure. After Dhunput transferred the property to Mussammut Bhagwanbuti Chowdhrani he obtained decrees for these rents. The sale of these tenures in execution of money decrees could not release the tenures from the lien which had already attached to them. Further it seems to me that as the appellant contends he has lost the property he is not entitled to raise the question that the tenures are not liable to sale in execution of these decrees.

The applicants are clearly entitled to have execution of the decrees; and I should accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Macpherson, J.—I agree that the appeal must fail. We are asked to hold that the Court could not act upon the applications for execution, because the trustees had no authority to make them, and the want of authority was not cured by the subsequent joinder of Maharaj Bahadoor. Also that the Court was wrong in declaring that the putni mehals could be sold under the provisions of the Tenancy Act. First, because the applications were in direct contravention of the provisions of clause (h), section 148 of that Act, the original applicants being assignees of the decrees in whom the landlord's interest had not become vested; secondly, because the decrees were not decrees for rent within the meaning of the Act as Dhunput was not at the time when he obtained them the landlord of the appellant the judgment-debtor.

By the deed of the 19th of July 1896, Dhunput made over the decrees in question, and all his property to the applicants for execution, in trust avowedly for the payment of his debts, and the surplus was to be returned to him, or his heir Maharaj Bahadoor, when the debts were satisfied, but not before. The effect of this deed as a trust for the payment of debts was considered in the case of Fink v. Maharaj Bahadoor, (1898) 2 C. W. N., 469. That was a suit brought by the receiver of an estate to recover the money due on three hundis drawn by Dhunput. The claim on one of the hundis was barred by limitation—unless the creditor could, as he attempted to do, take advantage of the trust deed. It was not [759] proved that the deed had been communicated to the creditors or assented to by them, and the Court held that the creditor was not a beneficiary under the deed and could not take advantage of it. We are now asked to go a step further, and to hold, at the instance of a debtor to the estate, that the deed was wholly inoperative, or that it at all events became so on the death of Dhunput, and this solely for the purpose of determining whether the Court could execute the decrees on the application of the trustees.

There is no doubt as to the execution of the deed which purports to convey the properties, and to be very much more than a deed of agency, it has never been questioned by Maharaj Bahadoor, who putting the creditors on one side, appears to be the only person who could question it, and there is no proof that it has not been acted on. The proof is, indeed, the other way. It seems to me unnecessary in this proceeding to consider what the legal effect of the deed may be as regards the properties affected by it. There was, I think, a perfectly good application for execution under section 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court might have acted upon it if it thought fit to do so. The judgment-debtor, it is true, objected, and said there had been no valid assignment, but the transferor, or rather his representative, then joined in the application, and by so doing and in the absence of any question of limitation, put an end to the necessity of any further discussion as to the validity of the transfer. It is said that as Dhunput left two other sons Maharaj Bahadoor is not his only representative. It appears that in 1887 there was a family settlement by which the two elder sons took a portion of the property, and agreed not to claim any part of what was left in Dhunput's possession or was afterwards acquired. It is argued that this operated only as an agreement which must be enforced in the regular way. The sons are not before us, and do not appear to have claimed any part of the property covered by the trust deed. They assert no interest in these decrees, and their rights, if any, are not prejudiced by allowing the execution. So far as appears they have no rights, and I see no reason why the decrees should not be executed on the applications before us.

Can they then be executed as rent decrees? Section 148, clause (h) of the Tenancy Act enacts that "notwithstanding [760] anything contained in section 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure an application for the execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord shall not be made by an assignee of the decree, unless the landlord's interest in the land has become and is vested in him." The landlord's interest in the land is not vested in the trustees, and it is argued that their applications for execution were inadmissible by an express provision of law, and that the subsequent joinder of Maharaj Bahadoor could not make them good applications under the Tenancy Act. Dhunput, it may be observed, had parted with his interest in the land before the decrees were obtained, but it cannot, on that ground, be successfully contended that he could not have executed the decrees under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, by the sale of the tenures in respect of which they were obtained. The relationship of landlord and tenant existed during the period for which the rent was claimed, the rent was due to him as landlord, was decreed to him as such, and it was a charge on the tenures. The only question, therefore, is whether, having regard to the provisions of section 148, cl. (h) of the Tenancy Act, the applications should have been rejected. I agree that the word "assignee" as used in that section does not include persons in the position of the applicants, who are executing the decrees under an assignment, which is not for their benefit, but for the benefit of the heir of their assignor. If the deed does not, as the appellant contends, create a trust for creditors, Maharaj Bahadoor is now the only beneficiary under it, and the applicants are trustees for him. He could certainly have applied for execution without infringing the provision of section 148, and to hold that the trustees could not do so would be, I think, to give the section a wider scope than it was intended to have. He, moreover, has now joined in the application.

It is not alleged that the tenure has been sold for any arrears which have since become due, and the sale of the judgment-debtor's rights and interests, if there has really been any such sale, would not prevent the sale of the tenures in satisfaction of these decrees. For the above reasons I consider that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Korfa raiyats in Manbhum—Ejectment—Sufficiency of notice to quit—Act X of 1859.

There is no authority for the proposition that notice to quit to a korfa raiyat in Manbhum must be a six months' notice. Such a *raiya*t is only entitled to a "reasonable notice." What is a reasonable notice is a question of fact, which must be decided in each case according to the particular circumstances and local customs as to reaping crops and letting land.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 60 of 1898, against the decree of Babu Sarado Prasad Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 9th of December 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Sasi Bhusan Chatterjee, Munsif of Purulia, dated the 18th May 1897.

Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 720, distinguished.

Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Chand Chango, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 48; Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 82; Bidhumukhi Dabee Chowdhram v. Kefyutullah, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 93; and Kali Kishen Tagore v. Golam Ali, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 3, referred to and followed.

THIS was a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to, and for recovery of khas possession of, certain lands in Manbhum. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants were holding the land under him as korfa raiyats at a yearly rent, and that he had given to the defendants more than a month's notice to quit. The defendants alleged that they were not korfa raiyats, but held the land in ancestral junglebari noyabadi right, and further contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation, and that the notice was not sufficient and therefore invalid.

The Munsif found that the suit was not barred, and that the notice was valid in law, but that the defendants being junglebari raiyats could not be ejected.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal, holding that, even assuming the defendants to be [762] korfa raiyats, the defendants were entitled to six months' notice according to the decision in Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 720.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Babu Sarada Charan Mitter (and Babu Digambar Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The Subordinate Judge ought to have decided whether the notice given was reasonable or not, and not upon a hard and fast rule, which he found in Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 720. The case relied upon by the Lower Appellate Court came from the District of Dacca, and in it there was a tenancy-at-will, and the subject of the tenancy was not agricultural, whilst the present case came from Manbhum, in which the provisions of Act X of 1859 prevail. The cases of Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Chand Chango, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 48; Radha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 82; Bidhumukhi Dabee Chowdhram v. Kefyutullah, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 93; and Kali Kishen Tagore v. Golam Ali, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 3, show that the question to be decided is whether the notice is reasonable.

Babu Nolini Ranjan Chatterji for the Respondent.—In Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 720, the learned Judges decided that for a tenancy reserving an annual rent six months' notice should be given, and in the present case also there is a tenancy with an annual rent reserved. Hence the Lower Appellate Court was quite right in relying on that case.

The judgment of the High Court (Rampini and Handley, JJ.) was as follows:—

This is an application against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, dated the 9th December 1897. The suit was one for the ejectment of korfa raiyats, who held at a yearly rent of Rs. 5-6 annas 10 gundas, and the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the notice to [763] quit served upon the korfa raiyats was insufficient, being one of about two months.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that in this case the defendants were entitled to six months' notice expiring at the end of the year of the tenancy before they could be ejected from their holding, and in support of this view he relies on the case of Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal, (1897) I. L. R., 24 Cal., 720.

The learned pleader for the appellant has, however, pointed out to us that the case referred to is no authority for the decision at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived. The present case comes from Manbhum, where the provisions of Act X of 1859 prevail; but the case of Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Nund Kumar Ghosal referred to above, is one coming from the district of Dacca, in which the defendant was a tenant-at-will, and in which the subject of the tenancy was certainly not agricultural land, otherwise the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act would have been applicable.

The cause of action in that suit arose from the fact that the defendants had built a pucca posta and ghat upon the land, and the learned Judges who decided that case said that it did not come under the Tenancy Act, but under the purview of the case of Rajendronath Mookhopadhyaya v. Bassider Rhuman Khondkhar, (1876) I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146, and they therefore held that "there being no authority to the contrary in this country, we see no reason, nor has any reason been suggested, why the rule of English law should not be applicable to such a tenancy as the present in this country, and we think that six months, terminating at the end of the year, is the notice to which the tenant under such a tenancy as that in this case is entitled."

We, however, do not think that this is any authority for a six months' notice being required in a case coming from Manbhum, in which the defendants are korfa raiyats.

The question of notice to quit in cases coming under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, which Act is similar to Act X of 1859, has [764] been considered in several cases. The first of these cases is Jagut Chunder Roy v. Rup Chand Chango, (1882) I. L. R., 9 Cal., 48, in which the learned Judges laid down this rule: "We think that the result of the cases is this, that such a raiya is entitled to a reasonable notice. What is a reasonable notice is a question of fact which must be decided in each case according to the particular circumstances and the local customs as to reaping crops and letting land. In the present case a three months' notice was given, and there was no contention that at the time when that notice expired, any crop was upon the ground, the necessity of removing which would have made the notice, under the circumstances, unreasonable."

This case has been followed in the cases of Rudha Gobind Koer v. Rakhal Das Mukherji, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 82; Budhumukhi Dabee Chowdharain v. Kefyutullah, (1885) I. L. R., 12 Cal., 93; and Kali Kishen Tagore v. Golam Ali, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 3.

We think that these cases lay down the rule which is applicable to the present case, and we, therefore, set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him for a decision according to the law applicable to this case. He must consider what in the circumstances is a reasonable notice to quit, and decide the case accordingly.

If the notice is unreasonable, he should dismiss the suit; otherwise, he should dispose of the other issues which arise in the case.

Costs will abide the result.

MATRIMONIAL JURISDICTION.

The 8th and 19th June, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Stevenson
versus Stevenson.

Practice—Divorce Act (IV of 1869), section 36—Alimony pendente lite, Application for—Denial of means by respondent—Reference to Registrar—Respondent ordered to attend Court for cross-examination as to his means.

On an application alleging means made by a petitioner, the wife, for alimony pendente lite the respondent denied means. The Court refused to [765] refer the matter to the Registrar to inquire and report, but ordered the respondent to attend Court for cross-examination as to his means.

THIS was a wife's petition for divorce. Before the hearing the petitioner applied for alimony pendente lite on an affidavit setting out that the respondent had means. The respondent by his affidavit in reply swore he was without means, dependent on his relatives, and out of employment.

Mr. Bell for the Petitioner.

Mr. Knight for the Respondent.

Mr. Bell asked for the usual order of reference to the Registrar to determine the amount of alimony.

Mr. Knight, contra.—I submit this is not a question of amount. The respondent swears he has nothing, and is out of employment. The respondent could easily be examined in Court without referring the matter to the Registrar. I would ask the Court not to refer the matter, but dispose of it on the motion. This is the English practice, see Gaynor v. Gaynor, (1862) 31 L. J., P. and M., 144, a much stronger case than this, as the respondent there had an appointment, but was on leave. Fletcher v. Fletcher, (1862) 2 Sw. and Tr., 434. There also the respondent was holding an appointment, though at the time he was on leave. To refer the matter under the existing circumstances would be simply putting the parties to needless costs.

Mr. Bell.—The practice of the Court has been to refer in all cases.

Stanley, J.—I certainly shall not order an idle reference. Let the respondent attend Court for cross-examination as to his means next Monday week.

On the day fixed the respondent attended as ordered and was put in the witness box by Mr. Knight.

Mr. Bell.—I do not desire to cross-examine the respondent.

Mr. Knight.—Then the application must be dismissed. I do not ask for costs.

Stanley, J.—Counsel on behalf of the petitioner states that he does not desire to cross-examine the respondent. The respondent has filed an affidavit in which he states that he is without any means whatever. The application must consequently be dismissed. I reserve the question of costs. The petitioner to have liberty, if such liberty be required, to renew the application at any future time.

Practice—Deposit by defendant of money in Court in satisfaction of claim—Right of plaintiff to draw out such money and prosecute suit for balance claimed—Discretion of Court—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1862), sections 377, 379.

Suit for recovery of Rs. 5,500 on three promissory notes. Defendant pleaded minority at the date of the transactions, denied all liability, also denied receiving Rs. 5,500, but admitted receipt of Rs. 1,500, which sum together with interest he tendered to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of his claim. On refusal by the plaintiff to accept that sum it was paid into Court. The plaintiff then applied to the Court for payment to him of the said amount. The defendant contended that the amount should be kept in Court pending the hearing, as all liability was denied, and offered to pay interest if plaintiff succeeded in his suit.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to take the money out of Court.

THIS suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 5,500 and interest due on three promissory notes, dated the 29th June 1895. The defendant being an infant his written statement was filed through his guardian; the execution of the three promissory notes was admitted, but the defendant denied all liability and (inter alia) alleged that the sum of Rs. 5,500 had never been advanced as alleged. He admitted having received Rs. 1,500, and alleged that the plaintiff was aware of his being a minor at the date of the transactions. He further pleaded that the plaintiff had insti-[767]tuted a suit against him on one of the notes in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta, and had withdrawn it without leave to institute any further suit, and in consequence thereof the claim so far as that note was concerned was barred. Upon the defendant coming of age the guardian was discharged, and the defendant filed an additional written statement, wherein he adopted the defence set up by his guardian, and further stated that he had on the 22nd March 1899 tendered the sum of Rs. 1,836, being the sum of Rs. 1,500, which he admitted he had received, and interest thereon up to the said 22nd March 1899, to the plaintiff, stating that though he was advised he was in no way liable to the plaintiff, and denied any liability, he had in fact received that sum and was ready and willing to return it with interest thereon, and that he accordingly tendered that sum on condition that the plaintiff should enter up satisfaction for the full amount of his claim in the suit, and had informed the plaintiff that if he refused to accept the said sum it would be paid into Court on the same condition. He also stated that owing to the plaintiff refusing, he had accordingly brought the money into Court, and while still denying all liability he was willing that the plaintiff should be paid the same and allowed to take it out of Court, provided the amount was accepted by him in full satisfaction of all his claims in this suit. Simultaneously with filing his additional written statement the defendant paid the amount into Court, and the order giving him leave to do so was dated the 11th April 1899, and drawn up in the usual form, and while referring to the additional written statement ordered that the defendant be at liberty to pay to the Comptroller-General to the credit of this suit the sum of Rs. 1,836 admitted by him in his additional written statement to be due to the plaintiff. The money was paid into Court by the defendant on the 28th April 1899. The plaintiff on the 7th July 1899 applied in Chambers for payment to him of the said sum of Rs. 1,836, with liberty to him to prosecute the suit for the remainder of his claim.

Mr. R. Mitter for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hyde for the Defendant.

Mr. Mitter.—The plaintiff is entitled to draw the sum out of Court and prosecute his suit with regard to the rest of his claim [768] (see sections 377 and 379 of the Code of Civil Procedure). The sections of the Code with reference to the payment of monies into and out of Court were based upon and followed the practice at the time those sections were framed, though not now, obtaining in England.

Mr. Hyde, contra.—Where, as in this case, the money is paid into Court with a denial of liability and with an offer that if the plaintiff accepts it in full satisfaction of his claim, he can do so; the practice in England now is if the money be not accepted in full satisfaction to retain it in Court, Order XXII, Rule 6, Annual Practice, 1899. I submit that in section 377 of the Code the words "unless the Court otherwise directs" give the Court discretion to keep the money in Court, pending the hearing of the suit, and the Court in exercising that discretion would exercise a wise one, if it proceeded on the basis of the practice now existing in England. No doubt in the order obtained by the defendant on the 11th April 1899 it is stated that the sum of Rs. 1,836 is admitted by the defendant in his additional written statement to be due to the plaintiff in this suit. That is the usual form in which such orders are drawn up. It is incorrect, as that order referred to and must be read with the defendant's additional written statement, where, while he admits having received Rs. 1,500 when a minor, he denies all liability to the plaintiff of any kind. The defendant is ready to pay interest on the money at the rate of 6 per cent. if the plaintiff succeeds in his suit. The defendant does not in any way desire to profit by what has taken place; as soon as he could do so he at once offered to refund the Rs. 1,500 and interest up to date at 6 per cent. to the plaintiff.

Stanley, J.—The question is not one as to the greater convenience of the English practice or the practice in this country. According to the English practice the money remains in Court till the decision of the suit. That was possibly a wise alteration of the previous practice. The practice is not so here. By the provisions of the Code a defendant is allowed to pay money into Court, and after such payment he is not liable to pay any interest in respect of the amount so paid. The plaintiff is penalised if he does not take the money out. The Code provides that no interest is to be paid to the plaintiff after he receives [769] notice of the payment into Court, and directs that the money shall be paid to the plaintiff "unless the Court otherwise directs." I think the Court has a discretion to refuse to allow the money to be paid out, but that discretion is to be exercised reasonably. In a case where the money sued for is due on a promissory note it would be unreasonable in the absence of special circumstances not to allow the plaintiff to take the money out. I am aware of Mr. Hyde's offer to pay interest, but I do not think that this offer would justify me in refusing to grant the application. I think Mr. Mitter has established his right to take the money out of Court, and I shall make the order with costs.

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Ghassee Jemadar

versus

Nassiruddin Mistry.

Practice—Agreement as to Costs between attorney and client—Change of attorney—Right of attorney to his taxed costs.

Where F an attorney agreed to conduct a suit for his client and to accept Rs. 150 for his personal services, and not in respect of out-of-pocket costs and Counsel's fees, and in the event of his client being successful to recover his full costs from the opposite party and to refund the Rs. 150, it was held upon the client desiring to change to another attorney that he could do so upon payment to F of his taxed costs.

IN this case the defendant employed Mr. E. J. Fink, an attorney of the High Court, to defend a suit. The terms upon which the attorney agreed to act were embodied in the following letter dated 30th March 1898 :—

“ Ghassee Jemadar v. Yourself.

“ DEAR SIR,

“ As you are so desirous that I should act for you herein on terms, I will defend this suit and act for you on your paying me Rs. 150 cash for my fees and labor ; stamps and Counsel's fees, and all out-of-pocket expense to be paid by you separately from time to time as and when required. Should you win the suit you will get a refund of the Rs. 150 from me on my realizing my entire costs from the plaintiff.

“ Yours faithfully,

(Sd.) E. J. FINK.”

[770] In pursuance of the said agreement the defendant paid to Mr. Fink from time to time Rs. 205, namely, Rs. 150 his costs as settled, and Rs. 55 on account of out-of-pocket expenses. The defendant, owing, as he alleged, to a misunderstanding having arisen between himself and Mr. Fink as to payment of certain costs, instructed another attorney Babu N. G. Newgie to obtain a change of attorney, and on the 23rd May 1899 the usual order for change of attorneys was obtained, the defendant being directed to pay Mr. Fink the costs due to him upon taxation as between attorney and client. Mr. Fink's costs were taxed, and he was allowed Rs. 353-14 for in-pocket costs and Rs. 71 for out-of-pocket costs. The defendant, however, alleged that under the said agreement Rs. 16 only, being the balance of the out-of-pocket costs, were due by him to Mr. Fink, and on the 3rd July 1899, the defendant, upon notice to Mr. Fink, applied to the Court for an order for the completion of the change of attorney on payment by him to Mr. Fink of Rs. 16. Mr. Fink alleged that he had always been ready and willing to act for the defendant, and that the only misunderstanding he had had with the defendant was entirely unconnected with any matter of costs in this suit, and that he was entitled to his costs as taxed.

Mr. Bonnaud for the Defendant.

Mr. Sinha for Mr. E. J. Fink.

Mr. Bonnaud.—The attorney entered into a special contract with the defendant as to his fees. He cannot now ask that his costs be taxed in the usual way. As to the attorney losing his chance of recovering his fees from the other side, that can be no ground for compelling the client to retain him. There is nothing in the agreement which compels the defendant to continue his services, nor has he agreed to pay him any more than the Rs. 150, in the event of his dispensing with his services. In England, where the attorney has entered into a special contract, the Court has always allowed the client to change his attorney on good cause shown. Here there was a misunderstanding between the client and his attorney, and the client desires to go to another attorney. He has already paid the sum which he agreed to pay, [771] and the order for change should now be made on payment of Rs. 16, the balance of the out-of-pocket costs.

Mr. Sinha contra.—There is no doubt that a client is at liberty to change from one attorney to another during suit, and then the ordinary rule is that he can obtain that order for change only on payment of his attorney's costs. Here the client contends that he is not bound by the ordinary rule because of a special agreement, but that special agreement amounts to this, that the attorney was to carry on the suit from beginning to end getting Rs. 150 only from the client and having a chance of recovering costs from the other side if his client succeeded. The client himself desires to put an end to that contract, as he does not want the attorney to conduct the case any further, though the case is now on the list and ripe for hearing; that being so, he cannot claim any advantage under that special agreement; it is one entire indivisible contract. The special agreement therefore being broken by the client himself, he must under the ordinary rules pay costs irrespective of the special agreement before he can obtain the change.

Stanley, J.—In this case there was an agreement in writing between the defendant and his attorney, whereby the attorney agreed to accept Rs. 150 for his personal services in addition to costs out-of-pocket and Counsel's fees, but in the event of the client being successful the attorney was to refund the Rs. 150, and in that event to recover full costs from the plaintiff. Some misunderstanding appears to have arisen between the defendant and his attorney, and the defendant in consequence desires to change his attorney, and thereby preclude him from carrying on the case to a termination with the chance of success and profit therefrom to the attorney. It is said by Mr. Bonnaud that the attorney agreed to conduct the case for Rs. 150, and has been paid that sum, and he is not entitled to have his costs taxed in the usual way. I am of opinion that on the terms of the agreement the attorney is entitled, upon his ceasing at the instance of the defendant to act as attorney for him, to have his costs taxed in the usual way. The special agreement has been rescinded by the client by his insisting upon a change of attorneys; he cannot therefore base any [772] claim upon a contract to which he himself has not adhered. Mr. Bonnaud's client must pay the costs of this application, and I certify for Counsel. Application for change of attorney without payment of costs is refused.

Attorney for the Defendant: Babu N. J. Newgie.

Mr. E. J. Fink acted as Attorney on his own behalf.

Maharaj Bahadoor Sing and others*.

Execution of decree—Distribution of proceeds of execution—Assets realized by sale or otherwise in execution—Monies realized by Receiver appointed by decree-holder—Equitable execution—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 295.

Rents of property under attachment which have been realised by a Receiver appointed at the instance of one decree-holder are "assets realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" within the meaning of section 295† of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appointment of a Receiver by the Court at the instance of a judgment-creditor is a "process of execution".

By a decree in this suit, dated the 30th April 1898, it was (inter alia) ordered and decreed that the infant defendant, Maharaj Bahadoor Sing, should out of the estate of his deceased father Rai Dhunput Sing pay to the plaintiff, (the Receiver of the estate of one Sewbux Sureka deceased), the sum of Rs. 3,394-4, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and should also pay to the plaintiff the costs of the suit with interest at the same rate. The costs amounted to Rs. 1,072-13. The defendant having failed to pay the decretal amount and costs the plaintiff, on the 8th August 1898, obtained an order for execution of the decree by attachment of, amongst others, certain premises in Calcutta. By an order, dated the 26th August 1898,

* Original Civil Suit No. 532 of 1897.

†[Sec. 295 :—Whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court by which such assets are held for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of the realization, shall be divided rateably among all such persons :

Provided as follows :—

Proviso where property is sold subject to mortgage.

(a) when any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge, the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not as such be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale.

(b) When any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to a mortgage or charge, the Court may, with the assent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same right against the proceeds of the sale as he had against the property sold :

(c) When immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied—

first, in defraying the expenses of the sale;
secondly, in discharging the interest and principal-money due on the incumbrance; thirdly, in discharging the interest and principal-moneys due on subsequent incumbrances (if any); and fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for money against the judgment-debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the said property, applied to the Court which made the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees and have not obtained satisfaction thereof.

If all or any of such assets be paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets.

Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government.]

Mr. Belchambers was appointed Receiver under section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure to collect the rents of the said premises and pay the same after deducting thereout his commission and [773] charges to the Comptroller-General of Accounts to be placed to the credit of this suit, subject to the further order of this Court. The Receiver on the 19th April 1899 paid in the sum of Rs. 3,493-7-6 to the credit of the suit. No prohibitory order or attachment had been filed in the Office of the Accountant-General affecting this fund, and it appeared that neither this nor any other property of the defendant was affected by any attachment before judgment.

The plaintiff applied on summons to the defendant and to a number of creditors of Rai Dhunput Sing, who had previously obtained execution of decrees, and some of whom had attached the same properties, the rents whereof had been collected by the said Receiver, praying that the amount paid into Court should be paid to him in part satisfaction of his decree, or in the alternative for a reference to the Registrar to ascertain which of the decree-holders were entitled to the money in Court under the provisions of section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The application was heard in Chambers.

Babu Kally Nath Mitter for the Plaintiff.

Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose for the Defendant.

Mr. N. C. Bose for some of the Attaching Creditors.

Babu Kally Nath Mitter.—Money realized by the Receiver is not “assets realized by sale or otherwise” within the meaning of section 295 of the Code, and, therefore, the plaintiff alone is entitled to the benefit of the money. Section 295 does not in any way apply to money realized by the Receiver in this case; the modes of execution “otherwise than by sale” prescribed in the Code can only be under sections 291, 305 and 322. Gopal Dai v. Chunni Lal, (1885) I. L. R., 8 All., 67; Purshotamdass Tribhovandass v. Surajbharthi Hari-bharthi, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 588, and Sew Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 225, were referred to.

Mr. N. C. Bose, contra.—The appointment of a Receiver after decree under section 503 of the Code is a mode of realizing [774] money in the hands of third parties. It does not make any difference in the nature of the money realized, nor does it take it out of the operation of section 295: Sorabji Edulji Warden v. Govind Ramji, (1891) I. L. R., 16 Bom., 91 (97 to 99).

Babu Bhupendro Nath Bose supported the contention put forward by the plaintiff: Prosonomoyi Dassi v. Sreenauth Roy, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 809, and Siriah v. Muckanachary, (1887) I. L. R., 10 Mad., 194. The appointment of the Receiver was in the way of “equitable execution.” It is an execution not under the provisions of the Code, and therefore does not come under the word “otherwise” in section 295.

Stanley, J.—In this matter a summons was taken out by the plaintiff for an order for payment to him by the Accountant General of the balance which shall remain of the sum of Rs. 3,458-7-5 representing monies paid into Court by the Receiver appointed at the instance of the plaintiff over certain immoveable property of the defendant after payment of costs, or in the alternative that it be referred to the Registrar to report who are the persons if any entitled to participate in the fund besides the plaintiff.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant on the 30th of April 1898 for the sum of Rs. 3,394-4-0 and costs, and on the 8th of August 1898 he obtained an order of attachment of, amongst other, certain property of the defendant in Khunraputty Street and in Cross Street in Calcutta.

By an order of the 26th of August 1898 made in this action Mr. Belchambers was appointed Receiver to collect from the tenants the rents of the property above referred to, and was directed, after payment thereof of charges and commission, to pay the balance of the amount so to be realized to the Comptroller-General of Accounts and the Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, with the privity of the Accountant-General to be by them placed to the credit of this suit, subject to the further order of this Court. The Receiver collected the rents, and on the 19th of April last he paid into Court the sum of Rs. 3,493-7-6.

[775] No prohibitory order or attachment has been filed in the office of the Accountant-General affecting this fund, and from the Sheriff's certificate, dated the 25th of May 1899, it appears that neither this nor any other property of the defendant is affected by any attachment before judgment.

A number of decree-holders other than the plaintiff in this action having obtained attachments against the immoveable properties of the defendant between the 24th of January 1895 and 23rd of May 1899, contend that under section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure they are entitled to have the fund in Court rateably divided between them and the plaintiff.

It is clear that no creditor, who obtained an attachment order subsequent to the realization of the rents now represented by the moneys in Court, is entitled to participate, as it is only decree-holders who have applied to the Court for execution of their decrees prior to the realization who are comprehended in the section.

The question then is whether or not rents of property under attachment which have been realized by a Receiver appointed by one decree-holder are assets realized "by sale or otherwise" in execution of a decree within the meaning of section 295 of the Code. This is a question of some difficulty and of considerable importance. On the part of the plaintiff it is contended that the words "or otherwise" refer to a realization under sections 291, 305, or 322, the provisions of these sections being all modes of realizing assets from the property of the judgment-debtor "otherwise" than by sale, and do not include a realization of assets by the appointment of a Receiver under section 503. On the part of the other decree-holders it is argued that the words by "sale or otherwise" are comprehensive, and should be construed as meaning by sale or by other process of execution provided for by the Civil Procedure Code, and that the assets realized by the appointment of a Receiver are assets realized by a process of execution provided for by the Code.

The object of the Legislature in introducing section 295 into the Code was manifestly to place all judgment-creditors on the same footing in the administration by the Court of their [776] debtor's estate, provided that they had taken the precaution of invoking the aid of the Court by applying for execution of their decrees in any of the modes prescribed by the Code. Here the mode of execution in which the assistance of the Court was required by the creditors was by attachment of the debtor's property, but the plaintiff also sought execution of his decree by the appointment of a Receiver.

None of the cases to which I have been referred govern the present case.

In the case of Purshotamdass Tribhovandass v. Surajbharthi Haribharthi, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 588, it was held that moneys paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest in satisfaction of the decree were not assets realized "by sale or otherwise" under section 295 of the Code; that this section must be read as if the words "from the property of the judgment-debtor" were inserted after the word "realized." In this case, it will be observed, the debt was not realized by any of the modes of execution prescribed by the Code.

That decision was approved of in the case of Gopal Dai v. Chunni Lal, (1885) I. L. R., 8 All., 67. In that suit the plaintiff and the defendant held decrees against one Bishambarnath and took out execution of them, and the judgment-debtor's property was attached, but no sale took place. The judgment-debtor paid into Court the sum of Rs. 1,200 on account of the plaintiff's decree, and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the sum so paid into Court, and that it could not be regarded as "assets realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" so as to be rateably divisible between the decree-holders under section 295 of the Code, inasmuch as it could not be said that there was a realization from the property of the judgment-debtor. The payments in both these cases were made by the judgment-debtor voluntarily, though no doubt under the pressure of the decrees.

In the case of Sew Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen, (1886) I. L. R., 13 Cal., 225, the plaintiff had obtained a decree against the defendant for [777] a sum of Rs. 1,397-11-0. In execution of this decree certain property of the judgment-debtor was attached on the 7th of January 1886. On the 31st of August 1885 one Bhugwan Doss obtained a decree against the same defendants for the sum of Rs. 1,241-14-3, and on the 8th of January 1886 applied for attachment of the defendant's property. On that date a warrant was issued, but the property was never actually attached. Some time between the 8th and 15th of January 1886 the defendants filed their petition of insolvency, and the usual vesting order was made. The Official Assignee then paid into Court the amount of the decree obtained by Sew Bux, and the property was released from attachment. In an application of Bhugwan Doss to the Court under section 295 of the Code for a share of the money so paid into Court, it was held by TREVELYAN, J., that the applicant was not entitled to participate in it, inasmuch as section 295 only provided for the case where by the process of the Court in execution of a decree property has become available for distribution amongst the judgment-creditors. The learned Judge expressed his opinion that the words "by sale or otherwise" meant by sale or by other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code. This decision was followed by SALE, J., in the case of Prosonnomoyi Dassi v. Sreenauth Roy, (1894) I. L. R., 21 Cal., 809.

I concur in this view. I see no good reason for limiting the meaning of the words so as to exclude from their operation any process of execution which is available to a judgment-creditor under the provisions of the Code. The Legislature in my opinion intended by the language of the section to secure for all judgment-creditors who had invoked the aid of the Court in the manner pointed out by the section a rateable participation in all assets realized by any process of execution.

It remains then to consider whether the appointment by the Court of a Receiver is a process of execution. Section 503 of the Code provides that "whenever it appears to the Court to be necessary for the realization, preservation or better custody or management of any property, moveable or immovable, the subject of a suit or under attachment, the Court may appoint a Receiver." [778] The appointment of a Receiver by the Court at the instance of a judgment-creditor is equitable execution—see the judgment of COTTON, L. J., in Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, (1878) L. R., 9 Ch. D., 275 (290). It is a process of execution which is enforced by the Court at the instance of a judgment-creditor. Unlike the cases above referred to, where the moneys were paid into Court voluntarily by the judgment-debtor and by the Official Assignee, respectively, the moneys recovered in this suit have been realized out of the estate of the judgment-debtor in invitum and by the aid of the Court. This being so, I fail to see any reason for limiting the application of the principle of rateable distribution adopted in section 295 in the way in which the plaintiff submits that it should be limited. My decision no doubt will deprive the plaintiff to a large extent of the immediate fruits of his superior diligence, but it is, I believe, consonant with the spirit and intention of the framers of the Code.

I shall therefore refer the matter to the Registrar under the alternative relief asked by the summons. The costs of all parties other than the defendants of this application to be paid out of the balance of the fund in Court before distribution after satisfying the costs of realization, including the plaintiff's costs of this application.

Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), section 26, sub-sections 2, 3, 4, sections 28, 61, 62—Attachment—Claim by mortgagor in execution proceedings in Small Cause Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sections 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, and 293,—Presidency Small Cause Court Rules of Practice, 49, 50, 51—Tiled huts—"For the purposes of execution," Meaning of—Res judicata.

[779] An order made upon a claim to attached property filed in the Small Cause Court of Calcutta in a proceeding under section 278 of the Civil Procedure Code is "an order made in a suit" within the meaning of section 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (Act XV of 1882), and is final, subject only to the right to apply for a new trial.

The words of section 28 (Act XV of 1882) "for the purposes of execution" must mean for all purposes of execution, inclusive of the purpose of determining objections made to attachments. Tiled huts for all purposes of execution are therefore moveable property under that section.

* Original Civil Suit No. 54 of 1898.

The Small Cause Court has full power and authority to determine the question of title under a mortgage over attached property, and that question is, therefore, res judicata, Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 296, followed.

THIS was a suit on a mortgage of certain tiled huts executed by the defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendants Adhur Chunder Sett and Hridoy Nath Sett obtained a decree for Rs. 2,000 against the defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, and in execution of that decree attached the said tiled huts which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon filed a claim in the Small Cause Court, but the claim was disallowed, the Court being of opinion that the mortgage was not a genuine transaction. The Small Cause Court also allowed compensation to the defendants, the attaching creditors. The plaintiff having failed to substantiate his claim in the Small Cause Court, brought this action in the High Court on his mortgage, making the attaching creditors as well as the mortgagor defendants, praying as against the former that a Receiver might be appointed to take charge of the property, and also that the former might be restrained by and under the injunction of this Court from proceeding to a sale or otherwise disposing of the property.

Mr. R. Mitra, and Mr. S. R. Das, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, and Mr. N. Chatterjee, for the Defendants Adhur Chunder Sett and Hridoy Nath Sett.

The defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy did not appear.

[780] Mr. Chakravarti.—This suit is not maintainable—see Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan, (1891) I. L. R., 18 Cal., 296. Although section 23 of the Small Cause Courts Act (Act XV of 1882) has been repealed by section 12 of Act I of 1895, section 9 of Act I of 1895 continues in force the whole of the practice and law of procedure in force on the 31st of December 1894, unless and until cancelled and varied by rules made by the High Court. The plaintiff had the choice of his forum. He could either have come to the High Court or the Small Cause Court. He elected to have his claim investigated and adjudicated upon by the Small Cause Court; he would not be allowed to agitate the High Court because his claim was disallowed. The order of the Small Cause Court is final and conclusive under section 37 of Act XV of 1882. Here the properties under attachment are the tiled huts which, by legislation, have been made moveable property, at any rate for the purpose of execution. See Tagore Lectures (1895), page 36.

Mr. Mitra.—Under the General Clauses Act, section 3, sub-section 25, tiled huts are immoveable property—see also Nattu Miah v. Nand Rani, (1871) 8 B. L. R., 508. The rules made by the Small Cause Court are ultra vires.

The following judgment was delivered by

Sale, J.—The plaintiff in this case seeks to enforce a mortgage against the defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy executed by him in favour of the plaintiff on the 24th of November 1896, to secure a sum of Rs. 1,000 with interest, which sum the plaintiff alleges he advanced to the mortgagor as a loan. The mortgaged property consisted of three tiled huts situate in Calcutta, which the mortgagor either acquired by purchase or caused to be erected on land rented by him.

The plaintiff further alleges that the defendants Adhur Chunder Sett and Hridoy Nath Sett, in the month of September 1897, caused the said properties to be attached in execution of a money decree obtained by them against the mortgagor, and that he (the plaintiff) as mortgagor of the properties filed a claim in [781] the Court of Small Causes, which was, on the 30th of November 1897, disallowed.

The plaintiff accordingly submits that the Sett defendants, the attaching creditors, are necessary parties to this suit, and he says they have been called on to redeem the said mortgaged properties, and the relief prayed against them is, that a Receiver may be appointed to take charge of the properties, and that they (the attaching creditors) may be restrained by and under the injunction of this Court from proceeding to a sale or other disposition of the said properties.

The defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy has not appeared in the suit, but the defendants Adhur Chunder Sett and Hridoy Nath Sett have appeared to contest the plaintiff's claim, and in their written statement make the following allegations :—

That the mortgage in suit is a fraudulent transaction resorted to by the mortgagor in collusion with the plaintiff with the object of defeating the just claim of the attaching creditors.

That the decree, in execution of which the mortgaged properties have been attached, was made on the 21st of July 1897 in a suit instituted in the Small Cause Court on the 24th of November 1896, a day previous to the date of the alleged mortgage, in which the claim was in respect of a sum of Rs. 2,000 due from the defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy on a hathchitta.

That the sum due to the attaching creditors under the said decree is Rs. 2,000, together with the sum of Rs. 254-12 awarded as costs.

That the claim filed by the plaintiff in the Court of Small Causes came on for hearing on the 2nd November 1897, when the Court found on the evidence that the alleged mortgage was not a genuine transaction; that it was a device concocted by the defendant Nuffer Chunder Nundy, in conjunction with the plaintiff, to defeat the decree which the attaching creditors obtained against their judgment-debtor, and that the Court, accordingly, dismissed the plaintiff's claim and allowed the sum of Rs. 100 as compensation to the judgment-creditors.

That the plaintiff had filed an application for a new trial which [782] was then pending. That in pursuance of a consent order made by this Court on the 10th February 1898, the mortgaged properties had been sold, and the sale proceeds had been paid into Court to the credit of this suit.

At the hearing it was contended on behalf of the attaching creditors by way of a preliminary objection to the suit that the order of the Small Cause Court disallowing the plaintiff's claim is a bar to the relief which is sought against them, and that the finding also of the Court as to the genuineness of the mortgage is conclusive between the parties, and that, as a result, the suit is not maintainable and ought to be dismissed as against them.

No evidence was adduced on either side upon the preliminary point, the argument proceeding upon the basis that the finding of the Small Cause Court in the claim suit was correctly stated in the defendant's written statement. It was stated, however, and not disputed, that the plaintiff's application for a new trial of the claim suit was withdrawn, and that the amount of the sale proceeds of the mortgaged properties now in Court is insufficient to satisfy in full the claim of the attaching creditors.

The procedure of the Small Cause Court is now regulated by Act XV of 1882 as amended by Act X of 1888 and I of 1895.

By section 37 of the amended Act it is provided that, subject to the right to apply for a new trial, every decree and order of the Small Cause Court in a suit shall be final and conclusive.

The first question then is, whether the order of the Small Cause Court disallowing the plaintiff's claim—based on his mortgage, to have the attachment of the judgment-creditors removed, can be said to be an order made in a suit.

The procedure as to claims made in respect of attached property by persons other than the judgment-debtor is regulated by section 26 of Act XV of 1882, paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, sections 61 and 62 of the same Act, sections 278, 279, 280, 281 and 282 of the Civil Procedure Code, and by rules 49, 50 and 51 of the Small Cause Court rules of practice.

No doubt section 23 of Act XV of 1882, which extended certain portions of the Civil Procedure Code, including the claim [783] sections, to the Small Cause Court has been repealed by section 12 of the Amending Act I of 1895, but, on the other hand, section 9 of the same Amending Act continues in force the whole of the present practice and law of Procedure of the Small Cause Court, until this procedure has been superseded by a new procedure to be introduced by rules framed by the High Court.

The rules of practice of the Small Cause Court have been framed under the powers reserved to the Court by section 9 of Act XV of 1882, as it stood before the Amending Act I of 1895 came into operation. By that section the Court was empowered, with the previous sanction of the High Court, to make rules to provide in such manner as it thought fit for all matters not specially provided for by the Act.

Section 61 of the Act provides : " If any claim is made to or in respect of any property seized under this chapter, or in respect of the proceeds or value thereof by any person not being the debtor, the Registrar of the Small Cause Court, upon the application of the bailiff who seized the property, may issue a summons calling before the Court the claimant and the person who obtained the warrant."

The section, after providing for the stay of any suit which may have been brought in the High Court in respect of the claim, proceeds : " And a Judge of the Small Cause Court shall adjudicate upon such claim and make such order between the parties in respect thereof and of the costs of the proceedings as he shall think fit; and such order shall be enforced as if it were an order made in a suit brought in such Court. The procedure in the Small Cause Court in cases under this section shall conform, as far as may be, to the procedure in an ordinary suit in such Court."

Section 62 gives the Court power to award compensation to the claimant, and provides that the order of the Judge awarding or refusing such compensation shall bar any suit for the recovery of compensation for any damage caused by the distress. Similarly by section 26, para. 2, it is provided " when any claim preferred or objection made under section 278 of the Civil Procedure Code is disallowed, the Small Cause Court may in its [784] discretion order the person preferring or making such claim or objection to pay to the decree-holder or to the judgment-debtor or to both by way of satisfaction as aforesaid such sum or sums as it thinks fit." And further : " Any order made under this section may, in default of payment of the amount payable thereunder, be enforced by the person in whose favour it is made against the person against whom it is made, as if it were a decree of the Court."

Rule 49 of the rules of practice provides that the claimant who is summoned before the Court under the provisions of section 61 of the Act must file a plaint, and shall be the plaintiff, while the person who obtained the warrant shall be the defendant, and the matter shall then be treated as a suit. In every respect, therefore, both under the Act and under the rules and also under section 278 and the following sections of the Civil Procedure Code, a claim proceeding is to be treated and dealt with as a suit, and I have no doubt, therefore, that an order made in such a proceeding by the Small Cause Court is an order made in a suit within the meaning of section 37 of the Act. Section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, which expressly reserves to the party against whom an order is made in a claim proceeding to establish his right by suit, does not affect the present question, because that section has been excluded from application to a claim proceeding in the Small Cause Court by a notification issued by the Court under the powers reserved to it by section 23 of the Act, which notification under section 3 of Act X of 1888 is still in force.

I agree with the view expressed by WILSON, J., in the case of Ismail Solomon Bhamji v. Mahomed Khan, (1891) 1. L. R., 18 Cal., 296 (301), that the omission of section 283 from the sections of the Procedure Code applied to the Small Cause Court was intended to preserve the finality of orders made in claim suits by the Small Cause Court.

If then the order of the Small Cause Court disallowing the plaintiff's claim to interfere with the attachment of the defendants is final and conclusive between the parties, it would seem to follow [785] that his claim in this suit to restrain the defendants from proceeding with their attachment is barred. But then it is said the order of the Small Cause Court disallowing the plaintiff's claim is bad, because it was based upon a finding which was ultra vires, as it affected the plaintiff's title on his mortgage. Tiled huts, it is contended, are immoveable property, and the Small Cause Court had, therefore, no power to determine the question of the validity of the mortgage, as it involved a question of title to immoveable property. The answer is that the plaintiff himself put the validity of his mortgage in issue in the proceeding by basing his claim to the attached property on his mortgage. How then can he be heard to say that the order complained of is bad, because the Court in making it determined the very question he invited it to determine? Moreover, assuming that tiled huts are for certain purposes immoveable property, it is clear, and this I did not understand to be disputed, that by virtue of section 28 of the Small Cause Court Act XV of 1882 popularly known as the tiled hut section—the mortgaged property for the purposes of execution must be deemed to be moveable property.

The words of the section "for the purposes of execution" must mean for all purposes of execution inclusive of the purpose of determining objections made to attachments. It would be hardly reasonable to suggest that what the Legislature intended was that for the purposes of issuing process tiled huts were to be deemed moveable property, whereas for the purposes of determining objections to such process they were to be deemed immoveable property.

I think, therefore, the Small Cause Court had under the circumstances and for the purposes of the plaintiff's claim full power and authority to determine the question of the plaintiff's title under his mortgage to the attached property, and that this question is now res judicata as between the parties.

It is to be observed that the Small Cause Court, under section 282 of the Civil Procedure Code, if satisfied with the validity of the plaintiff's mortgage, had power to continue the attachment subject to such mortgage. WILSON, J., in the case already cited, remarks as follows: "Under the rules of the Small Cause Court [786] claims are not tried summarily, they are dealt with just as suits are with the same remedy in case of mistake by application for a new trial, and the Court has full power to award damages to either party. A person who thinks himself aggrieved by the seizure of goods in execution of a Small Cause Court decree has his choice of remedies. He may bring an ordinary suit in the proper Court, or he may make a claim in the Small Cause Court. In either case his rights are fully tried out, and it would, I think, be inconvenient and contrary to sound principle to allow him to try first one remedy and then the other."

With these observations I entirely agree. This suit must be dismissed against the defendants Adhur Chunder Sett and Hridoy Chunder Sett, and the plaintiff must pay their costs on scale No. 2. Liberty to these defendants to apply for payment of the money in Court.

Suit dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 12th May, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE GHOSE AND MR. JUSTICE WILKINS.

Jagat Chandra Mozumdar.....Petitioner

Magistrate, Jurisdiction of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), section 190 sub-section (1), clauses (a) and (c), and section 191—Taking cognizance of offence by Magistrate upon receiving a complaint of facts—Right of the accused to claim a transfer—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), section 193—Sanction unnecessary when offence alleged to have been committed in the course of an investigation by the Police—Interference by the High Court in a pending case.

The complainant made a complaint to the Magistrate by a petition in which he named three persons and charged them with offences under certain sections of the Penal Code. The Magistrate thereafter examined the com-[787]plainant and some witnesses on his behalf and issued summonses against the three persons mentioned in the petition of complaint as well as against the petitioner in this case for an offence other than those mentioned in the said petition.

Held, the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence as against the petitioner under clause (a) and not clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 190, and consequently he was not debarred by section 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code from trying the case.

* Criminal Revision No. 133 of 1899 made against the order passed by G. Balthasar, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Goalpara, dated the 5th October 1898.

No sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is necessary for taking cognizance of an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code when the alleged false evidence is said to have been fabricated, not in relation to any proceeding pending in any Court, but in the course of an investigation by the Police into the matter of an information received by them.

It is inadvisable to interfere in a pending case unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceedings and calling for prompt redress.

ON the 13th of September 1898 Kunja Ganika lodged a complaint against three persons in the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate of Goalpara charging them with having committed offences under sections 352, 354 and 109 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate subsequently examined the complainant on oath and some witnesses on her behalf and ordered summonses to be issued against the three persons mentioned in the petition of complaint as well as against the petitioner in this case under sections 193 and 109 of the Penal Code. On subsequent dates he heard evidence and drew up a charge under sections 193 and 109 against the petitioner. Then on the 30th November the petitioner moved the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara to stay all proceedings as against himself, but he declined to interfere. The petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained a rule in the following terms:—

"Let the record be sent for and a rule issue to the District Magistrate of Goalpara to show cause why the case should not be transferred to another Magistrate by reason of section 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and next because the Sub-divisional Magistrate has, in the proceedings, shown a bias against the accused, or why such other orders should not be made as to this Court may appear proper. The objection in regard to the invalidity of the proceedings in consequence of the want of sanction under section 195 will be better determined when the facts are made clear by the record of the [788] proceedings, and the Court will then be in a position to consider also whether, as contended by learned Counsel, there is any case at all made out for the prosecution of the petitioner. In the meantime further proceedings will be stayed."

Mr. Jackson, and Babu Har Prasad Chatterjee, appeared for the Petitioner.

The High Court (GHOSE and WILKINS, JJ.) in their judgment, after reading the terms of the rule as above, continued as follows:—

The facts appear to be as follows:—

One Kunja Ganika filed a petition of complaint before the Magistrate, Mr. Balthazar, on the 14th September 1898. She was examined by the Magistrate, and deposed that the petitioner, who was then a Sub Inspector of Police, came to her house with a head constable and with other persons and enquired from her about a sari, in respect of which apparently a charge of theft had been lodged by some other person. Her complaint was that the head constable himself introduced this sari into her house, and then pretended to have found it there; and that she was then assaulted by the head constable and taken away to the thana, whence she was ultimately allowed by the petitioner to depart without bail. Of the persons named in her vernacular petition of complaint as accused, the present petitioner is not one; and the offences charged against others were stated to be offences under sections 352 and 354 of the Indian Penal Code.

The Magistrate forwarded the complaint to his Deputy Commissioner for sanction to the prosecution thus instituted: in doing so he appears to have acted under some executive order in respect of complaints made against police officers. Sanction having been obtained, the Magistrate then summoned and examined the complainant's witnesses before issuing process against the accused. Then, on the 28th September, he passed an order to summon the head constable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and the Sub-Inspector (petitioner) under sections 193 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code. He then, on the 5th October and subsequent dates, heard evidence and drew up charges, viz., charges under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and section [789] 29 (Act V of 1861) against the head constable and a charge under section 109 read with section 193 of the Indian Penal Code against the petitioner and two others who were not police officers.

In the meantime, on the 5th October 1898, the Magistrate had asked his superior officer for a specific sanction to proceed against the sub-inspector, and he was on the 2nd November directed to proceed with the trial.

Then on the 30th November, the petitioner moved the Deputy Commissioner to stay all proceedings as against himself, and on the 10th February 1899 the Deputy Commissioner declined to interfere. The petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained a rule in the terms already set forth.

We have heard Mr. Jackson for the petitioner and have considered the cause shown by the Deputy Commissioner in his letter of explanation.

We think that the petitioner is not entitled to have this case transferred either on the ground of bias or by reason of section 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code. As to bias of any kind disqualifying the Magistrate from trying out the case, or rendering it inexpedient that he should try it out, we can find no indications upon the record, and indeed this part of the case was not pressed upon us by the learned Counsel for the petitioner. As regards section 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is contended by Mr. Jackson that as the complaint of Kunja Ganika disclosed no offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code the Magistrate must have taken cognizance of that offence under clause (c) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But this is hardly so. The Magistrate in effect received a complaint of facts, which in his opinion constituted an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and consequently took cognizance of that offence under clause (a) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The fact that the complainant did not specifically, and in terms, accuse any one of an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code does not affect the real position of affairs; if the facts, as stated by her in her deposition of complaint, constituted an offence which really would fall under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, then her complaint was one [790] under clause (a) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and consequently the Magistrate was not debarred by section 191 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from trying the case.

Then it was contended on the petitioner's behalf that the Magistrate could not legally take cognizance of the offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code in the absence of any sanction under clause (b) of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as this alleged fabrication of false evidence was "in relation to" some proceeding in some Court, and the case of Chandra Mohon Banerjee v. Balfour, (1899) ante, p. 359, was referred to in support of this contention. But that case was altogether upon a different footing, for the petitioner therein was accused of having instigated one Mrs. Balfour to give false evidence in a divorce case, which was actually pending in the High Court at the time. In the case now before us, there was no proceeding pending in any Court in relation to which the alleged false evidence was said to have been fabricated. There was then simply an investigation, which was being held by the Police into the matter of the information in connection with the theft of the sari. We are therefore of opinion that no sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code was necessary in this case. That none was legally required under any local executive order, in order to give the Magistrate jurisdiction, is conceded.

We finally proceed to consider the last question stated in the rule, viz., as to whether there is any case at all made out for the prosecution of the petitioner; but before doing so, we desire to say that, in our opinion, it is only in very exceptional instances that this Court should as a Court of Revision interfere with the action of a subordinate Court in respect of any pending case, and especially when such a case has reached the stage where a charge has been drawn and only the defence of the accused remains to be heard. We do not desire to lay down, nor can we lay down, any hard and fast rule upon the subject, for the interference of this Court should be regulated by the particular circumstances of each case. But speaking generally it seems to us to be inadvisable to [791] interfere in a pending case, unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent upon the face of the proceedings and calling for prompt redress. As we understand this portion of the rule, it contemplates the existence of such an injustice in the present case; for if neither the complaint, nor the evidence for the prosecution, makes out any case whatever against this petitioner, it is manifest that he should not have been charged and so called upon to enter upon his defence, and it follows that he should not be left, for a moment longer than is necessary, in the position of a person accused of an offence and forced to defend himself against a charge which there is no legal evidence to establish. Now, we have considered the whole of the evidence for the prosecution in the case before us, and we fail to see that it discloses any act of the accused which can be interpreted so as to bring him within the four corners of the charge. There is nothing whatever to show that he himself did anything, or connived at any other person doing anything, towards fabricating any false evidence against the complainant either with or without the intention that such evidence should be used in any stage of a judicial proceeding. Whatever the head constable or the other accused may have done, there is nothing to shew that the petitioner acted in any way except in the bond fide discharge of his duty, or that he was cognizant of any one fabricating any false evidence for the purpose in question. This being so, it is clearly most unfair to him that he should now be called upon to rebut a charge which, upon the evidence, is baseless in so far as it affects him. And to remedy this injustice, it is right that we should interfere.

We accordingly quash the proceedings, so far as the petitioner is concerned, and direct that he be at once discharged.

[792] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd May, 1899.

PRESENT:

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP,
AND MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Prosunno Coomar Roy.....Plaintiff

The Secretary of State for India in Council.....Defendant.*

Settlement—Settlement of noabad taluks in Chittagong—Power of Government to make settlement—Waste lands—Resumption—Kabuliat, Effect of—Acceptance of kabuliat by the landlord—Ratification—How far the acts of Government officers bind the Government—Regulation III of 1822, section 5, clause 1—Regulation VII of 1822, section 7, clause 1—Evidence—Presumption of due performance of official acts—Acquiescence—Acceptance of rent after term of settlement.

The plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for the declaration that a certain noabad mehal of his in the District of Chittagong was a permanent taluk, not resumable by the Government. He based his claim on two grounds: (1) that the mehal existed from before the time of the Decennial Settlement, and the settlement of 1800 confirmed the permanent right of the talukdar in the same; (2) and that at any rate, a kabuliat executed in 1836 by his predecessors in title with the approval of the Collector had the same effect. In defence, it was alleged (1) that the mehal was not in existence at the time of the Decennial Settlement and the settlement of 1800 was a temporary one; and (2) that the kabuliat was never accepted by the Government, but that on the contrary the Government passed distinct orders that the settlements of 1836 were for thirty years only, which order was duly published by an istahar to that effect. It was found on the evidence that the taluk was not shown to have been in existence before 1800 and the settlement proceedings of that year and the variation of rent from time to time did not support the plaintiff's contention: Held, that the kabuliat of 1836 was merely an offer on the part of the talukdar for the time being and was not binding on the Government, its terms not having been accepted either by the Government or by any duly authorised officer thereof; that both by law and by the special instructions issued for the guidance of settlement officers, no settlement could be binding on the Government unless confirmed by the Governor-General in Council.

There being no proof given by either party as to whether the istahar above mentioned was or was not duly published, Held, that the publication of the istahar must be presumed, having regard to the presumption in favour of the due performance of official acts.

Held also that, even assuming that the officers of the Government induced by their act and conduct a belief in the talukdar that the kabuliat had been accepted by the Government, or that a permanent settlement had been sanctioned by the Government, that did not amount to a ratification of the kabuliat, inasmuch as such conduct of the officers was in violation of their duty as such officers and in direct contravention of the express orders of the Government.

* Letters Patent Appeal No. 1 of 1898 in Appeal from Original Decree No. 264 of 1896.

Held, also, that the acceptance by the Government of rent at the old rate from the talukdar for a long time after expiration of thirty years did not amount to an acquiescence in the terms of the kabuliat.

Unsettled and unoccupied waste land, not being the property of any private owner, must belong to the State.

THE plaintiff, Prosunno Coomar Roy, brought the present action against the Secretary of State for India in Council for the establishment of the plaintiff's title to a certain noabad mehal known as taluk Shermast Khan, No. 203, situated in mouza Rajarkal, Thana Ramu, in the District of Chittagong, for a declaration that 86 drones 2 kanis 9 gandas and 2 karas of hasila (arable) land, and 491 drones 15 kanis 2 gandas and 1 kara of khila (waste) land, aggregating to 578 drones 1 kani 11 gandas and 3 karas of land, as measured and found by the recent survey, was included in the said taluk Shermast Khan; and for a further declaration, upon the construction of a kabuliat, dated the 9th November 1836, that the Government had no right to take any land out of the said mehal, or make it khas, or interfere in any way with the rate of rent at which the plaintiff has been paying, in accordance with the terms of the same kabuliat. The plaintiff alleged that the said mehal had been in existence from before the Decennial Settlement, and averred in effect that the permanent character of the taluk was confirmed by the kabuliat which the Government took from Sheik Obedulla and others, his predecessors in title, on the 9th November 1836.

In defence, it was urged, amongst other things, that the plaintiff's taluk was not in existence at the time of the Permanent Settlement, but that it was included in the Cox's Bazar khas mehal, No. 34613, which had never been permanently settled; [794] that the settlement made with Sheik Obedulla and others was for a term of thirty years only; and that the kabuliat upon which the plaintiff based his claim was not accepted by the Government, who never approved it, but that, on the contrary, the order of the Government was conveyed in letter No. 620, dated the 17th April 1838, approving grants of thirty years' leases and declining to grant perpetual leases, which order was duly published and notified. The defendant also denied that the waste land claimed by the plaintiff was ever in his possession and that at any time it formed part of his taluk.

It appears that in 1796, the Government, having discovered that a sanad, under which the descendants of one Joy Narain Ghosal claimed all the waste lands of the Chittagong district as belonging to their mehal noabad Joynugger, was a forged document, directed the whole of the said mehal and lands to be resumed and brought under assessment. This measure was carried into effect in the year 1800, under the Collector, Mr. Kerr. The instructions issued by the Government to regulate the resumption and assessment proceedings were as follow:—

I. (a) Perpetual pottahs were to be granted for the cultivated and uncultivated lands, which had already been brought upon the jumma in favour of the defendant talukdars, by whom they were then held, on condition that the boundaries of the lands should be fixed by actual measurement.

(b) Such lands as had been reduced to cultivation since the last measurement (of 1788-89) were to be brought upon the jumma of Government.

(c) The assessment of the whole (a) and (b) was to be adjusted according to the rates observed in forming the assessments on the lands of other independent proprietors in the Chittagong District, by which means the talukdars would pay to Government exactly pro rata what they then paid to the descendants of Gokul Chunder Ghosal.

II. (d) Other waste lands, not brought upon the jumma, were to be granted, with fixed and ascertained boundaries, to individuals, in small and compact portions, according as applications might be made for them.

• (e) Revenue was to be assessed upon the waste land lots [specified in (d)], according to the established rates of assessment, for such area as might, at the end of three years, be reduced to cultivation.

(f) The revenue in respect of these waste land lots was to be further proportionally increased, on the above principle, for such area as might be afterwards brought into cultivation, whenever, and as often as it might be [795] thought advisable to set on foot an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining that point.

It appears that previous to this, mouza Rajarkal, Thana Ramu, was measured in 1126 Maghi (1764-65), and 1150 Maghi (1788-89). In the measurement papers of 1764-65, there was no mention of taluk Shermast Khan. In the measurement papers of 1788-89, the following entries occurred :—

Lakhiraj pending decision	Total quantity of land. 126d.	{ khila —34d.
Khairat. Zimma Shermast	4k. 18g. 1k.	{ 7k. 6g. 1k.
Khan, son of Zabardast		{ hasila —91d.
Khan.		13k. 12g.
Zimma Shermast Khan ...	Total quantity of land. 55d.	... Khila —55d.

There was no assessment with regard to either of these lands held by Shermast Khan. But in the measurement papers of the year 1800, a noalad mehal, called taluk Shermast Khan, was described as containing 11 drones 7 kanis 18 gandas 1 kara of khila land and 41 drones 6 kanis 9 gandas 3 karas of nasila land, altogether 52 drones 14 kanis 8 gandas, assessed at the annual revenue of Rs. 659-6-2; then there are mentioned some 'Lakhiraj pending decision' and other lands. Afterwards, as stated by Mr. J. I. Harvey, Collector, "in the survey of 1176 Maghi (1814-15) 29 drones 6 gandas 1 kara of hasila land of the village were measured under the taluk Shermast Khan, on which a jumma of Rs. 460-5-1 (sicca) was fixed; the remaining lands of the survey of 1162 Maghi (1800-1) were improperly included under the head of lakhiraj land in the name of Shermast Khan. This caused a decrease in Government revenue from the jummabandi of 1162 Maghi by Rs. 199-1-0 (sicca)," the arrears of which amount were subsequently realised by Mr. Harvey (Exhibit I).

In 1815, the Ghosals obtained a decree of the Sadar Dewany Adalat adjudging that they should recover as much as might be ascertained to have been in the year 1764 the undoubted property of their family. In order to facilitate the execution of this decree, by the identification and separation of the lands awarded to the Ghosals, the Government in 1833 resolved to conclude the Chittagong settlement on a scientific and exhaustive basis. The settlement was conducted by the Collector, Mr. Harvey, under the superintendence of Mr. Dampier, then Commissioner. Thana [796] Ramu was surveyed in 1834-35, and the settlement was submitted to the Government for sanction on the 5th November 1837, with a memorandum by Mr. Walter, temporary member of the Sadar Board of Revenue (Exhibit D). In this memorandum, Mr. Walter solicited the sanction and confirmation of the Government for the result of the survey and assessment regarding the Government portion of the noabad estate, in each of the 51 mouzas included in the thana for a period of 30 years, and that the taluks should be considered dependent taluks. It was stated, however, evidently with approval, that "Mr. Dampier and Mr. Harvey strongly recommend the grant of pottahs to all the noabad talukdars, and further that notice should be issued declaring that the present measurement should always be respected and the new cultivation alone be subjected to assessment" [para. 45]. The Government order on this memorandum was communicated to the Board of Revenue in a letter, dated the 19th April 1838 (Exhibit C.) The Government assented to the proposition that the taluks should be considered dependent taluks as well as to the proposition to grant pottahs to the talukdars for a period of thirty years. But with regard to the recommendation that the pottahs should convey an assurance that the cultivated lands included in the several taluks and holdings should not be liable to any enhancement of assessment at any future time, it was observed as follows :—

9. Pottahs conveying an assurance to the above effect would in fact be equivalent to perpetual leases for that portion of the land included in them which is now in cultivation. Such pottahs the Deputy Governor thinks objectionable ; there being no reason whatever why Government as proprietor of the estate should not have the increased rents which the land may be expected to be capable of yielding thirty years hence, either from being rendered more productive than they are at present by improved husbandry, or in consequence of a general rise in the value of agricultural produce.

10. The Deputy Governor is of opinion that the boundaries of each of the several taluks and holdings according to the measurement described in para. 116 of the memorandum should be fixed ; and that a lease (pottah) should be granted for the whole of the land, both cultivated and uncultivated, included within those boundaries ; which lease should convey no other assurance than that no increase to the jumma assessed by the present settlement will be demanded either for the cultivated or uncultivated lands within the boundaries specified, during the period of the lease.

[797] These orders were communicated on the 16th June 1838, by Mr. Farvey, then Commissioner, to Mr. Raikes, the Collector of Chittagong, with the following instructions (Exhibit E) :—

4. You will please to publish the accompanying istahar for public information at your kutchery and in the Thana of Ramu, intimating that the detailed measurement and settlement of the Thana of Ramu, effected under the provisions of Regulation VII of 1822, has received the sanction of Government, and that no increase on the jumma assessed by the present settlement will be demanded either for the cultivated or uncultivated lands borne on the jummabandi of each taluk for a period of thirty years from the date of jummabandi.

5. You will hereafter receive pottahs prepared in accordance with the orders of Government for distribution to the talukdars, utmandars and raiyats who have engaged for their holdings.

No evidence having been given by either party to the present suit as to whether the istahar abovementioned was or was not duly promulgated, the following extracts from Vol. IV of the Selections from the Records of the Board of Revenue, L. P., compiled by Mr. Cotton, will be found to have some bearing on the question as to how far the responsible officers of Government took steps to impress on the noabad talukdars the temporary character of their taluks and to induce them to execute revised engagements.

Letter from Mr. Scott, Collector, to Sir Henry Ricketts, Commissioner, No. 45, 18th April 1842, regarding settlement of mouza Beala Manick Chur.

" I have before communicated on the inexpediency and hardship of sending for these talukdars after a lapse of years merely to execute revised engagements, to say nothing of the contingency of objections."

Instructions given by Sir Henry Ricketts to Mr. Scott. Letter No. 2443, 20th April 1842.

" The settlements sanctioned by Government have been for thirty years, and at the back of all the engagements of the talukdars in these settlements it should be recorded that the settlement was sanctioned for thirty years, and not in perpetuity, as inserted in the talukdar's engagement. If this be not done, considerable embarrassment may be experienced on the expiration of the term thirty years hence ; of course all settlements were made conditionally on their being approved by Government, and the limited approvement accorded by Government should be distinctly noted. . . . It appears to me that the contingency of objections is in favour of revised engagements being taken, instead of against it. Should he have objections to offer, surely he should be heard. Moreover, it would be wrong to allow a talukdar to [798] remain quietly in possession, and spend his money under the impression that his lease was in perpetuity while we have a document in our desk authorising us at the expiration of thirty years to reassess him I request that you will send for the talukdar and take an engagement from him for thirty years."

From Mr. Scott to Sir Henry Rickets. No. 93, 31st August 1842.

"Another point of great importance in the disposal of settlements that have been concluded by former Deputy Collectors arises from the view the Commissioner has taken of the kabuliat which has been hitherto used. Considering their documents as conveying a right to the assessment now fixed in perpetuity and not during the pleasure of Government, it appeared to him expedient to have revised engagements taken, and the parties concerned to be informed of their limited interests. . . . I offer no objection to the revised form, but submit that there is no necessity for any retrospective adoption of it. As to the people being under the impression that the assessment is in perpetuity, I have never heard it advanced by any one, and it is opposed to all their past experience."

From Sir Henry Ricketts to the Government. No. 1424, 20th December 1842.

"As to the revised kabuliat I have directed to be taken from all talukdars. The form in use appeared to me distinctly to convey a right to possession of the cultivated land at the jumma now fixed for ever. No mention of any limited period was made, and as it is not likely any of us shall be here thirty years hence to explain that the settlement was for thirty years only, I considered it prudent and likely to prevent misunderstandings and doubts hereafter to direct that the form should be altered before settlements were submitted for approval."

It is also necessary to mention that on the 2nd March 1829, circular instructions were issued by the Government for the guidance of the local Revenue Commissioners, which contained, amongst others, the following directions (Exhibit H):—

1. No settlement of land revenue shall be concluded by the Sadar Board, or be held binding upon Government, unless the same shall have been formerly confirmed by the Governor-General in Council.

2. Settlements shall be made in the manner prescribed by the Regulations by the Collectors or Deputy Collectors subject to the Commissioners, the Sadar Board and the Government.

In the settlement proceedings of Mr. Harvey, dated the 21st November 1836, and in the settlement record of the same officer, dated the 29th January 1837, forming part of the survey and settlement of Thana Ramu mentioned above, taluk Shermast [799] Khan was recorded as containing, as then measured, 79 drones 6 kanis 7 gandas 1 kara of hasila land, and 137 drones 14 kanis 18 gandas 1 kara of khila land, aggregating 217 drons 5 kanis 5 gandas 2 karas of land, belonging to the zemindari of the Government, and assessed at the annual revenue of Rs. 659-6-2 (sicca—old jumma) [Rs. 607-14-0 (Company's)] Rs. 1,311-3-5 (Company's), Rs. 607-14-0 being the assessment for the excess hasila land of 37 drones 15 kanis 17 gandas 2 karas, as compared with the survey of 1800.

The kabuliat relied upon by the plaintiff was executed in the office of Mr. Harvey by Sheik Obedulla and others on the 9th November 1836, and bears at the top the following endorsement: "Executed in this office by the within named.—J. I. Harvey, Chittagong Collectorate, 14th November 1836." It contains the following clauses:—

"In the measurement of 1197 Maghiera, 79 drones, 6 kanis 7 gandas 1 kara of hasila land and 137 drones 14 kanis 5 gandas 1 kara of khila land, in all 217 drones 5 kanis 5 gandas (sig) 2 karas of hasila and khila, land in mouza Rajarkal, Thana Ramu, in the noabad mehal, the zemindari of the (East India) Company's Government, known as taluk Shermas Khan, were measured as the milkiat of Sheik Obed, Sheikh Badi-uz-zaman Asalat Khan and Dewan Bibi, maliks. Out of this area, 41 drones 6 kanis 9 gandas 3 karas of land are mentioned in the jummabundi and measurement papers of 1162 Maghi era. We do therefore of our own free will and accord execute this kabuliat and declare as follows :—

“ We will hold as maliks with power to make sale or conveyance 41 drones 9 kanis 9 gandas 3 karas of hasila land on account of the former jummabundi on a jumma of sicca Rs. 659-6-2 as sicca Rs. 15-14-16 gandas per drone and also 37 drones 15 kanis 7 gandas 2 karas of hasila land on (a jumma of) Company's Rs. 607-14-0 at Rs. 16 per drone, the whole amount of revenue being Rs. 1,267-4-2 in sicca and Company's coin which we will pay in proper time according to the terms of the jummabundi and the kistibundi, and we will appropriate the proceeds of the said property, and our descendants, generation after generation, will continue to do the same. For any quantity of cultivation-land, which may be found in our possession at the time of the next measurement, we will pay jumma at the above rate along with that aforesaid taluk.”

In the settlement proceedings of Mr. Harvey, dated the 21st November 1836, above referred to, it was also stated that there were 26 drones 8 kanis 9 gandas 2 karas of bat, or culturable [800] fallow land in the taluk knoabad in dispute, on account of which, Rs. 209-6-5 were remitted for three years only from 1198 Maghi to 1200 Maghi. It appeared, however, that the plaintiff and his predecessors had up to the date of the present suit all along paid the annual rent of Rs. 1,106-8-6, never the full amount of Rs. 1,311-3-5, the difference being attributed by the plaintiff to the said remission.

In 1888 and 1890, the Government of Bengal ordered a survey to be made and a record of rights to be prepared in respect of lands situate in old Thana Ramu, under section 101 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A record of rights of mouza Rajarkal was accordingly completed and finally published in 1894 ; and the Revenue Officer, having held that the term of the plaintiff's mehal had expired, offered to resettle with the plaintiff 86 drones 10 kanis 6 gandas 1 kara of hasila land and 45 drones 2 kanis 10 gandas of khila land at an annual rent of Rs. 1,474, failing which, the lands were to be settled with other people. Hence the present suit.

The District Judge dismissed the suit, and the plaintiff appealed to the High Court. The appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench consisting of RAMPINI and HENDERSON, JJ. The Judges having differed in opinion, the decree appealed against was affirmed and the appeal dismissed under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff then preferred an appeal under section 15 of the Letters Patent.

Mr. Hill, Babu Aukhoy Coomar Banerjee, and Babu Jatramohan Sen, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul), Mr. Woodroffe, Babu Ram Charan Mitter, and Babu Lal Mohan Dass, for the Respondent.

The judgment of the Court (MACLEAN, C.J., PRINSEP, J., and BANERJEE, J.) was delivered by

Maclean, C.J. (PRINSEP and BANERJEE, JJ., concurring).—This appeal arises out of a suit brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council by the plaintiff, appellant, to establish his title to certain lands, and to obtain certain declarations, the [801] most important of which are that the said lands are included in plaintiff's taluk Shermast Khan, and that the Government has no right to resume any lands of the said taluk, or to assess any rent on the same, otherwise than under the terms of a certain kabuliat of the 9th of November 1836.

The material allegations upon which the plaintiff bases his right to the reliefs claimed are, that taluk Shermast Khan is the purchased ancestral property of the plaintiff ; that the taluk has been in existence from before the Decennial

Settlement; and in 1162 Maghi, that is 1800, a jummabundi was made by which 41 odd drones of land of the said taluk were assessed at Rs. 15-14-16 gandas per drone and a jumma of 659-6-2 pies was fixed: that in 1197 Maghi, that is 1835, the taluk was measured again and found to contain 79 odd drones of hasila or culturable lands, and 137 odd drones of waste land, and Government on the 9th of November 1836 took from the taludar a kabuliat fixing the jumma at Rs. 1,267-4-2 pies (in sicca or Company's coin), which was made up of the old jumma of Rs. 659-6-2 sicca and an additional jumma of Rs. 607-14-0 in Company's coin at the rate of Rs. 16 on the excess of 37 odd drones in the culturable area; that the kabuliat contains a stipulation that any additional land that might be found, on future measurement, to have been brought under cultivation was to be assessed at the rate of Rs. 16 a drone; that out of the jumma fixed by the kabuliat, a certain deduction on account of bat khila or waste land being made, the sum of Rs. 1,101-8-6 pies continued to be the jumma payable and was actually paid: that at the recent survey, the mehal was improperly recorded as the khass property of Government, and the plaintiff was, by a notice, dated the 26th July 1892, and by a proceeding, dated the 6th August 1892, required to take a fresh settlement, on the ground of the former settlement having expired; and that these alleged illegal proceedings have endangered the plaintiff's permanent right to taluk Shermast Khan.

The defence, so far as it is necessary to be considered for the purposes of this appeal, was, in substance, a denial of the permanent talukdari right claimed by the plaintiff.

The first Court found for the defendant and dismissed the suit.

[802] The plaintiff preferred an appeal to this Court against the decree of the first Court. that appeal was heard by a Division Bench, and as one member of that Bench, Mr. Justice RAMPINI, was of opinion that the decree appealed against should be affirmed, while the other, Mr. Justice HENDERSON, was of a contrary opinion, the decree was consequently affirmed under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Against the judgment of Mr. Justice RAMPINI, affirming the judgment of the first Court, the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff under section 15 of the Letters Patent.

The points urged in this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff are shortly these: First, that the settlement of 1800 was in confirmation of certain existing talukdari rights, and had the effect of conferring on the plaintiff's predecessor in title a permanent right in the taluk Shermast Khan and in the lands in dispute, as appertaining to that taluk: second, that the kabuliat of the 9th of November 1836 had the same effect; and third that even if the kabuliat alone could not have such effect, it was subsequently ratified by the Government through its officers, and even if not ratified, that the Government have acquiesced in the terms of the kabuliat, and that it is not now open to the Government to resile from those terms. We ought to state that it is no part of the plaintiff's case that the lands in suit, which are claimed as taluk Shermast Khan and as settled at the permanent settlement, formed part of the estate of Joynugger.

Upon the first point it has been urged for the appellant that, by the policy of the British Government (as indicated in the earlier Regulations, such as the preambles to Regulations II and IX of 1793) which was in accordance with the policy of the Mahomedan Government, the property in the suit was declared to be vested in the landholder, and the claim of the Government declared to be limited to a share of the profit in the shape of revenue; that in pursuance of that policy the Government approved the recommendations made by the Board of Revenue for the settlement of the waste lands of Chittagong, which had not been included in any zemindari or turuf, and which were called noabad or newly reclaimed lands ; that the lands comprising taluk [803] Shermast Khan were accordingly settled with the holder thereof ; and that regard being had to these circumstances and to the terms of the Board's recommendation, the settlement of the taluk should be taken to be a perpetual settlement in recognition of pre-existing rights in the talukdar.

On the other hand, it has been contended for the Government that though, in regard to land that is settled with or occupied by any one, the right of the Government may be limited to the revenue, yet unsettled and unoccupied waste land belongs to the Government ; that there is nothing to show that taluk Shermast Khan existed before the Decennial Settlement, and that the settlement of taluk Shermast Khan in 1800 was not under the directions of the Board a perpetual settlement, but came under that head of the directions which recommended temporary settlement.

We are dealing with a state of circumstances and a condition of affairs which are involved in some obscurity, owing to a century having expired since the date of the transactions in question, and there is practically no direct evidence on the matter, either oral or documentary. It must, however, be borne in mind at the outset, that, if the plaintiff sets up as against the Government a permanent or perpetual settlement, it is incumbent upon him to make out that case ; and upon the question of evidence we may perhaps observe that no question has been raised by either party as to the admissibility of the various despatches and correspondence and other documents which have been referred to by both sides and in some sense relied upon by both sides during the course of the argument. Both parties have treated them as admissible and the case has been argued upon that footing.

After carefully considering the arguments on both sides, we are of opinion that unsettled and unoccupied waste land, not being the property of any private owner, must be held to belong to the State. This view is not opposed to the policy of the British Government in India, and is in accordance with such policy as appears from the express language of the preamble of Regulation III of 1828. But it is unnecessary to pursue this discussion, as the holder of taluk Shermast Khan in the kabuliat executed by [804] him on the 9th of November 1836, upon which the plaintiff's case is so strongly based, admits that the taluk is situated " in the noabad mehal, which is the zemindari of the East India Company's Government."

It has, in our judgment, been established that taluk Shermast Khan is not shown to have been in existence from before the Decennial Settlement. The earliest settlement of taluk Shermast Khan, that is mentioned or referred to, is that of 1800 by Mr. Kerr, Collector of Chittagong. We have not before us the papers of 1800, nor was any application made by the plaintiff for the production of these papers, until after he had closed his case, and it may well be that he was not very anxious to have them produced lest they might prejudice his case. It must be remembered that the plaintiff claims a permanent talukdari right, not merely in the 41 odd drones settled as taluk Shermast Khan, at a rent of Rs. 659 odd in 1800, but in an area of 578 odd drones. Be that, however, as it may, we should have felt inclined to give effect to the argument that, from the proved existence of taluk Shermast Khan in 1800, a reasonable presumption arose in favour of its existence before that date, were it not for the fact that, as appears from the settlement proceedings of Mr. Harvey, Collector of Chittagong, dated the 21st of November 1836, which is the earliest document showing the existence of the taluk in 1262 Maghi or 1800 A. D., the taluk had no existence in 1150 Maghi or 1788 A. D., there being no mention of it, though there is mention of certain other lands specified as lakhiraj in the name of Shermast Khan in the survey of 1788, which was the next preceding survey and of which the particulars are given in the proceedings. And it may be noticed that in the survey proceedings of 1162 Maghi (A. D. 1800), a distinction is drawn between noabad lands such as those now in suit, and lakhiraj lands. The interval between 1788 and 1800 was not long, and it is not suggested that there was any survey or settlement between these two dates. It cannot, therefore, be reasonably inferred that taluk Shermast Khan was formed before 1800.

Nor can the directions of the Board of Revenue under which Mr. Kerr acted, on settling taluks in 1800, warrant our holding [805] that the settlement of taluk Shermast Khan was a settlement in perpetuity. Those directions which have been copiously referred to on both sides from the abstract given of them in the report of the case of Vakeel of Government v. Rajesree Debeu (2 Sel. Rep., S. D. A., New Ed., 199) will be found at pp. 349 and 350 of the Paper Book.

These directions, as we gather from the memorandum of Mr. Walters, dated the 5th of November 1837 (Ex. D.) para. 8 and from Mr. Cotton's note, para. 6 (p. 222 of the Paper Book) which were referred to on both sides, were issued in 1796 or 1797; so that the latest measurement before they were issued was the measurement of 1788, and the only lands that could come under the first description referred to in the above extract, would be lands measured in 1788, all lands not covered by the measurement of that year being included in the second description. Now the lands of taluk Shermast Khan were not included in that measurement, for the measurement papers are silent as to them, and so they did not fall under the first description, and the direction for the grant of a perpetual pottah could not apply to them. It was argued for the appellant that the land of taluk Shermast Khan should be taken as coming under the first description as having been permanently settled, and, as being land which "had been reduced to cultivation since the last measurement," that is, the measurement of 1788, and that it could not come under the second description because it was settled, not in small portions but as in one large area, and the rent was made payable not after three years but at once, which could not have been the case if the land had been of the second description. The first branch of this argument is, in our opinion, unsound. The only lands that could come under the first description, as being lands which had been reduced to cultivation since the last measurement, are those which had already been included in the measurement of some taluk, but which had not been assessed owing to their not having been brought under cultivation, and the land settled as taluk Shermast Khan in 1800 was not of this class. As to the second branch of the argument, if the fact of the land being a large area of 41 drones, and being assessed with the rent of Rs. 659 odd payable at once, militates [806] somewhat against the view of its being temporarily settled as land of the second description, the fact of its being re-measured and re-assessed in 1176 Maghi, that is in 1814, as a smaller area of 29 drones for a smaller rent of Rs. 460 odd (as appears from the settlement proceeding of 1836, Ex. I, p. 15), and the fact again of the rent being changed from Rs. 1,311-3-5 to Rs. 1,101-8-6 (see Ex. I, para. 16 and the plaint, para. 4) and of the rate being changed from Rs. 15-14-16 sicca to Rs. 16 Company's coin (see kabuliat Ex. II] and Ex. I, para. 13), are wholly inconsistent with the theory of a perpetual settlement of the taluk in 1800.

The first contention of the appellant must, therefore, fail; in other words the plaintiff has failed to establish a perpetual settlement in 1800.

The second contention of the appellant, namely, that the kabuliat of the 9th of November 1836 conferred on the holder of taluk Shermast Khan a permanent talukdari right in respect of certain lands, would be well founded, if the kabuliat amounted to a binding contract between the talukdar and the Government. The kabuliat doubtless provides that the talukdar will hold the land of the taluk, generation after generation, on payment of the stipulated rent, and of such additional rent, at the fixed rate, as may be payable on account of any additional land that may be subsequently found by measurement to have been brought under cultivation. But how does this kabuliat amount to a contract binding on the Government? It was no doubt executed by the holder of taluk Shermast Khan for the time being, and it was executed in the office of the Collector, Mr. Harvey, as the note at the top of the document shows; but there was no execution or acceptance by the Government of the terms of this kabuliat or by any duly authorized officer of the Government. It was an offer on the part of the owner for the time being of the taluk in question, and nothing more. No doubt Mr. Harvey recommended the grant of permanent pottahs to all noabad talukdars (see Mr. Walters' Memorandum, Exhibit D, p. 45), but it is amply clear that this view not only did not find favour with the Government, but was distinctly repudiated by it. It is equally clear Mr. Harvey had no authority to bind the Government in the matter. The settlement by Mr. Harvey was made [807] under Regulation VII of 1822, which had been extended to the whole of the Bengal Presidency by Regulation IX of 1825, and both by general law (see Regulation III of 1822, section 5, clause 1 and Regulation VII of 1822 section 7, clause 1), and by the special instructions issued for the guidance of Settlement Officers (see Exhibit H, para. 1) no settlement could be binding on the Government unless confirmed by the Governor-General in Council. The proceedings of Mr. Harvey were in the ordinary course submitted to Government, along with a Memorandum by Mr. Walters (see Exhibit I and Exhibit D), but the Government by its letter, dated the 19th April 1838, Exhibit C, refused to sanction any perpetual settlement, and assented to the granting of pottahs for 30 years only. The kabuliat cannot be regarded as conferring any permanent rights on the talukdar, it does not represent any contract between the talukdar and the Government.

Then it is contended, and this contention was accepted as well founded by Mr. Justice HENDERSON, that though the kabuliat standing alone, might not be sufficient to confer any permanent rights on the talukdar, yet, by reason of ratification or acquiescence on the part of the Government, as evidenced by the acts and conduct of its officers, the talukdar must be held to have acquired the permanent rights referred to in the kabuliat. Ratification is one thing, acquiescence is another, and though they have been much intermingled in the argument, it will be preferable to deal with them separately.

What then are the acts and conduct of the officers of the Government, which are relied upon as constituting ratification of the kabuliat on behalf of the Government? In dealing with this question, it must be borne in mind that "the acts of a Government officer," as was pointed out by the Privy Council in The Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Vencata Narrainapah, (1860) 8 Moore's I. A., 500 (554), "bind the Government only when he is acting in the discharge of a certain duty within the limits of his authority, or if he exceed that authority, when the Government, in fact or in law directly or by implication, ratifies the excess."

We are invited to infer this ratification from the following circumstances:

(1) The omission of the officers of the Government [808] to issue the istahar or proclamation which the Collector of Chittagong was, by the Commissioner's letter of the 16th June 1838, Exhibit E, (ante p. 797) directed to publish, intimating that the settlement of Thana Ramu (which included taluk Shermast Khan) had been confirmed only for thirty years, and their omission to give any intimation to the holder of taluk Shermast Khan that his kabuliat was not accepted by the Government; (2) their strong expressions of opinion in favour of the permanent rights of noabad talukdars, as expressed in their official correspondence.

With regard to the alleged omission to issue the istahar or proclamation, which the Commissioner directed the Collector to publish, it is contended for the appellant, that, as the publication of the istahar is not proved, its publication ought not to be presumed, seeing there was great disinclination on the part of the Collectorate officers, including the Collector himself, to intimate to the talukdars the refusal of Government to sanction a perpetual settlement as is shown by Mr. Scott's letter of April 1842 to the Commissioner (see ante, p. 797). It is further urged that, if the publication of the istahar was thus purposely omitted by the officers of Government, the holder of taluk Shermast Khan was led to believe, and to act upon the belief, that the permanent settlement embodied in the kabuliat of the 9th November 1836 was sanctioned, and the Government ought to be held precluded from questioning the existence of the permanent right referred to in the kabuliat.

We are of opinion that this argument cannot prevail. The direction of the Commissioner to publish the istahar or proclamation was conveyed in his letter of the 16th June 1838 (ante p. 797) to Mr. Raikes, the Collector of Chittagong, and there is absolutely nothing to show that Mr. Raikes evinced any disinclination to publish the proclamation, or that it was not duly published. We are invited to say that the officer in charge in 1838 neglected to do his duty, in publishing the proclamation, because his successor in 1842 four years afterwards expressed to his superior officer an opinion adverse to the policy of sending for the talukdars to execute revised engagements. Having regard to the presumption in favour of the due performance of official acts, we [809] are of opinion that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the publication of the istahar in question must be and ought to be presumed. Moreover, though, perhaps, it is unnecessary to follow this up, the disinclination of Mr. Scott related to sending for the talukdars to execute revised engagements, and when he was in reply directed by the Commissioner, Sir Henry Ricketts, to give due intimation to the talukdars, as "it would be wrong to allow a talukdar to remain quietly in possession, and spend his money under the impression that his lease was in perpetuity" (see ante, pp. 797, 798), Mr. Scott replied (see ante, p. 798) "as to the people being under the impression that the assessment is in perpetuity, I have never heard it advanced by any one, and it is opposed to all their past experience." This indicates that, in Mr. Scott's opinion at any rate, no impression had been created in the mind of the people that permanent rights had been created. It is extremely improbable that the talukdars were not aware that their kabuliats and assessments had to be submitted for the sanction of the Government, and that being so, that they would not inquire whether such sanction had or had not been granted. There is nothing to indicate that the officers of the Government did anything to lead the holder of taluk Shermast Khan to believe that the kabuliat of the 9th November 1836 had been accepted by the Government, or that a permanent settlement had been sanctioned by the Government. Even if the officers of the Government had induced any such belief, their conduct was in violation, and not in discharge, of their duty as such officers, and being in direct contravention of the express orders of Government, could not bind the Government in any way.

There are no doubt strong expressions of opinion by certain local officers of the Government, especially Mr. Lowis and Mr. Cotton (see pages 264 and 277 of the Paper Book) in favour of the creation of permanent rights in noabad talukdars generally, and criticising adversely the policy of the Government in this matter; but these views were never accepted by the Government, and can have no real effect upon the question whether or not permanent rights were created.

We now pass to the last question, that of acquiescence. We are asked to say that the Government has acquiesced in the terms [810] of the kabuliat, by accepting the rent thereby reserved after the expiration of the 30 years running from 1836. In the first place the rent was paid, not according to the terms of the kabuliat, which fixed the amount at Rs. 659-6-2 sicca and Company's Rs. 607-14-0, but at the rate of Rs. 1,101-8-6. This is admitted in the plaint (paragraph 4). There was then no acceptance of rent according to the terms of the kabuliat.

But in dealing with this question, one must bear in mind that, when the lease of a particular taluk determines it is not the practice of the Government to, at once, make a fresh or revised settlement of that particular taluk, but to deal with the district generally, and until the re-settlement of the district can be dealt with, to continue to accept the rent previously paid in respect of any particular taluk. It often takes, as in this case—the case of a large and wild district in Chittagong—many years before the Government can be sufficiently advised by its executive officers as to the terms of a re-settlement, and in the meantime it accepts the old rent. To say that this is tantamount to an acquiescence on the part of the Government that a previous settlement is to be regarded as creating permanent rights, does not strike us as a well founded conclusion. In our opinion no case of ratification or acquiescence has been established against the Government, such as to preclude it from saying that no permanent rights have been created under the kabuliat of the 9th November 1836.

The contentions urged for the appellant, therefore, all fail, and this appeal must consequently be dismissed, and the decree of the District Judge dismissing the plaintiff's suit affirmed with costs.

We cannot, however, part with this case without expressing our deep regret, without desiring to impugn his impartiality, that the District Judge of Chittagong should have thought fit, after the plaint had been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to transfer the case to himself to be tried, and then to try it. In 1884, as an executive officer of the Government, he had enquired into and reported upon those very noabad settlements, and in his report had expressed an opinion distinctly adverse to [811] the asserted rights of the plaintiffs; and notwithstanding this, and the urgent objection of the plaintiffs, he elected at the instance of the Government to try the case, which, we understand, is a test case, and involving a very large amount of money. His judgment under such circumstances can be of but little value, and we express our surprise, equally with our regret, that such a course should have been adopted.

Prinsep, J.—I concur.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion.

PRESENT :

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

F. W. Duke, Chairman of the Howrah Municipality.....Defendant
Rameswar Malia.....Plaintiff.*

Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), sections 224, 245 and 246—Acts done in accordance with sections 245 and 246, whether subject to the jurisdiction of a Civil Court—Notice under section 246 whether sufficient for the purpose of the removal of huts in a basti as well as a pucca privy.

Where a Municipality, having proceeded in accordance with sections 245 and 246 of the Bengal Municipal Act, decide that certain works are necessary, that conclusion, in the absence of malâ fides or fraud or considerations of that nature, cannot be questioned in a Civil Court.

The action of the Municipality, so far as a privy was concerned, was held not to be ultra vires, although in the notice issued in accordance with section 246 of the Bengal Municipal Act they directed the plaintiff to remove, not only certain huts, but also a pucca privy inasmuch as the Municipality had a right to require him to remove the privy under section 224 of the Act.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff against the Howrah Municipality for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to a basti in the town of Howrah, and also for a declaration that the defendant Municipality had no right to enforce the construction of a road through the basti by demolishing huts [812] and a pucca privy situated on the land in dispute. The allegation of the plaintiff was that the Chairman of the Howrah Municipality had improperly issued a notice upon him under section 246 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884) for the construction of a new road through his basti land; that on the receipt of the said notice he, the plaintiff, made an application to the Chairman stating that there was no necessity for the construction of the road mentioned in the notice; but that the application was rejected and a fresh notice was issued requiring the plaintiff to remove the tiled huts and the pucca privy, and to construct the new road through the basti. Hence the suit.

The defence (inter alia) was that the Commissioners of the Howrah Municipality having been satisfied from the report of the Officiating Sanitary Commissioner of Bengal, that the proposed sanitary improvements were necessary in the basti, at a meeting held on the 7th December 1893 resolved that the said basti was, by reason of the manner in which the huts were crowded together, attended with risk of disease to the inhabitants, and directed the locality to be inspected by two Medical Officers as required by section 245 of the Bengal Municipal Act; and that in pursuance of the said resolution the said basti was inspected by the Civil Surgeon of Howrah and the Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Western Bengal Circle, who submitted their report on the 19th April 1894, and upon receipt of the said report they (the Municipal Commissioners) directed notices to issue upon the owners of the land. The defendants further contended that the pucca privy in question did not belong to the plaintiff, but to their tenants of the basti who were served with a notice under section 224 of the Act to remove the said privy.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2188 of 1897, against the decree of Babu Abinash Chunder Mitter, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 23rd of July 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Debendra Bijoy Bose, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 26th of March 1896.

The Munsif found that the road was not necessary, and that the Municipality had no right to enforce the construction of the road in question and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court.

Against this decision the Chairman of the Municipality appealed to the High Court.

[813] Babu Mohendra Nath Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Shiba Prosonno Bhattacharjee for the Respondent.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—This is a suit, in effect, to restrain the defendant, as Chairman of the Municipality at Howrah, from acting under the resolutions of the Board passed under the following circumstances.

The plaintiff is the owner of certain basti land within the jurisdiction of the Municipality, and the Municipality, in 1893, having ascertained that the sanitary condition of these bastis was very unsatisfactory, appointed the Officiating Sanitary Commissioner to make a report to them upon the matter, and it is clear from the 8th resolution passed at a meeting of the Commissioners held on Thursday, the 7th December 1893, that the Commissioners, in meeting assembled, were satisfied from the report of the Officiating Sanitary Commissioner, that the existing block of huts in the Bengal Babu basti, within the Howrah Municipality, was, by reason of the manner in which the huts were crowded together, attended with risk of disease to the inhabitants or to the neighbourhood, and being unanimously of that opinion, they resolved that the locality be inspected by two medical officers, namely, the Civil Surgeon of Howrah and a gentleman to be nominated by the Sanitary Commissioner, who should make a report under section 245 of the Municipal Act, Bengal Act III of 1884. Accordingly two medical officers were appointed, and they made a report. Without going into the details of the report it is sufficient to say that the medical officers recommended that certain things should be done, and, amongst others, that a road should be made through this basti. On the 17th May 1894, that report was read at a meeting of the Municipal Commissioners, and it was duly proposed and seconded that the owners of the land on which the huts stood should be required, under the provisions of section 246 of the Act, to carry out and execute, within four months, all the works as specified in the report. That motion was carried unanimously, and in pursuance of that motion, the plaintiff was required to execute the works in [814] question. In my opinion, in the course which the Commissioners adopted, they have complied with the provisions of sections 245 and 246 of the Municipal Act, Bengal Act III of 1884.

As a consequence of the notice which he received to carry out the works mentioned in the report, the plaintiff instituted this suit on the 25th July 1895, and, as I understand, obtained from the Munsif an ex parte injunction in effect restraining the Municipality from proceeding under their resolution. It has not transpired when, actually, in point of date, the notice to do this work was served upon the plaintiff, nor is it explained why there was so long a delay between the date of the resolution in May 1894 and the filing of the suit in July 1895. I feel some surprise, however, that the Munsif should, under the circumstances, have made an ex parte order, and greater surprise, that when the defendant applied to discharge that order, instead of listening to the application, he should have ordered it to stand over until the trial of the suit. In the absence of any explanation, that does not strike me as a proper method of procedure, nor consistent with the principles upon which injunctions in such cases ought to be granted. The practical and unsatisfactory result has been that, though the report by the medical officers described the matter as one of urgency, nothing has been done for nearly four or five years, during which period this insanitary basti has been allowed to continue in its insanitary condition. This quiescent state of matters has, doubtless, been very satisfactory to the plaintiff, who has thus escaped complying with the direction of the Municipality for some years, but I am surprised that the Municipality should have allowed the matter to linger on in this unsatisfactory manner.

The plaintiff's case is based upon the view that there is no necessity for the construction of the works directed, least of all the construction of the new road. That appears again and again in the plaint, and the learned Judge in the Lower Appellate Court has gone into the question of necessity, and has arrived at the conclusion that the works directed by the Municipality to be executed were not necessary. That is the basis of his decision. In this he has erred, and he [816] ought not to have gone into the question of necessity or no necessity. The question of necessity or otherwise is left by the Legislature to the decision of the Municipality, and though, no doubt, a Civil Court can restrain a Corporation from doing anything ultra vires, the question of necessity is not to be so decided. Subject to what I will say in a moment as to the pucca privy, no question of ultra vires is suggested against the Municipality, nor is it suggested in the plaint that the provisions of sections 245 and 246 have not been duly complied with, or that the works required are outside the terms of the report, which was admitted in the first Court. If the Municipality decide, having proceeded in accordance with the provisions of the above sections, that certain works are necessary, that conclusion, in the absence of malá fides or fraud or considerations of that nature cannot be successfully challenged and cannot be gone into in a Civil Court, otherwise every person, who is directed by a Municipal body to do certain things upon sanitary grounds, could at once institute a suit in a Civil Court, and challenge the necessity of the works directed. This is not what the Legislature contemplated, nor is it reasonable to suppose that any such course could have been contemplated. If it were otherwise, the delay in the present case supplies an apt illustration of how impracticable it would be for Municipalities to control sanitary matters within their jurisdiction. The judgment then of the Court below proceeds upon an entirely erroneous principle, and must be reversed.

But it has been argued that the action of the Municipality was ultra vires, because in their notice they directed the plaintiff to remove, not only the huts, but that which is spoken of as a pucca privy, and that they had no power under section 246 of the Act to direct an owner to do that, because a pucca privy is not a hut. The Municipality did no doubt by their notice require the plaintiff to remove this privy in order that the road might be made, and they can require him to do this under section 224 of the Act, and they did also serve the occupier under the latter section. When they served their notice on the plaintiff, although it purports to be a notice under section 246, the Municipality clearly had a right to require him to remove the privy under section 224. [816] They had power then, under the Act generally, to require this privy to be removed, and I am not prepared to hold that, because they entitled their notice only under the one section, instead of the two, the whole proceeding is ultra vires. Besides, no such case is definitely raised by the pleadings. Again, the Municipality, if they be so advised, can now serve a notice on the plaintiff under section 224, for nothing as yet has been done.

Upon these grounds the view taken by both the Courts below is wrong, and the appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts reversed, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Banerjee, J.—I am of the same opinion. The appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to the land in dispute, and that the defendant is not entitled to make a road over that land by demolishing huts and a pucca privy situated thereon, and that, if he is entitled at all to do so, he is so entitled only upon payment of compensation to the plaintiff. The allegation upon which the suit is based is shortly that the defendant, the Chairman of the Howrah Municipality, improperly issued on the plaintiff a notice under section 246 of Bengal Act III of 1884 for the construction of a new basti road after removal of the plaintiff's pucca privy and certain tiled huts, when there was no necessity for the construction of any such new road. The defence was that the Municipality, after going through the preliminary steps required to be taken by section 245 of Bengal Act III of 1884, issued in due form the notice under section 246 of the Act, which is referred to in the plaint; and that as regards the pucca privy, the defendant, under the belief that it belonged to the tenants, issued a notice on them under section 224 of the Act, for the removal thereof.

The parties went to trial on the three following issues:—First: Whether the suit is maintainable in its present form. Second: Does the privy referred to belong to the plaintiff? And has the defendant Municipality any right to cause its removal, without the plaintiff's consent? Third: Has the defendant Municipality any right to make the road on the plaintiff's land [817] as alleged without the plaintiff's consent, and without giving any reasonable compensation for the same, under the circumstances of the case?

The first Court found for the plaintiff upon all these issues, and it was of opinion that the basti road in question was not necessary to be constructed. On appeal by the defendant, the Lower Appellate Court has confirmed the first Court's judgment on the grounds on which it is based, and on the further ground that the report of the medical officers, appointed by the Municipality under section 245 of Bengal Act III of 1884, was inadmissible in evidence without strict proof thereof.

On second appeal it is contended for the Municipality: First, that the Courts below are wrong in holding that it was open to the Civil Court to determine, whether the road in question was necessary or not: and, secondly, that the Lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the report of the medical officers appointed by the Municipality was not admissible in evidence, because it was not proved, when no question was raised as to the fact of such a report having been made.

On the other hand it is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the Courts below were right in holding that they had jurisdiction to go into the question of the necessity of the road, and that the Municipality, so far as it required the plaintiff to remove the pucca privy, under sections 245 and 246 of the Bengal Municipal Act, has acted beyond the limits of its statutory power, the only power given by those sections being a power of directing the removal of huts.

The first question raised by the learned Vakil for the defendant appellant is a very important question. There can be no doubt that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to try the question whether the Municipality had been acting within the limits of its statutory power. It is conceded, and very properly conceded, by the learned Vakil for the appellant that that is so. But then it does not follow that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to try the question whether the Municipality, when it was acting within the limits of its statutory power, was right in its judgment that a certain road should be opened.

[818] The law authorising the Municipality to act in this matter is contained in sections 245 and 246 of Bengal Act III of 1884. Section 245 provides that "whenever the Commissioners at a meeting are satisfied—" I am quoting only so much of the section as is applicable to this case—"by report of competent persons, that any existing block of huts within the Municipality is, by reason of the manner in which the huts are constructed or crowded together, attended with risk of disease to the inhabitants, or the neighbourhood, they may cause the locality to be inspected by two medical officers, who shall make a report in writing on the sanitary condition of the said block of huts, and shall specify, if necessary, in the said report, the huts which should be removed and the roads which should be constructed, with a view to the removal of the said risk of disease;" and then section 246 provides that on receipt of the said report the Commissioners may serve the owner of the land with a notice requiring him to effect the improvements considered to be necessary, and if such notice is not complied with, the Commissioners may themselves execute the works.

In the plaint the plaintiff does not say that the necessary preliminaries have not been complied with. What the plaintiff urges in his plaint is, that there was no necessity for the construction of the new road. And he further urges that the Municipal Commissioners had no power to direct the removal of the pucca privy. The Courts below have in their judgment said that the report of the Sanitary Commissioner, and that of the two medical officers, upon which the Municipality took action in the present case, were not sufficient to justify any action being taken.

I do not think that this view is correct. Reading the portions of the report of the Sanitary Commissioner, which are given in the judgment of the first Court, I find that the requirements of section 245 are fully satisfied. What the Courts below have said in effect is, that although the Commissioners say that they were satisfied upon the report that there existed a block of huts within the Municipality which, by reason of the manner in which the huts were constructed or crowded together, was attended with risk of disease to the inhabitants, they ought not to have been so satisfied if they had exercised their judgment properly. But the [819] law makes them the judges upon the point. So long as they had the materials before them it was for them, and them alone, to say whether, upon those materials they were satisfied that there was risk of the kind the section contemplates. So again, upon the report of the two medical officers appointed by them being submitted, if there was such a report, it was for the Commissioners, and for them alone, to say whether there was any necessity for constructing the road such as they directed the plaintiff in the present case to construct.

The view I take is not only consonant with reason and common sense, but is also supported by authority. I may refer to the observations of Lord CRANWORTH in Stockton and Darlington Railway Co. v. Brown, (1860) 9 H. L. C., 246, and the judgment of Sir GEORGE JESSEL in Wilkinson v. Hull Railway and Dock Co., (1882) L. R., 20 Ch. D., 323 (329).

I now come to the consideration of the second question raised in this appeal, namely, whether the Lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the report of the medical officers appointed by the Municipality was inadmissible in evidence. The report was put in, it was admitted, by the first Court, and no objection is taken in the plaint to the fact of any such report having been made. That being so, I do not think it was open to the Lower Appellate Court to throw out the report on the simple ground that it had not been strictly proved.

The learned Vakil for the appellant further contended that the certified copy of the report, which was put in in this case, was admissible under section 74, sub-section (1), clause (ii) of the Evidence Act. The question, whether it was so admissible or not, is not altogether free from difficulty, but in the view I take it becomes unnecessary to determine that question.

It remains only to consider the question with reference to the pucca privy. Upon this point I have nothing to add to what has been said by the learned Chief Justice except this, that if a notice under section 224 of Bengal Act III of 1884, under which the Commissioners had full power to direct the removal of the privy, [820] had required any preliminaries other than those that are necessary to be complied with before the issue of a notice under section 246, then the absence of compliance with such preliminaries might have stood in the way of our accepting the present notice under section 246 as sufficient; but as that is not the case, I do not think that we ought to consider the present notice as insufficient or invalid.

MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Mohanund Mondul.....Plaintiff

versus

Nafur Mondul and othersDefendants.*

Hindu Law—De facto manager—Sale by a de facto manager of minor's property for legal necessity and for his benefit, whether valid.

A de facto manager of an infant's estate has, in case of necessity or for the benefit of the minor, power to sell his property.

THIS appeal arose out of an action brought by the plaintiff for recovery of possession of certain immoveable property, on establishment of title thereto. The plaintiff's allegation was that the disputed land was his ancestral jote; that his father was in possession of the said jote as owner till his death; that on his father's death the plaintiff became the owner by right of inheritance while he was a minor; that the defendants acquired no title by their alleged purchase of the said jote from his paternal grandmother, who had no right to sell it, inasmuch as he was a minor at the time of the sale; and that the defendants without any title to the disputed land kept him out of possession for six or seven years previous to the suit. Hence this suit was brought by the plaintiff on his attaining majority.

The defence (inter alia) was that the suit was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within three years from the date of the plaintiff's attaining majority; that the land in suit was sold to the defendants for the benefit of the plaintiff to [821] pay off certain debts by his grandmother and natural guardian during his infancy, therefore the sale was a valid one.

The Court of First Instance, having held that the transfer to the defendants was made by the lawful guardian of the plaintiff for his benefit, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the District Judge affirmed the decision of the lower Court.

Against this judgment the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C.J.—The point we have to decide upon this appeal is a short one, and not in my opinion a very difficult one.

The suit is one to set aside the sale of a certain property effected under the following circumstances: The sale was effected by the grandmother of the plaintiff, who was then a minor, and it is the minor, now of age, who is seeking to set the transaction aside. The grandmother has not been found by the Lower Appellate Court to have been the duly appointed guardian of the infant, though the Munsif found that she was, and, for the purpose of this decision, therefore, I will take it that she was only the de facto manager of the minor's property, and that, as de facto manager of that property, she sold the property in dispute, in order to pay off a debt secured by mortgage over other parts of the minor's property, upon which mortgage a very high rate of interest was running.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1762 of 1897, against the decree of L. Palit, Esq. Officiating District Judge of Moorshidabad, dated the 4th of August 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Nogendra Nath Dhur, Munsif of Jungipur, dated the 24th of March 1897.

The lower Court, upon the authority of the Privy Council case of Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Munraj Koonverce, (1856) 6 Moo. I. A., 412, has decided that the sale was a good one, and that the de facto manager, even though not de jure manager, had power to sell the property.

It is urged, on behalf of the appellant, that that decision applies only to the case of a mortgage by a de facto manager, and not to an out and out sale of the property. I need not dwell upon the obvious distinction between the two, nor point out that from one point [822] of view, a mortgage, inasmuch as an opportunity of redeeming is reserved, may be the more beneficial to the minor; though, on the other hand, if the money can only be raised at a high rate of interest, it may be more beneficial to sell a portion of the estate to pay off existing mortgages than to go on mortgaging at such high rate of interest.

I do not think that the distinction sought to be drawn is well founded. Though no doubt the case cited was one of mortgage, and not of sale, the principle of that decision is, that a de facto manager has, under the Hindu law, the power to bind the estate, if he is acting honestly, and the transaction is an honest transaction and one for the purpose of saving or benefiting the estate. I can see no principle upon which it can be successfully urged that he can only do this by way of mortgage, when the circumstances of the estate may be such as to make it obvious that it might be more beneficial to that estate to do it by way of sale. If he have the power to bind the estate, it is difficult to see why he should not have the power of deciding, assuming the most absolute bona fides in the transaction, how best, in the interest of the estate, the matter can be dealt with as between a sale and a mortgage. I am assuming of course that the circumstances would support the transaction, had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager. I notice that in Mr. Mayne's Book on Hindu Law, section 196, he says: "When the act is done by a person who is not his guardian, but who is the manager of the estate in which he has an interest, he will equally be bound, if under the circumstances the step taken was necessary, proper, or prudent." And he cites as his authority for that proposition, the case in the Privy Council, to which I have just referred. Mr. Mayne is a careful and experienced author, but he draws no such distinction as we are now invited to make. If there were this distinction, seeing that as often as not a manager sells instead of mortgaging, it is curious that there should be no decision upon the point, for the case must have occurred again and again. This absence of judicial authority suggests that the point has not been regarded as open to serious argument. On the contrary, the cases of Dorab Aly Khan v. Abdool Azeez, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 229, [823] and Gunga Pershad v. Phool Singh, (1868) 10 W. R., 106; 10 B. L. R., 368, note, tend directly in the opposite direction. I am consequently against the appellant upon the point I have been discussing.

On the second point, whether there was legal necessity for the sale, the Judge in the Court below has found that there was such necessity; and, although he has not stated the facts from which he draws that inference, and perhaps it would have been more satisfactory if he had done that seeing that he was affirming the judgment of the Munsif, it is not unreasonable to conclude that he took the same view of the facts upon this question as the Munsif had done.

The appeal fails on both points, and must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.— I am of the same opinion. The suit was brought by the plaintiff-appellant, to recover possession of certain immoveable property on the allegation that the defendants were holding possession of the same by setting up an unauthorised alienation from the plaintiff's grandmother during his minority.

The defence was that the sale by the plaintiff's grandmother during his minority was one which was authorised by law, and that the defendants purchased the property in good faith for value and were entitled to retain possession.

The Courts below have found that the plaintiff's grandmother, by whom the conveyance in favour of the defendants was executed, was the de facto manager of the plaintiff's estate during his minority, and that the alienation by her was made under necessity and for the benefit of the minor's estate; and they have accordingly dismissed the suit.

In second appeal it is contended for the plaintiff-appellant, that the Courts below are wrong in holding that the principle laid down in the case of Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Munraj Koonweree, 6 Moo. I. A., 412, upon which they have relied, was applicable to this case, as that was a case of mortgage, whereas the present one was a case of sale; and it is further contended that the finding upon the question of necessity is not sufficient to warrant the decree that has been made by the Courts below.

Now it is quite true that in the case of Hunooman Pershad [824] Panday the alienation in question was a mortgage and not a sale; and it is true also that in one respect there is a distinction between a mortgage and a sale, the distinction being that whereas in the case of a mortgage the property may be redeemed and recovered, in the case of a sale the minor loses all chance of recovering the property even upon repayment of the consideration money. But though that is so, is there any reason for holding that the principle that applies to the case of a mortgage by a de facto manager of an infant's estate should not apply to the case of a sale by such manager, even though pressure on the estate or benefit to it was established? I am of opinion that the question must be answered in the negative. The reason why a de facto manager of an infant's estate has been held competent to alienate his property by way of mortgage would, in many cases, hold equally good where the alienation is by way of sale. Indeed, in some cases the reason for the rule in favour of upholding an alienation by a de facto manager of an infant's estate would be satisfied better if the alienation was by way of sale than if it was by way of mortgage, for in some instances, such as in this case, as has been found by the first Court, the sale of a part of the minor's estate may prove more beneficial to him than a mortgage. And it would not therefore be quite reasonable to hold that the power, which the de facto manager in such cases possesses, should be limited to one of creating a mortgage only. Nor is there anything in the Hindu law (upon which some stress was laid in the course of the argument) for drawing any such distinction, for one of the well-known passages authorising alienation by a de facto manager of the property of the minor (I mean paragraphs 28 and 29 of the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section I) speaks of sale as well as mortgage. It is true that that passage has reference to cases of joint property where the de facto manager of the minor's estate possesses some proprietary interest in himself, but that does not in my opinion affect the question, because, so far as the minor's interest is concerned, the right of the co-owner to dispose of it rests only on his power as manager.

Then there is the case of Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojonath Mozumdar, (1879) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 929, in which a sale of a minor's immoveable [825] property by the de facto manager of his estate was upheld by a Full Bench of this Court. It is true that the precise question that is now raised was not raised in that case, but the affirmance of the principle that the de facto manager of a minor's estate has power to sell his immoveable property is necessarily involved in the decision arrived at in that case. In support of the view I take that no distinction in principle can be drawn between the power of a manager of an infant's estate to mortgage and his power to sell, I may also refer to a well-known work on the subject, "The Law relating to Minors" by Mr. Trevelyan, in which it is said at page 164 of the second edition, "No distinction can be drawn between the power to charge and the power to sell, and the need which would justify the exercise of the one would justify that of the other."

Lastly, a distinction was sought to be drawn between the case of the exercise of the power of mortgage or sale by the de facto manager of a minor's estate who was also his natural guardian and the case of a de facto manager who was not his natural guardian according to the Hindu law. Without entering into any discussion as to whether there exists such a distinction, it will be enough in the present case to say that the de facto manager was the paternal grandmother of the minor, his father and mother both being at the time dead. If that was so, it is not questioned, and it cannot be very well questioned, that the de facto manager answers to the description of natural guardian in this case.

On these grounds I am of opinion that upon reason as well as authority the view taken by the Courts below, that the de facto manager of the infant's estate has in case of necessity or for the infant's benefit power to sell his property, is correct.

With regard to the second point, the finding arrived at by the Lower Appellant Court is sufficient in my opinion to warrant the decree that has been made. The judgment of the Lower Appellate Court affirms that of the first Court, and therefore, though it is not very explicit, we may take it that it in substance adopts the view taken by the Munsif with regard to the question of legal necessity.

Voluntary payment—Contract Act (IX of 1872), section 60—Payment by a purchaser of a putni taluk during the pendency of an appeal for setting aside the putni sale—Person interested in the payment of the putni rent—Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819) section 14.

A payment of rent made by the purchaser of a putni taluk, after the decision of the first Court in a suit brought by the defaulting putnidars for the setting aside of the putni sale, by which it was held that the sale was invalid, and during the pendency of an appeal preferred not by the plaintiff, the auction-purchaser, but by the zemindar at whose instance the said sale had been brought about, is not a voluntary payment, inasmuch as he (the plaintiff) is a person interested in the payment of the money, within the meaning of section 69 of the Contract Act.

Bmdubashini Dass v. Harendra Lal Roy, (1897) J. L. R., 25 Cal., 305, followed.

The remedy which the plaintiff in this case had, after the reversal of the sale, to be reimbursed by the defendant under section 69 of the Contract Act, was held not to be curtailed by the provisions of section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819.

THE plaintiff in this case purchased a putni taluk at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819 in Joist 1299 B. S. (June 1892), and he was in possession of it till Joist 1300 B. S. (June 1893), when the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 instituted a suit against the zemindar and the present plaintiff to set aside the sale, which suit was decreed on the 14th May 1894, and the order setting aside the sale was confirmed by the High Court. During the pendency of that suit the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 (who were the plaintiffs in that suit) made an application under section 501 of the Civil Procedure Code and took possession of the putni taluk on the 25th January 1894 through the Court by ejecting the plaintiffs, and they as well as defendants Nos. 6 to 13, who were [827] their co-sharers, were in possession till the time of the institution of the present action. After the setting aside of the sale by the first Court, the zemindar alone preferred an appeal to the High Court, and during the pendency of the said appeal, proceedings under Regulation VIII of 1819 were taken by him in respect of rent for the year 1301 B. S. (1894) against the plaintiff and the defaulting putnidars. The plaintiff to save his putni right satisfied the demand, and the present action was brought by him to recover the money so paid, either from the defaulting putnidars or from the zemindar.

The defence (inter alia) was that the plaintiff was not entitled to be reimbursed by the defendants, inasmuch as the payment was a voluntary one.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit.

On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decision of the first Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 879 of 1897, against the decree of J. Bradbury, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 17th of February 1897, affirming the decree of Babu Abinash Chunder Mitter, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 6th of May 1896.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court. *

Babu Saroda Churn Mitter, and Babu Haro Kumar Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Churn Mitter (Senior Government Pleader), Dr. Ashutosh Mookerjee, Babu Shiva Prosonno Bhattacharjee, and Babu Jaygopal Ghose, for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.):—

Maclean, C. J.—The principle of the case of Bindubashini Dassi v. Harendra Lal Roy, (1897) I.L.R., 25 Cal., 305, which was recently before this Court, governs the present case, though in the facts there is some distinction.

The defendants are certain putnidars; they defaulted in their rent; the zemindar took proceedings against them; the property was ordered to be sold; it was sold, and the plaintiff, in May 1892, purchased the putni interest at the sale held in pursuance of the order. On the 12th May 1894, the sale was, in a suit instituted for the purpose, set aside; the zemindar alone appealed against that decision, and the plaintiff was a respondent on the appeal. In April 1895, during the pendency of the appeal, the [828] zemindar applied to the plaintiff to pay the rent which had accrued from the 13th April 1894 to November in that year, and in the same month he instituted proceedings against the plaintiff to enforce his rights upon the footing of the non-payment of the rent. On the 16th May 1895, the plaintiff paid the money claimed amounting to Rs. 2,000 or thereabouts. On the 9th August 1895, the appeal was heard and the decision of the Court below setting aside the sale was affirmed. On the 12th December 1895, the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants, the bulk of whom are the putnidars, the only other defendant being the zemindar. He claims to recover the Rs. 2,000 upon the ground that when he made the payment he was a person interested in the payment of the money which the putnidar were bound by law to pay, and that he is entitled to be reimbursed by them.

Both the lower Courts have decided against him; hence this appeal. The first question is, whether the case falls within section 69 of the Contract Act. I think it does. It is difficult to say that, at the time the plaintiff made the payment, he was not interested in that payment which the putnidars were bound to make. If the decision of the lower Court had been reversed by this Court, the plaintiff would have been confirmed in his position as putnidar; and as such would have been liable to pay the rent to the zemindar. No doubt at the time he made the payment it had been held that the sale ought to be set aside, in which case his interest in the putni lease was gone. But at the same time an appeal was pending, and there was the possibility at least of a reversal of the decision. Under these circumstances can it be successfully urged that he was a mere volunteer, and not interested in the payment of the money, which, as matters have eventuated, the present respondents are bound by law to pay? We should be placing a narrow construction upon the section if we acceded to this view. If he had not paid it and the decision had been reversed, he would have run the risk of his putni interest being sold at the suit of the zemindar. The defendants have had the benefit of this payment, if it had not been made, their putni lease might have been again put up [829] for sale at the suit of the zemindar. The principles of justice, equity and good conscience appear to me to demand that the plaintiff should be reimbursed by the defendants, the putnidars.

But it is said that the concluding sentence of the first clause of section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819 virtually bars this suit, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain it, and that he ought to have applied in the previous suit for the reimbursement in question. In point of fact he had made no payment when the suit was before the first Court, though he had when it was before this Court. If the attention of this Court had been directed to the matter, I am not prepared to say that it might not have made an order reimbursing the plaintiff against this payment, or for any other loss he might have sustained, but I am not prepared to say that, when the section speaks only of the Court being careful to indemnify the person paying against all loss, that that is sufficient to deprive the plaintiff of a right to maintain the present suit. The language of the section is not sufficiently precise to justify us in saying that the plaintiff's right to sue for reimbursement is taken away.

In the result, the appeal will be allowed with costs as against the respondents Nos. 1 to 13 and dismissed with costs as against the respondent No. 14. There must be the usual decree for payment of the amount claimed, with the costs of the suit.

Banerjee, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that this case comes within the scope of section 69 of the Contract Act, and is governed by the principle laid down in the cases of Dakhina Mohun Roy v. Sharoda Mohun Roy, (1893), I. L. R., 21 Cal., 142, and Bindubashini Dassi v. Harendra Lal Roy, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 305.

It was contended for the defendants, in the first place, that the plaintiff was not a person interested in the payment of the money in question within the meaning of section 69 of the Contract Act, and that the present case is distinguishable from the cases to which I have just referred, because the payment here was made after the decision of the first Court in the suit for reversal of the putni sale by which it was held that the sale was invalid, and during the pendency of an appeal preferred, not [830] by the plaintiff, the auction-purchaser, but by the zemindar, at whose instance the putni sale had been brought about; and in the second place, it was contended that the suit was barred by the provisions of the first clause of section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819. Then it was, in the third place, contended on behalf of the defendant No. 8, that he ought not to be held liable in any event, as the payment was made by the plaintiff at a time when the putni was in the possession, not of all the putnidar defendants, but of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 only.

I am of opinion that the first contention is not sound, and that the circumstances relied upon do not really distinguish this case from the cases to which reference has been made above, and do not take this case out of the purview of section 69 of the Contract Act. It is quite true that the decision of the first Court in the suit for reversal of the putni sale was in favour of the defaulting putnidars, but that did not preclude the possibility of a contrary decision being arrived at by the Court of Appeal, and the fact of the plaintiff not having been the appellant did not make him any the less a person interested in the payment, when the appeal of the zemindar would, if successful, have inured to the benefit of the plaintiff.

Section 69 of the Contract Act does not require that the person who made the payment should have done anything actively to keep up the interest which he claims. All that is required is, that the payment should be made by a person who is interested in the payment; and the plaintiff was clearly interested in the payment that he made, seeing that if it had not been made and the putni had been sold in consequence, it would have prevented him from reaping the advantage that he might have gained in the event of the success of the zemindar's appeal.

Nor is there much force in the second contention. All that section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819 says, with reference to the point now before us, is this—that "the purchaser shall be made a party in such suits, and upon a decree passing for reversal of the sale, the Court shall be careful to indemnify him against all loss at the charge of the zemindar or other person at whose suit the sale may have been made."

[831] This, no doubt, provides for the auction-purchaser, in the event of reversal of the sale, being indemnified against all loss that may have been sustained by him, and the remedy is to be at the expense of the zemindar at whose instance the sale was brought about. But it does not say that the remedy prescribed is to be the sole remedy to which the auction-purchaser is entitled, notwithstanding that, by virtue of any other provision of law, he may be entitled to a remedy against any other person than the zemindar.

If then section 69 applies to the case, and as I said above it does apply to it, and the plaintiff is, in consequence, entitled to be reimbursed by the defaulting putnidars, who were bound to pay the money, the provisions of section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819, quoted above, cannot, in my opinion, stand in the way of the plaintiff's obtaining such relief. That the defaulting putnidars were liable for the rent, the demand for which was satisfied by the plaintiff's payment, is not disputed, and cannot be disputed. That being so, I do not think that the remedy which the plaintiff has under section 69 of the Contract Act is curtailed by the provisions of section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819 quoted above.

As to the third contention, namely, the one urged on behalf of the defendant No. 8, I do not think that his case can be distinguished from that of the other putnidars, defendants, because he was as much bound by law to pay the rent which was paid by the plaintiff as the other putnidars who had been put in possession under section 501 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no valid reason shown why he should be held not bound by law to pay the arrears of rent due on account of this putni when he claims to be interested in the putni just as much as the other putnidars are. The contentions urged before us on behalf of the respondents in support of the lower Court's judgment therefore all fail.

MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON AND MR. JUSTICE STEVENS.

Hem Chandra Chowdhry.....Plaintiff

versus

Kali Prasanna Bhaduri and others.....Defendants.*

Enhancement of rent—Partition of estates—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sections 7 and 186—Customary rate of rent—Fair and equitable rent—Joint-landlords—Onus of proof—Road-cess returns—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), sections 21 and 32—Bengal Cess Act (Bengal Act IX of 1880), section 95.

In a suit for enhancement of rent of a tenure under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is for the plaintiff to start his case by proving that the existing rate was below the customary rate payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity, or that it was not fair and equitable, before the onus can be shifted to the defendant, to prove that the existing rent was fair and equitable.

A tenure was held under a zemindari, which originally formed one entire estate. The estate was subsequently partitioned by the revenue authorities into four several estates. The rent of the tenure was thereupon allotted proportionately to each of the four estates thus formed, although the land forming the tenure remained undivided. In a suit for enhancement of the rent of the tenure brought by the proprietor of some of the estates, Held, that the effect of the partition of the parent estate was to create separate and distinct tenures out of the original single tenure under the proprietors of each of the estates; that the proprietors of the several estates were not joint landlords of the tenure within the meaning of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and that therefore a suit for enhancement of rent would lie by a proprietor of one of the estates in respect of the rent allotted to his estate.

Surut Soonduree Debva v. Sumneeroodeen Talookdar, (1874) 22 W. R., 530, and Sarat Soondary Dabee v. Anund Mohun Surma Ghuttack, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 273, followed.

Semle:—The statements made by deceased tenants in cess returns filed by them regarding assets of the tenancy are not admissible in evidence under section 32 of the Evidence Act. PERGUNNAH Pukheria Jainsahi in the District of Mymensingh, originally formed one parent estate, which was partitioned by the Revenue authorities into four several estates. One of these estates, namely, mehal No. 122, represents a ten annas [833] share of the original estate, each of the three others representing a two annas share of the original estate. Of these, two, namely, mehals Nos. 4806 and 5513, belong to the plaintiff. Within the parent estate there was an ancient tenure called taluk Madarjani, which comprised a number of mouzas and jalkars. This taluk has now become two distinct tenures, one representing a $13\frac{3}{4}$ annas share, and the other a $2\frac{1}{4}$ annas share of the original tenure. The lands of this taluk were never partitioned by metes and bounds, but its rent was allotted proportionately to each of the four estates aforesaid under which it was held.

These appeals arise out of suit No. 27 of 1890, brought by one Hem Chandra Chowdhry as proprietor of estates Nos. 4806 and 5513, constituting a four annas share of Pergunnah Pukheria, against the defendants as owners of $13\frac{3}{4}$ annas share of the tenure Madarjani, for enhancement of rent payable to the plaintiff. The suit was partially decreed by the Subordinate Judge, and both the plaintiff and some of the defendants appealed from the decree of the Subordinate Judge; appeal No. 391 being preferred by the plaintiff, and appeal No. 392 by defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 14.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Babu Sreenath Das, and Babu Joges Chandra Roy, for the Appellant in appeal 391 and for the Respondents in appeal 392.

Sir Griffith Evans, Babu Sharada Charan Mitter, and Babu Mohini Mohan Chakrabarti, for the Respondents in appeal 391 and for the Appellants in appeal 392.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the arguments :—

For the defendants, Gopal Chunder Das v. Umesh Narain Chowdhry, (1890) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 695; Panchanan Banerji v. Raj Kumar Guha, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 610, and Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Ilum, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 917.

For the plaintiff, Surut Soonduree Debia v. Sumeeroodeen [834] Talookdar, (1874) 22 W. R., 530; Sarat Soondary Dabee v. Anund Mohun Surma Ghuttack, (1879) I. L. R., 5 Cal., 273, and Bissessurt Debi Chowdhraiz v. Hem Chunder Chowdhry, (1886) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 133.

Pergunnah Pakheria Jainsahi originally formed an entire estate, but has now by partition become four estates, one of which represents a 10 annas share and the others each a 2 annas share of the original estate. Subordinate to the original estate there was an ancient tenure called Madarjani, the rent of which was allotted proportionately to each of the four estates, the land remaining undivided. This has now become two tenures, one representing a 13 annas 15 gundas share and the other a 2 annas 5 gundas share of the original tenure. The plaintiff as proprietor of estates Nos. 4806 and 5513, each of which represents a two annas share of the Pergunnah, brought suits No. 29 of 1890 and No. 7 of 1891 to enhance the rent payable to him for his four annas share, and these suits, which were tried together and disposed of in one judgment, have given rise to four appeals, of which Nos. 391 and 392 of 1896 relate to suit No. 27, and Nos. 45 and 46 of 1897 to suit No. 7.

Enhancement is claimed under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the plaintiff's case substantially is that he is entitled to receive as a fair rent a greater share of the tenure-holder's profits. It is not now disputed that the rent of the tenure is enhanceable, and indeed it was held to be so by this Court in its judgment of the 30th November 1888 in suits between the parties now before us. That judgment gives also an account of the almost continuous litigation which has been going on between the proprietors of the estate and the tenure-holders on the question of enhancement. The Subordinate Judge has decreed enhancement in both suits solely on the strength of certain road cess returns put in by the plaintiff, for he has rejected as unreliable the whole of the oral evidence bearing on the rent by the raiyats.

[835] Appeal No. 391 is preferred by the plaintiff and appeal No. 392 by the first three defendants and defendant No. 14 in suit No. 27 for the enhancement of the rent of the 13 annas 15 gundas tenure, and we shall deal first with those appeals. The rent has been enhanced to Rs. 2,386-11-0 after allowing 5 per cent. as collection charges and 20 per cent. as the tenure-holder's profit, and half of that amount has been made payable to the plaintiff as proprietor of one estate and half as proprietor of the other; the enhancement has been graduated so as to take full effect at the end of the year 1301, and the rent has been made payable in four quarterly instalments. The main contentions of the defendants, appellants, are that section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act precludes the plaintiff as one of several joint landlords from maintaining a suit to enhance his share of the rent; that the road cess returns relied on are not evidence against them, and that no ground for enhancement has been established.

We see no force in the first contention. The original arrangement by which there was one tenancy under one holding of landlords came to an end when the parent estate was partitioned, and the effect of the partitions was to create separate and distinct tenancies under the proprietors of each of the estates. It cannot be said that the proprietors of the several estates were joint landlords of the tenure, for the estates were separate and the share of the rent allotted to each formed a portion of the assets of that estate alone. This was the view taken in Sarat Soondary Dabee v. Anund Mohun Surma Ghuttack, (1879) I.L.R., 5 Cal., 273, and Sarat Soonduree Debia v. Sumeeroodeen Talookdar, (1874) 22 W. R., 530. In the cases cited for the appellants there had been no division of the tenancy consequent on the partition of the parent estate. We further think that the effect of this Court's decree of the 30th November 1888 is that the rent of the four annas share of the tenure can be enhanced, but whether the declaration in that decree was intended to relate to the whole tenure or the four annas share of it, we must hold that the suit is maintainable.

[836] The road cess returns are Exhibits 1 to 4 and 6 and 7. None of these were submitted by the appellants, and Exhibits 3, 4, 6 and 7 relate, not to the tenancy under either of the plaintiff's estates, but to the tenancy under estate No. 122, which represent the ten annas share of the pergunnah, and are, we consider on that ground, inadmissible. We cannot hold that there is a separate and distinct tenancy under the plaintiff as proprietor of one estate so as to admit of his enhancing the rent payable to him, and at the same time hold that there is one and the same tenancy under him and the proprietors of estate No. 122 so as to make a statement relating to the tenancy under the latter estate admissible. If the tenancies are distinct, the statement to be admissible must, we think, relate to the tenancy which is in question. In this view all but Exhibits 1 and 2 must be excluded, but it is upon those and exhibit No. 3 that the Subordinate Judge has acted.

Exhibits 1 and 2 are returns relating to the plaintiff's estates Nos. 5513 and 4806, respectively. They were signed and submitted by Hari Narain Ghose as am-mukhtear of Raja Jotindra Narain Roy, whose interest has now devolved on his widow Rani Hemanta Kumari, the 23rd defendant in the suit, but not a contesting defendant. They show that in 1884 Jotindra Narain's 11 gundas 2 karas share of the tenure was let out in ijara for terms of three or four years to certain persons at an aggregate rent of Rs. 54-2-4 as regards each of these estates. Exhibit 3 is a return, which as already stated relates to estate No. 122. It was signed and submitted by Harendra Kumar Bose as am-mukhtear of Maharani Sarat Sundari Debia, who was the mother of Jotindra Narain, and whose share has also now devolved on Hemanta Kumari, and it shows that her 1 anna 14 gundas 2 karas share of the tenure appertaining to estate No. 122 was let out to the ijaradars mentioned in Exhibits 1 and 2 at an annual rent of Rs. 813-13-0. Those returns have been made evidence against the appellant under clause 3, section 32 of the Evidence Act, as containing statements made by a deceased person against his pecuniary interests, and it is on them alone that the assets of the four annas share of the tenure appertaining to the plaintiff's estates have been determined and the rent enhanced. The [837] statements made in the returns were no doubt authorised by the Rani and Raja, respectively, and under the provisions of the Road Cess Act were binding on them, but looking at the language and scope of section 32, we doubt whether they can be regarded as statements made by those persons within the meaning of the section so as to be admissible against others. It is not, we think, necessary to determine this question in the present case, because, assuming that the statements are evidence against the appellants, they do not in our opinion furnish any reliable data for ascertaining the assets of the tenure, and have been given a value far beyond what they deserve.

The statements do not purport to give the rent realized in respect of the whole tenure, or to deal with more than the small shares owned by the Raja and Rani. It was, therefore, necessary to resort to a mathematical calculation, which must have assumed two things: first, that the ijaras were not of a speculative character, and that the iyaradars realized from the *raiya*s at least the amount of the rent which they paid to the superior landlord; and secondly that the other tenure-holders, including the appellants, realized proportionately to their shares the same amount of rent, either from the same or other iyaradars or from the *raiya*s direct. We see no ground for either assumption. The returns stand by themselves, and beyond some general evidence that the *raiya*s paid all the tenure-holders at the same rates whatever those rates were, there is no evidence in support of them. Then the Rani and the Raja occupied the double position of tenure-holder and proprietor, for they were proprietors of estate No. 122. The Subordinate Judge says that the history of the previous litigation shews a determined effort on the part of the proprietors to enhance the rent of the tenure, but that there was admittedly some decision which protected the share of the tenure subordinate to estate No. 122 from enhancement, so that the Rani and the Raja would derive no advantage as proprietors by overstating the amount of the rent received by them as tenure-holders. We do not know what that decision is, but the fact that they occupied the double position remains, and certainly detracts from the value of the statements as affecting other sharers of the tenure. The argument that the statements carry some weight from the position [838] of the persons making them, might be of some force, if it was shewn that they had personal knowledge of them. This is not shown; all that appears is that the mukhtear received the returns from the amla and signed and put them in, and it is not likely that either the Rani or the Raja would have been able to say anything about the correctness of them. The returns are certainly prima facie against pecuniary interest, but the pecuniary interest affected is so small that they have little value on that ground. On the other hand, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 21 and 32 of the Evidence Act, they could not under section 95 of the Road Cess Act be used as evidence in favour of the person submitting them.

As the case stands on the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, it is in the same position as if the plaintiff had put in and proved these returns, and no other evidence of any kind had been given. In our opinion this is not sufficient, and no decree for enhanced rent could be made on the strength of them. It is argued that it was in the power of the appellants to prove the amount of rent realized in respect of the tenure, but conceding that, it was for the plaintiff to start his case by proving under section 7 of the Tenancy Act that the existing rent was below the customary rate payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity, or that it was not a fair and equitable rent, and statements of other persons, such as those relied on, are not sufficient to throw on the appellants the burden of proving that the existing rent is fair and equitable.

It follows, therefore, that the suit must fail, unless the plaintiff succeeds in his appeal, and shows that the evidence as to rates should be accepted so as to entitle him to the enhanced rent decreed, if not the greater enhancement claimed.

The Subordinate Judge disbelieved the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, because they were under the plaintiff's influence, and were not residents or raiyats of the villages concerning which they spoke, and because also he did not believe that they ever held land in those villages, or were in a position to speak as to the rates of rent prevailing there. The evidence has been read to us, and we need only say that we think the Subordinate Judge's view is correct, and that we are not prepared to take a different [839] view. It is not necessary under the circumstances to examine the evidence of the defendants' witnesses which has also been rejected as false.

The defendants also contended in their appeal that the enhanced rent could only be decreed prospectively from the date of the decree, and that the rent should have been made payable at the end of the year and not quarterly. In the view which we have taken it is not necessary to deal with these points. If it had been necessary we should not have been disposed to interfere with the decision of the Subordinate Judge upon them.

The result is, that the defendants' appeal No. 392 succeeds, and that the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in both Courts, and that the plaintiff's appeal No. 391 is dismissed.

Appeal No. 391 dismissed ; Appeal No. 392 decreed.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), section 4— Right to maintain suit without certificate —Death, during execution proceedings, of the original mortgagee, and substitution of his heir.

Section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) is not a bar to execution proceedings instituted on a mortgage decree upon the application of the original mortgagee by reason of the original mortgagee having died during the pendency of the proceedings and his legal representatives who were substituted in his place not having produced any succession certificate.

Fateh Chand v. Muhammad Baksh, (1894) I.L.R., 16 All., 259, dissented from.

THIS appeal arose out of an application for execution of a mortgage decree which was passed against the defendants, including defendant No. 7, who was made a party as being a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property.* As against defendant [840] No. 1 a personal decree was granted. The decree having been made absolute, an application was filed on behalf of the decree-holder for execution of the decree. During the pendency of the execution proceedings the decree-holder died and his heirs were substituted in his place. Defendant No. 7 objected to the execution of the decree (inter alia) on the ground that it could not proceed in the absence of a succession certificate. The lower Court disallowed the objection, holding that no succession certificate was necessary for the execution of a mortgage decree by the heirs of the original mortgagee.

* Appeal from Order No. 194 of 1898, against the order of Babu Maumathonath Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 26th February 1898.

Against this decision the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Mr. J. R. Perceval for the Appellant.

Bahu Horendra Narayan Mitter for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (BANERJEE and STEVENS, JJ.) was as follows:—

Banerjee, J.—In this appeal, which arises out of certain proceedings taken in execution of a mortgage decree, the only question raised on behalf of the appellant who was defendant No. 7 in the Court below, and was made a defendant as being the purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property, is, whether section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act is a bar to the execution proceedings which were instituted upon the application of the original mortgagee, by reason of the original mortgagee having died during the pendency of the proceedings and his legal representatives who were substituted in his place not having produced any succession certificate.

The learned Vakil for the appellant very fairly admits that the weight of authority in this Court is apparently against his contention, but he seeks to distinguish the cases bearing upon the point, viz., Roghu Nath Shaha v. Poresb Nath Pundari, (1887) I.L.R., 15 Cal., 54; Kanchan Modi v. Baij Nath Singh (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 336, and Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das, (1894) I.L. R., 22 Cal., 143, from the present on the ground that in none of those cases was any personal decree against the mortgagor [841] asked for, whereas in this case such a decree was asked for and has been granted; and he relies upon the case of Fateh Chand v. Muhammad Baksh (1894) I.L.R., 16 All., 259, decided by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in support of his contention.

So far as the distinction sought to be drawn between the present case and the cases decided in this Court bearing upon the point now before us goes, it would be sufficient to say that the only defendant against whom a personal decree has been granted is defendant No. 1, and he is not one of the appellants before us, nor indeed did he raise any objection in the Court below to the execution proceedings; and as against the defendant No. 7 the appellant before us, the only decree made is not a personal decree, but a decree allowing the mortgagee to proceed against the mortgaged property in his hands; so that, as far as the appellant is concerned, the case is governed by the principle laid down in the cases of Roghu Nath Shaha v. Poresb Nath Pundari, (1887) I. L. R., 15 Cal., 54; Kanchan Modi v. Baij Nath Singh, (1892) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 336; and Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 143. We agree with the view taken in those cases and respectfully dissent from that taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Fateh Chand v. Muhammad Baksh, (1894) I. L. R., 16 All., 259.

But there is another reason why we think that the contention of the appellant in this case should fail, and that is this, that section 4, sub-section 1, clause (b), which is the only provision of the Succession Certificate Act under which the case could possibly come, can have no application to the present case. For that clause provides that no Court shall "proceed upon the application of a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of a deceased person" to execute against a debtor of such deceased person a decree or order for the payment of his debt. Now, in the present case, the Court was not proceeding upon the application of a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of a deceased person, but was proceeding originally upon the application of [842] the creditor himself, and it was only during the pendency of the execution proceedings, that the original mortgagee, decree-holder, died and his legal representatives, the present respondents, were brought on the record. In such a case we do not think that section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act was any bar to the Court proceeding with the execution. This view, we think, is in accordance with that indicated by this Court in the case of Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das, (1894) I. L. R., 22 Cal., 143. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal—Cases cognizable in Courts of Small Causes—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), section 586—Landlord and Tenant—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), section 144.

A suit between landlord and tenant for the recovery by the tenant of excess payments taken by the landlord in respect of the rent of the holding and not exceeding Rs. 500 is a suit cognizable by the Small Cause Court, and under section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code no second appeal lies. There is nothing in section 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to override the provisions of section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code, as it determines only the venue and has no bearing upon the nature of the suit.

THIS was a suit brought under the provisions of section 75 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 113-15 annas, which the plaintiff, the tenant of the defendant, claimed in respect of excess payments taken from him in respect of the rent of his holding by the defendants.

The Munsif found that the amount claimed was twice the sum realized from the plaintiff and awarded damages at 50 per cent. with proportional costs.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1671 of 1897, against the decree of C. M. W. Brett, Esq., District Judge of Bhagulpur, dated the 1st of June 1897, reversing the decree of Babu Uma Charan Kar, Munsif of Beguserai, dated the 28th of January 1897.

On appeal by the defendants the District Judge reversed the Munsif's decree and dismissed the suit with costs.

[843] From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. P. O'Kinealy (with Babu Saligram Singh) for the defendants, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal, that the suit being to recover a sum not exceeding Rs. 500, and being also of a nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes, and there having been an appeal already, a second appeal was barred by section 586 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Plaintiff.—This being a suit between landlord and tenant is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. From section 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides, "The cause of action in all suits between landlord and tenant as such shall, for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to have arisen within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the tenure or holding in connection with which the suit is brought," it is clear that all suits between landlord and tenant are to be regarded as suits cognizable by ordinary Courts as distinguished from Courts of Small Causes.

The judgment of the High Court (Hill and Rampini, JJ.) was as follows:—

A preliminary objection has been raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents to the hearing of this appeal. It is contended that the suit is a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and that by virtue of the provisions of section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure a second appeal is barred.

In answer to this objection reliance is placed by the learned Vakil for the appellant on section 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, where it is provided, "The cause of action in all suits between landlord and tenant as such shall, for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to have arisen within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the possession of the tenure or holding in connection with which the suit is brought." And it is argued that the inference to be drawn from that section [844] is that all suits between landlord and tenant as such are to be regarded as suits cognizable by ordinary Courts as distinguished from Courts of Small Causes, and this being a suit between landlord and tenant as such must be treated as a suit not in its nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

The suit is brought under the provisions of section 75 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 113-15 annas, which the plaintiff, the tenant of the defendant, claims in respect of excess payments made by him to or taken from him in respect of the rent of his holding by the defendant, and the suit may, therefore, no doubt be properly said to be a suit between landlord and tenant as such.

But in our opinion there is nothing in section 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which overrides or tends to override the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to which we have referred. All that section 144 does is to determine the venue, but it has no bearing, so far as we are able to perceive, upon the question of the nature of the suit, it determines the jurisdiction within which suits are to be instituted, but beyond that it does not go. That this is a suit which would ordinarily be regarded as in its nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes we think there can be no doubt, and there being nothing in section 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to lead us to qualify that view in any respect, we think the suit is within the provisions of section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a second appeal is, therefore, not open to the appellant. We think consequently that the objection taken by the respondents must prevail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

M. R. M.

Appeal dismissed.

Declaratory decree, Suit for—Suit for declaration of title—Land not properly described—Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), sections 59, 62—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), section 42—Subsequent suit for Possession—Practice—Amendment of Plaintiff.

A person is not debarred from bringing a suit for declaration of title on the ground that the land in question is not properly described, but if an order under section 59 of the Land Registration Act is made against him, he is precluded by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act from bringing a suit merely for declaration of his title without seeking to recover possession, although he may be in physical possession, the effect of such an order being to "settle the actual possession." The Appellate Court will not grant in a case of this nature an opportunity to amend the plaint if the plaintiffs had already such an opportunity and did not avail themselves of it.

IN this suit the plaintiffs allege they are the proprietors, under a purchase made by their ancestor on 16th September 1842, of 30 mans of land in mouza Dagrajit, Patna. Of this area [846] 15 mans 11 gunts 4 biswas are bahali (or confirmed) lakhiraj, and the remainder is baziafti (or resumed) lakhiraj. The defendants have succeeded in getting their names registered in the Collector's books as the proprietors in possession of the bahali land, whilst the plaintiffs' names are registered in respect of the baziafti land. The plaintiffs bring this suit for a declaration of their title to the bahali land only. The whole 30 mans of land were properly described by boundaries; but there was nothing to distinguish the bahali from the baziafti land.

Without deciding the issues, the Court of First Instance dismissed the suit upon the preliminary point that, admittedly and upon evidence, the bahali and baziafti lands were so mixed up as to be altogether undistinguishable, and therefore a declaratory decree would be incapable of being put into execution. The Lower Appellate Court also held the same view. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, and Babu Upendra Nath Mitter, for the Appellants. --There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which lays down what the plaintiff shall contain, which justifies this finding. The case of Kuzem Sheik v. Danesh Sheik, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 574, supports the appellants' contention. The plaintiffs, being already in actual physical possession of the whole 30 mans, including the bahali lands now in suit, had no occasion to sue for more than a declaration of their title, which was attacked by the entry in the Collector's books of the name of the defendants.

Babus Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee, and Monmathu Nath Mitter, for the Respondents.—The lower Courts are right in dismissing the suit, as the land over which the declaration of title was claimed was not properly described, and therefore the decree could not be executed; see Divarkanath Roy v. Jannabee Chowdhraim, (1873) 19 W. R., 81; further, as the effect of an order under section 59 of the Land Registration Act is, under section 62, to settle the actual possession, the plaintiffs, against whom such an order has been made, are precluded by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act from bringing a suit merely for a declaration of title without [847] seeking also to recover possession; see Ram Mundur v. Janki Pershad, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 139.

The judgment of the High Court (Wilkins and Handley, JJ.) was as follows:—

The plaintiffs, who are the appellants before us, claim to be the proprietors, under a purchase made by their ancestor on the 16th September 1842, of 30 mans of land in mouza Dagrajit, Patna, of this area 15 mans 11 gunts 4 biswas are bahali (or confirmed) lakhiraj, and the defendants, in spite of the opposition of the plaintiffs, succeeded in getting their names registered in respect thereof in the Collector's books; the remaining portion is baziafti (or resumed) lakhiraj, and in respect of this the plaintiffs' own names are registered as the proprietors in possession. The plaintiffs bring this suit with the object of obtaining a declaration of their title whether by purchase or by long adverse possession to the bahali lands.

The defendants contest the claim; and the nature of their case may be gathered from the issues framed, which were as follows:—

1. Is the suit barred by limitation?
2. Whether the kobala (of 16th September 1842) propounded by the plaintiff is a bona fide and genuine document?
3. Whether the plaintiffs have acquired a right to the lands in dispute by adverse possession?
4. Whether the purchase set up by the plaintiff was benami or not?

The first hearing of the suit was ex parte, and the Munsif awarded the plaintiffs a decree. That decree was set aside on appeal, and the case was remanded for adjudication upon the merits; and the parties then adduced a large mass of evidence, both oral and documentary, in support of their respective pleas.

The first Court, however, decided the suit upon a preliminary point—a point which, we may observe, was not advanced by either of the parties, and was not raised in any of the issues framed. [848] This point was that as admittedly and on the evidence the bahali lands were so mixed up with the buziafti lands as to be altogether undistinguishable the plaintiff was not entitled to a mere declaratory decree, which would be incapable of being put into execution. This view was also held by the Lower Appellate Court on appeal; and the plaintiff now comes up to this Court in second appeal.

It is contended by Mr. Honnerjee for the appellants that there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure, which lays down what the plaint shall contain, that justifies this finding; that the plaintiffs being already in possession, that is, actual and physical possession, of the whole 30 mans including the bahali lands now in suit, had no occasion to sue for more than a declaration of their title, which was attacked by the entry in the Collector's book of the names of the defendants in respect of these lands. And the learned Counsel relied upon the case of Kazem Sheikh v. Danesh Sheikh, (1897) 1 C. W. N., 574, in support of this possession. That case was heard by Mr. Justice RAMPINI, who in the course of his judgment therein remarked (at p. 576 of the report): "I am not aware of there being any provision in the Civil Procedure Code authorizing the dismissal of a suit on the ground that the land in suit cannot be identified." It is to be remembered, however, that in the case before the learned Judge, not only was a part of the land clearly identifiable, but also the whole of the land in suit was apparently capable of being sufficiently identified for the purposes of the execution of the decree, so that the learned Judge's ruling relied upon, though entitled to all respect, yet was in the nature of an obiter dictum. In the case now before us the lands in suit are admittedly quite inseparable and undistinguishable from the other lands included in the entire area, of which the plaintiffs say they are the proprietors.

The learned pleader for the respondents relies upon the cases cited in the judgment of the Lower Appellate Court. In the case of Dwarka Nath Roy v. Jannabee Chowdhram, (1873) 19 W. R., 81, the decree which was successfully objected to in special appeal was [849] a decree for a portion only of the land in suit, such portion not being specified by boundaries in the decree, which consequently was incapable of execution. But in that case, the plaintiff sued for the recovery of the land, and manifestly the decree-holder could not in execution be put into possession of that land, when there was nothing to show and no manner of ascertaining of what particular plots or area it consisted. In Darbaree Sayal v. Fatu Dhalce, (1875) 23 W. R., 285, the decree was also for the possession of a portion of the land in suit; and a Divisional Bench of this Court, following the case in 19 W. R., held that it was for a similar reason incapable of execution. These cases are therefore so far distinguishable from the case now before us, in that no decree has been asked for by the plaintiffs for possession of these bahali lands.

In Mahomed Ismail v. Lalla Dhundur Kishore Narain, (1875) 25 W. R., 39, the decree was also one directing that the plaintiff be put into possession of the land in suit, and it was set aside by a Divisional Bench of this Court as being incapable of execution, inasmuch as no boundaries were given of the land, which was a small area within a larger area.

The case of Ajoodhia Lall v. Gunam Lall, (1878) 2 C. L. R., 134, is also distinguishable; for there the plaintiff claimed to have exempted from partition certain lands which it was impossible in the absence of boundaries to define and determine. The plaintiff's decree was, therefore, inoperative.

It seems, therefore, to us that the plaintiff in this case would not necessarily fail upon this ground, when they ask merely for a declaratory decree in respect of their title.

It was, however, further contended on behalf of the respondents that, as the effect of an order under section 59 of the Land Registration Act is, under section 62, to "settle the actual possession," the person against whom such an order has been made is precluded by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act from bringing a suit merely for a declaration of his title without [850] seeking also to recover possession. In Ram Mundur v. Janki Pershad, (1882) 12 C. L. R., 139, a Divisional Bench of this Court certainly so held, although the objection had not been taken in either of the lower Courts. It seems to us that that case is almost, if not altogether, on all fours with the case now before us. The plaintiffs, it is true, assert that they are in actual possession of these lands; but they admit that an order under section 59 of the Bengal Land Registration Act has been passed against them and in favour of the defendants, so that they must be held to be out of what may be called legal possession. Consequently, if the recovery of such possession is a "further relief" within the meaning of the proviso to section 42 of the Act, a purely declaratory decree affirming the plaintiffs' title would not in the present suit be allowed.

See also Omururssa Bibee v. Dilawar Ally Khan, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 350, and Krishnabhupati Devi v. Ramamurti Pantulu, (1894) I. L. R., 18 Mad., 405.

Now in Fakir Chand Addhikari v. Anunda Chunder Bhattacharji, (1887) I. L. R., 14 Cal., 586, it was held that the "further relief" referred to in section 42 was further relief in relation to "the legal character or right as to any property which any person is entitled to, and whose title to such character or right any person denies or is interested to deny," and that consequently a claim for arrears of rent did not come within the expression.

But the position seems to us to be very different in the present case; here the plaintiffs seek to obtain a decree declaring their title with the evident and avowed object of going before the Collector with that decree in their hands and asking him, upon the strength of it, to expunge the names of the defendants and substitute their own in his books, as the proprietors in actual possession of these bahali lands. That is to say the plaintiffs' ultimate intention is to recover that legal possession, which was declared to belong to the defendants, when the order under the Land Registration Act was made. Not only, therefore, are the [851] plaintiffs "able to seek further relief," but it is their object to do so. The two forms of relief are inseparable in this case, and the plaintiffs in omitting to sue for the "further relief" have debarred themselves from obtaining a mere declaratory decree. This appears to have been pointed out to them from the very first, and yet they failed to avail themselves of the opportunity given to them of amending their plaint. Under different circumstances, we might have been inclined to give them such an opportunity now; [Limba bin Krishna v. Rama bin Pimplu, (1888) I. L. R., 13 Bom., 548]. It is under the circumstances insufficient to say, as has been said on their behalf in this Court, that the suit should have been decided upon the merits and not upon a ground not taken by the defendants and in no way misleading them.

It was also argued by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the lower Courts, instead of dismissing the suit on this ground, should have treated the suit as one for declaration of the plaintiffs' title to a fractional share in an undivided mouza. As, however, the first Court has pointed out, this could not be done in the face of the claim set up in the plaint. That claim was for an adjudication of their right in a particular piece of land, measuring 15 māns odd, and situated in a mouza comprising 30 māns in all; and that being so, it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to specify by boundaries or otherwise the exact position of the 15 mans claimed.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration we think that the lower Courts rightly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

[852] CRIMINAL REVISION.

The 14th June, 1899.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Nando Lal Basak.....Complainant, Petitioner

N. N. Mitter.....Opposite Party.*

Sanction for prosecution—Sanction to prosecute a Judge—Power of High Court to revise an order as to sanction under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code—Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), section 197 and section 439—Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., Cap. 104), section 15.

A pleader applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for sanction under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code to prosecute an Honorary Magistrate for using insulting and defamatory language towards him in the course of the trial of a case, and sanction was refused. On application to the High Court, Held—Under the revisional powers conferred by the Criminal Procedure Code the High Court has no authority to interfere with an order made by a Subordinate Court granting or refusing sanction under section 197 of the Code, but it has sufficient authority for that purpose under section 15 of the Charter Act (21 and 25 Vict., Cap. 104).

No sanction under section 197 of the Code is necessary, unless the Judge or public servant commits an offence in his judicial or official capacity. Reg. v. Parshram Keshav, (1870) 7 Bom. H. C. Cr., 61; Imperatrix v. Lakshman Sakharam, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Bom., 481; and In re Sreenivanto Chatterjee, (1881) December 9th (unreported) approved of. In re Ghulam Muhammad, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 439, dissented from.

ON the 7th of April 1899 the petitioner, who is a pleader, appeared on behalf of the prosecution in the case of Chumroo Singh v. Beni Madhub Singh before a Bench of Honorary Magistrates of the Calcutta Police Court, of which Mr. N. N. Mitter was the Chairman. After the examination of the complainant and three of his witnesses had been concluded, the petitioner applied for an adjournment of the case on the ground that two other witnesses, who had been subpoenaed, were not present in Court, but this application was refused. At this stage of the case [853] Mr. Mitter intimated to the petitioner that he and his colleagues were of opinion that the case ought to be dismissed, and that they were considering the propriety of calling on the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused. It was, thereupon, suggested by the pleader for the accused that instead of being required to pay compensation, the complainant should be prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code, and Mr. Mitter then asked the petitioner whether he had anything to submit on this question for the consideration of the Court.

The petitioner stated that, in view of the adverse opinion expressed by the Court, he considered it his duty to call the complainant's wife as a witness, whereupon Mr. Mitter addressed the petitioner as follows: "You have not properly considered the matter. The application for postponement is made simply to multiply your fees."

At this stage the complainant, who was not present when the petitioner proposed to call the wife as a witness, returned to the Court and was asked by Mr. Mitter if he would call his wife as a witness, to which he replied: "Why should she come." Then the petitioner went to the complainant and informed him of the opinion expressed by the Court during his absence and expressed to him the necessity for calling his wife as a witness, and thereupon the complainant told the Court that he now thought it necessary to call his wife. The pleader for the accused then submitted to the Court that it was highly improper that the complainant should, on his pleader's advice, unsay what he had already said to the Court, and Mr. Mitter thereupon addressed the petitioner to the following effect: "You are a dishonest man; you are a disgrace to the legal profession; you tutor witnesses. You do not know good manners; when you can tutor witnesses in the presence of three Honorary Magistrates, I do not know how much you tutor behind the back of the Court; you deal in dishonesty and chicanery. I am going to report your conduct to the Chief Presidency Magistrate. You should not be allowed, dishonest fellow as you are, to practise in this Court any longer." Mr. Mitter, after a little time, again addressed the petitioner as follows: "My fit of anger is past. Dishonest pleader though you are I pardon you this time."

[854] Under these circumstances, and in respect of the language used by Mr. Mitter, the petitioner applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta for sanction under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code to prosecute Mr. Mitter for offences under section 500 and section 504 of the Penal Code. The Magistrate refused the application on two grounds, viz., (1) "That section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code relates only to those acts or omissions by a Judge or public servant which are declared by any Act or Statute relating to India to be offences when they are committed by a Judge or public servant in their capacities as such;" and (2) "that in my opinion a Judge is absolutely privileged, when acting judicially, and no statement that he may make in a case however malicious or untrue it may be, can be made the subject of any proceeding against him either civilly or criminally."

On the application of the petitioner a rule was granted by the High Court for the purpose of considering the legality of the order made by the Presidency Magistrate.

Mr. Monier, and Babu Hara Kumar Mitter, appeared for the Petitioner.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. O'Kinealy) for the Crown.

Mr. O'Kinealy.—The High Court has no power to revise an order granting or refusing sanction under section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 489, while giving the High Court, as a Court of Revision, all the powers of a Court of Appeal conferred by section 195 and other sections, makes no mention of section 197. Section 197 relates only to offences that can be committed by Judges and public servants in their official capacity. A similar construction was adopted in a Circular Order of this Court, dated the 24th October 1864, with reference to section 167 of the Code of 1861, and its principle was followed in Reg. v. Parshram Keshav, (1870) 7 Bom. H. C. R., 61; the same view was adopted in Impratrix v. Lakshman Sakharam, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Bom., 481, a case under section 466 of the Code of 1872, and in the case of Sreemanto Chatterjee, (1881, unreported) 9th December 1881. The case of In re [855] Ghulam Muhammad, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 439, is against me, but that case was wrongly decided.

A judge is privileged, when acting judicially in the exercise of any power given to him by law; section 77 of the Penal Code. See Scott v. Stansfield (1868) L. R., 3 Exch., 220; Haggard v. Pelicier Freres, (1892) L. R., App. Cas., 61; Royal Aquarium Society v. Parkinson, (1892) 1 Q. B. D., 431; Munster v. Lamb, (1883) L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 588. The English law on the subject has been adopted in India. Sullivan v. Norton, (1883) I. L. R., 10 Mad., 28; Hinde v. Baudry, (1876) I. L. R., 2 Mad., 13; Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti, (1888) I. L. R., 11 Mad., 477; Queen-Empress v. Govinda Pillai, (1892) I. L. R., 16 Mad., 235; Queen-Empress v. Babaji, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 127; Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vitthal, (1892) I. L. R., 17 Bom., 573.

Mr. Monier for the Petitioner.—The High Court has under the provisions of section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code the power to revise an order made in respect of section 197, for it has that power “in the case of any proceeding, the record of which has been called for by itself.” Empress v. Ram Lal Singh, (1883) I. L. R., 6 All., 40. The High Court has certainly that authority under section 15 of the Charter Act (24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104); In re Mathuranath Chuckerbutty, (1872) 9 B. L. R., 354.

As to the necessity for sanction the words “is accused as such judge, &c.,” in section 197 of the Code imply while sitting as a judge, and the words “any offence” would include defamation and use of insulting language. In re Ghulam Muhammad, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 439 Cr. Rev. No. 107 of 1882, Weir, 3rd Ed., 866 note (b). The language of the section is different from that of the correspond-[856]ing sections of the earlier Codes, and under the present section sanction is necessary.

The doctrine of the absolute privilege of Judges is foreign to section 499 of the Penal Code; see illustration to exception 7 of section 499. Section 77 of the Penal Code has no application, for uttering defamation is not an act done “in the exercise of a power which is given to a judge by law.”

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This rule was granted for the purpose of considering the legality of an order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate on the 20th April 1899, by which he refused, on the application of the petitioner before us, to accord sanction for the prosecution of Mr. N. N. Mitter, an Honorary Magistrate, under sections 500 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code.

If appears from the affidavit and petition put in by the petitioner in support of the rule that he is a pleader of the Judge's Court of the 24-Pergunnahs, and that on the 7th April last he appeared on behalf of the prosecution in the case of Chumroo Singh v. Beni Madhab Singh, which was brought on for trial on that date before a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, of which Mr. N. N. Mitter was Chairman. When the examination of the complainant and of the witnesses for the prosecution who were present in Court had been concluded, Mr. Mitter intimated to the petitioner that he and his colleagues were agreed in thinking that the case ought to be dismissed, and were considering the propriety of calling on the prosecutor to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused. It was, thereupon, suggested by the pleader for the accused that instead of being required to pay compensation, the complainant should be prosecuted under section 211 of the Penal Code, and Mr. Mitter then asked the petitioner whether he had anything to submit to the Court on this question. After this some discussion took place as to the calling of further evidence on behalf of the prosecution, and the petitioner stated, in view of the adverse opinion which had been expressed by the Court, that he considered it his duty to call the complainant's wife as a witness, where-[887] upon Mr. Mitter addressed the petitioner as follows: "You have not properly considered the matter. The application for postponement is made simply to multiply your fees." At this stage the complainant, who was not present when the petitioner proposed to call his wife as a witness, returned to the Court and was asked by Mr. Mitter if he would call his wife as a witness, to which he replied "why should she come?" Then the petitioner went to the complainant and informed him of the opinion expressed by the Court during his absence as to the merits of the case and explained to him the necessity for calling his wife, on which the complainant informed the Court that he now thought it necessary to call his wife. The pleader for the accused then intervened and submitted to the Court that it was highly improper that the complainant should on his pleader's advice unsay what he had already said to the Court, and thereupon Mr. Mitter addressed the petitioner to the following effect: "You are a dishonest man. You are a disgrace to the legal profession. You tutor witnesses. You do not know good manners; when you can tutor witnesses in the presence of three Honorary Magistrates, I do not know how much you tutor behind the back of the Court. You deal in dishonesty and chicanery. I am going to report your conduct to the Chief Presidency Magistrate; you should not be allowed, dishonest fellow as you are, to practise in this Court any longer." It is unnecessary to pursue the incident further, though it does appear that Mr. Mitter afterwards in according pardon to the petitioner when "his fit of anger was past," again addressed him as a "dishonest pleader." There is no denial of any of these allegations, and it was under these circumstances and in respect of the language so used by Mr. Mitter that the petitioner applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate for sanction under section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to prosecute Mr. Mitter for the offences of defamation and of provoking the petitioner by intentional insult to commit a breach of the peace.

The Chief Presidency Magistrate refused the application on two grounds: firstly, because he considered "that section 197 relates only to those acts or omissions by a Judge or public servant which are declared by any Act or Statute relating to India to be offences when they are committed by a Judge or [888] public servant in their capacities as such;" and, secondly, because in his opinion a "Judge is absolutely privileged when acting judicially, and no statement that he may make in a case, however malicious or untrue it may be, can be made the subject of any proceeding against him, either civilly or criminally."

Before us the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate was supported by the learned Standing Counsel, who showed cause on the above two grounds, and he also raised the question of the competency of this Court sitting as a Court of Revision to review the order. He relied upon the language of section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, where the revisional powers of the Court are specified, and pointed out, that while all the powers of a Court of Appeal under section 195 of the Code are conferred on the High Courts, there is no power given to interfere in any way with a sanction granted under section 197. To this it was replied that the Legislature, in giving the High Courts authority to exercise the power of granting or revoking a sanction to prosecute conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 195, must be taken to have given the power to grant or revoke all such sanctions without limitation—a general power, that is, of reviewing the action of a Subordinate Court, whether the case be one that falls under section 195 or section 197 of the Code, and it was contended that since the High Court is empowered by section 435 to call for and examine the proceedings of all Subordinate Courts for the purpose of considering the legality and propriety of such proceedings, it is empowered implicitly to pass proper orders therein.

The question does not appear to us to be of any very great importance, for we entertain no doubt that whether the provisions of section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are or are not wide enough to authorize our interference in the present case, we have quite sufficient authority for that purpose under section 15 of the "Charter Act" (24 and 25 Vic., 104). We may, however, say that in our opinion the contention of the learned Standing Counsel is correct. Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the High Courts, as Revisional Courts, authority to exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 195 among other sections of the Code. The [859] powers in this respect—Appellate and Revisional—are clearly co-extensive, and section 195 does not confer on an Appellate Court any authority in respect of an order made by a Subordinate Court under section 197. So far, therefore, as concerns the revisional powers conferred by the Code we have not this power.

The next question, namely, whether the learned Magistrate was right in holding that the present case does not fall within the purview of section 197 of the Code, is one of somewhat greater difficulty. But having given the matter careful consideration we are of opinion that the view of the learned Magistrate is correct, and that he was consequently right in refusing to grant sanction for the prosecution of Mr. Mitter.

The law relating to the prosecution of Judges and public servants, now embodied in section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, has undergone modification more than once since the introduction of the Code of 1861. We do not think it necessary to refer more particularly to these changes at present, but we are unable to agree with Mr. Monier in his contention that they are indicative of an alteration of policy, or principle, on the part of the Legislature in the direction of an enlargement of the category of offences in respect of which the protection of a previous sanction to prosecute is afforded to the servants of Government. The changes upon which Mr. Monier commented appear to us to be changes of phraseology merely and not to involve any modification of principle, and we think, speaking generally, that in point of substance the scope and intention of the law as it was enacted in 1861, and as it now exists, are the same; under the Code of 1861 a Circular order was issued by this Court (C. O. 20, 1864) for the guidance of inferior Courts as to the scope of section 167 of that Code, the section corresponding to section 197 of the Code of 1898. It was then pointed out that the section related to offences which could be committed by public servants as such, and which are specified in chapter IX of the Penal Code. This explanation of the law was adopted by the Bombay High Court in the case of Reg. v. Parshram Keshav, (1870) 7 Bom. H. C., Cr., 61, with a modification not, however, involving any matter of principle. [860] The learned Judges said in relation to this Circular order: "If the Circular referred to be correctly quoted we cannot fully concur in it, for it seems to us impossible to hold that section 167 does not relate to such offences as those specified in sections 217 to 223 of the Indian Penal Code, which are not contained in chapter IX of the Code. But we agree with the view which was no doubt intended to be expressed in the Circular, namely, that section 167 relates only to those acts and omissions which are declared in the Penal Code to be offences when they are committed by a public servant".— This criticism of the Circular order is no doubt correct. The case of Reg. v. Parshram Keshav was decided in the year 1870, and in the year 1877, the question again came before the Bombay Court. In the meantime the Code of 1861 had been superseded by that of 1872, which by section 566 altered the law by rendering it necessary to procure the previous sanction of the specified authorities, not only in the case of offences punishable under the Penal Code, but in the case of all offences committed by a public servant in his capacity of a public servant. In the case of 1877, Imperatrix v. Lakshman Sakharam, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Bom., 481, the principle laid down in the earlier case was followed substantially. WEST, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court said : " We are of opinion that the scope of section 466 extends to all acts ostensibly done by a public servant, i.e., to acts which could have no special signification except as acts done by a public servant." It may be remarked that in the observations, which immediately precede this passage in the judgment, where the learned Judge refers to the case of Reg. v. Parshram Keshav, the scope of section 167 of the Code of 1861 appears to have been overlooked, but this consideration is not really material to the present question.

Then, in the year 1881, there was the unreported case of Sreemanto Chatterjee in this Court (decided 9th December 1881), in which PONTIFEX and FIELD, JJ., seem to have considered the construction placed on the first paragraph of section 466 by the Bombay Court to be correct. PONTIFEX, J., there said : " Now with respect to the first paragraph of section 466 it would seem that there is room for the argument that the offences contemplated [861] by that paragraph are only the special offences which can be committed by a public servant in his capacity of a public servant, that is, offences which are peculiar to his position as a public servant, and in that view if the first paragraph only of the section were applicable the contention of the present petitioner might be correct that a sanction would not be necessary before proceeding within his particular complaint." The learned Judge then proceeded to comment on the second paragraph of the section, and by virtue of it he held that sanction was, in the particular case, necessary. The second paragraph of the section has not, however, been re-enacted either in the Code of 1882 or in that of 1898, and so far as the present question is concerned the law, as it now stands, corresponds in substance with the first paragraph of section 466 of the Code of 1872. FIELD, J., was of opinion that " the first paragraph of section 466 was intended to apply to those cases in which the offence charged is an offence which can be committed by a public servant only, cases, that is, in which the being a public servant is a necessary element in the offence."

We are not aware of any other cases of this Court or of the Bombay Court, in which the question now before us has been dealt with. Mr. Monier, however, relied on the case of In re Ghulam Muhammad, (1886) I. L. R., 9 Mad., 439, in which PARKER, J., sitting alone, held under the Code of 1882, which corresponds in material particulars with the present law, that, where a Judge was charged with using defamatory language to a witness during the trial of a suit, the complaint could not, under section 197 of the Code, be entertained by a Magistrate without sanction, the reason assigned being that the Judge was then acting in his official capacity. That, however, with every deference to the learned Judge, appears to us to be a reason which can hardly be said to throw much light on the question.

The weight of authority, as is obvious from this examination of the cases, is decidedly in favour of the view taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, and it is no doubt the view which has controlled the action of the Courts both in this and the Bombay Presidencies for a long series of years. We should hesitate, therefore, even if we were disposed to take a contrary view, to disturb an interpretation of the law so long recognized. But we [862] should ourselves, in the absence of authority, have arrived at the same conclusion. The language of the section "is accused as such Judge," etc., seems to us sufficient to indicate that the offence charged must involve, as one of its elements, that it was committed by a person filling that character, and it is not apparent why, in cases outside that category, the sanction provided for by the section should be required. It is to be observed, moreover, that all public servants, who are irremovable from office without the sanction of the Government of India or Local Government, are placed on precisely the same footing as Judges. If they are to be exempted from criminal liability for all acts amounting to offences done by them, while acting in their official capacity, unless the sanction for which the section provides can be obtained, it would lead to results which cannot, we think, have been contemplated or intended by the Legislature. There is also the consideration arising from the practically unlimited control reserved to Government by the second clause of the section over the proceedings. The clause applies equally to all cases coming within the purview of the first clause, but we think it would be unreasonable to suppose that in a case such as the present, for example, it was the intention of the Legislature that the Government should determine not only the tribunal and manner of trial, but also the offence for which the trial is to take place. The existence of the power given by this clause, which, it may be remarked, is of wider scope than the corresponding clause of the earlier Codes, militates in our opinion strongly against the view for which the petitioner contends.

We would add that an order passed under section 197 supersedes all powers of transfer conferred on the High Court by section 526 (see subsection 7 of that section.)

We are then of opinion, as we have already stated, that the learned Magistrate was right in holding that sanction to prosecute under section 197 of the Code was unnecessary in the present case, and the rule must consequently be discharged.

It is unnecessary, and we think undesirable, that we should go into the further question dealt with by the Magistrate as to the immunity of judges from criminal liability for acts done in the exercise of their judicial powers.

NOTES.

[In the following cases sanction was held to be unnecessary, 25 Mad., 15 (unless being a public servant was a necessary element in the offence.); 32 Mad., 255, (fabricating a record when not bound to make a record), 30 Cal., 927 (Administrator-General appointed to the management of an estate by virtue of an order of Court).]

In (1904) P.R., 29 (cases of defamation by words used in course of trial), however, this decision was dissented from. See also 2 Bom. L.R., 1079.]

[563] CRIMINAL APPEAL.

The 7th June, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Lala Ojha.....Accused

Queen-Empress.....Opposite Party.*

Attempt to commit offence—Power of Appellate Court to alter charge or finding—Prejudice to the accused—Necessity for re-trial on the altered charge—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sections 236, 237, 238 and 423.

The accused gave his pleader a copy of a document which had been falsified by an interpolation being made in it for the purpose of its being used in the trial of his suit. Held that he was guilty, not of an attempt to commit an offence under section 471 of the Penal Code, but of the offence itself.

If the prosecution establishes certain acts constituting an offence and the Court misapplies the law by charging and convicting an accused person for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged, and if notwithstanding such error the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of these acts, then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, provided the accused be not prejudiced by the alteration in the finding. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance, and the alteration by an Appellate Court of the charge or finding would not necessitate a retrial expressly on a charge of that offence.

ONE Sajeewan Ojha instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Buxar against the present accused Lala Ojha for the recovery of possession of a strip of land. Amongst other evidence filed by the plaintiff in that suit was a certified copy of the plaint in a previous suit instituted by the present accused Lala Ojha against his brother Dhanukdhari Ojha. The copy purported to have been issued from the copying department of the office of the District Judge of Buxar. During the course of the trial of Sajeewan Ojha this copy of the plaint in the previous suit was being referred to by his pleader when Lala Ojha's pleader objected that it was not correct, and referred to a copy also certified of the same plaint with which his client, the present [564] accused, had supplied him in support of his objection. On the comparison of the two copies it was found that in the copy supplied by Lala Ojha the words "Wo Kharidan darakhtan muddai" occurred in addition to what appeared in the other copy. The Munsif sent for the original plaint and came to the conclusion that it had been tampered with, the words "Wo Kharidan darakhtan muddai" having been interpolated, and he directed Lala Ojha to be prosecuted. He was convicted by the Sessions Judge of Shahabad, in concurrence with the assessors, of an offence under section 196 of the Penal Code and an attempt to commit an offence under s. 471. Lala Ojha appealed against the order for conviction.

* Criminal Appeal No. 274 of 1899 made against the order passed by F. H. Harding, Esq., Sessions Judge of Shahabad, dated the 20th of March 1899.

Mr. P. L. Roy, and Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, for the Appellant.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Abdur Rahim), for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :—

The appellant was sued by Sajeewan Ojha in the Munsif's Court at Buxar for possession of a strip of land. The suit was what is known as a boundary suit, as their holdings adjoined and the appellant Lala Ojha is said to have encroached on the lands of Sajeewan. At the trial of that suit, Sajeewan produced a copy of a plaint of a suit instituted four years previously in 1892 by Lala Ojha regarding the same land so as to show that he did not then claim the land in suit. Lala Ojha's pleader disputed the correctness of this copy and asked the Munsif to send for the original and he produced another copy of the plaint given to him with his brief by Lala Ojha, purporting to show that in the former suit his client claimed these very lands as indicated by the boundary stated in the words : Wo Khoridar darakhtan nuddar. The plaint was accordingly sent for, and it was found that these words had been interpolated. The Munsif accordingly directed Lala Ojha to be prosecuted. He has now been convicted by the Sessions Judge, in concurrence with the Assessors, of an offence under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code, and an attempt to commit an offence under section 471.

[865] In appeal the learned Counsel relies principally on objections to the conviction of the appellant of these particular offences. There can be no doubt that the original plaint did not contain those words, and that these words were subsequently inserted. It is further clear that the introduction of these words was made recently, and certainly not during the trial of that suit, for we find in the decree of that suit a similar interpolation, and, lastly, that in his application for execution of his decree Lala Ojha did not enter these particular words. The certified copy of the plaint produced by Sajeewan Ojha, which does not contain these words, was made on the 30th January 1897, and we have the evidence of the copyist as to the correctness of that copy, as the original document was then before him. The other copy, which was produced by the appellant, was made in April. It seems, therefore, clear that the alteration of the plaint was made some time between these two dates. On these facts, it is for us to consider whether the appellant has been properly convicted. The alteration undoubtedly was for his benefit, and there can be no doubt that it was either made by him or that he caused it to be made for the purpose of the second suit. He has been convicted, first under section 196 of the Indian Penal Code of corruptly attempting to use as true and genuine evidence which he knew to be false or fabricated, and he has also been convicted under sections 511 and 471 of attempting to use fraudulently as genuine a document which he knew or had reason to believe to be a forged document. It was contended by learned Counsel on his behalf that he did not so use the plaint, inasmuch as he did not himself cause the plaint to be produced in the Munsif's Court, nor did he instruct his pleader to ask to have it sent for, the petition to that effect having been made by the pleader and not by the appellant. It seems to us, however, that having, as we find he did, given his pleader a copy of a false document, that is to say, a copy of the plaint after it had been falsified by the interpolation already mentioned, for the purpose of using it in the trial of his suit he intentionally and fraudulently made use of the fabricated plaint by misrepresenting or causing to be misrepresented in the copy that the plaint as presented by him and used in the trial of that suit, was as set out in that copy. It seems [866] to us immaterial for the purposes of the present trial whether the appellant himself asked the Court to send for the plaint and to use it for the purposes of the suit then under trial, or whether he used it fraudulently by means of a copy given to his pleader with a brief and produced under his instructions in the course of the trial. The object was clearly by means of this copy fraudulently to use as genuine with its interpolations, knowing that in that state it was a forged document. Mr. Roy contends that if the appellant has not been properly convicted of "attempts," the findings cannot be altered, because they would be for a graver offence for which his client has not been tried, and that the appellant is entitled to a new trial.

There is no doubt some authority for this. In In the matter of Dwarka Manjhee, (1880) 6 C. L. R., 427 appellant had been convicted under section 143 of being a member of an unlawful assembly, and was on appeal to the Sessions Judge convicted of rioting, an offence of a graver character with which he had not been charged at the trial. The learned Judges of the High Court on revision held that this was ultra vires since the accused should have an opportunity of defending himself on a charge of the offence of rioting before he could be properly convicted of that offence. That was a case under the Code of 1871, in which the powers of this Court as a Court of Revision were differently expressed. As a matter of principle we agree with this view. Section 423 of the Code of 1898 declares that "on an appeal from conviction the Court of Appeal may (1) reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, &c., &c.," and the Code of 1882 was similar in this respect. It would obviously be improper and unfair to an accused that on his appeal he should be convicted of a more serious offence to which he had never pleaded on the trial, and there are many instances on which the injustice of such a course would be so patent that we need not mention them. This would particularly [867] be so if the offence which the Appellate Court might consider to be established was not cognate to the offence of which he had been tried and convicted, and it would also be so, if there were circumstances of aggravation of an offence to which the accused had not pleaded. But there are exceptions to this rule. Some of these are referred to in sections 236, 237 and 238 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so that a person who has been charged only with theft may be convicted of receiving stolen property or criminal breach of trust or cheating though he may not have been charged with any of these offences; and if charged with any offence he may be convicted of an attempt to commit that offence though he may not have been charged with an attempt. So also if an accused has been charged with an offence in an aggravated form he may be convicted of a minor offence which is included in the more serious offence, though he may not have been charged with such offence. As another instance may be mentioned a case in which the prosecution has established certain acts constituting an offence, and the Court has misapplied the law to those acts by charging and convicting him for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged on proof of commission of those acts. Here, if notwithstanding this error the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts, understanding the charge to mean an offence arising out and made up of those acts, his conviction for the offence which those acts properly constitute may be maintained, if the accused has not been prejudiced by the alteration of the finding. It seems to us that such an error is one of form rather than of substance, and the alteration by an Appellate Court of the charge or finding to the more serious offence would not necessitate a retrial expressly on a charge of that offence. And it is so in the present case. Here the acts found by the Magistrate, for which he was committed for trial by the Sessions Court, for which he was tried by that Court, and defended himself, and which have been raised for our consideration on this appeal, are all one and the same, and on this point as the Court of Appeal we do not differ from the lower Court that the accused has committed them. The only difference is that as a Court of Appeal we think that [368] these acts constitute the substantive offence rather than an attempt of which he has formally been charged and convicted. Consequently, so far as the actual trial, the accused has not been prejudiced. He has known the acts of the commission of which he was accused, and he has endeavoured to show that they were not committed by him, and that he was in no way responsible for them, if they were committed, but he has failed. Under such circumstances no possible good could arise from a retrial. On the other hand, a retrial would be attended with much inconvenience and waste of time, and would not be necessary in the interests of a proper administration of justice. This point does not seem to have ever before been raised and fully considered in any reported case, though there are some cases which are relevant. We may refer to In the matter of the petition of the Government Pleader, (1874) 7 Mad. H. C., 339, where the Madras High Court held that a conviction of a particular offence under the local salt law might have been altered by the Appellate Court to a conviction under another section of that law. So in Queen v. Tarinee Churn Chuttopadhya, (1867) 3 W. R. Cr., 3, where the appellants had been wrongly convicted as abettors instead of as principals this High Court would not interfere.

In Reg. v. Raghoji bin Kanoji, (1867) 3 Bom. H. C. 42, the accused was wrongly convicted of cheating by personation, whereas he should have been convicted of furnishing false information, and the Bombay High Court refused to interfere because the accused had not been prejudiced.

The appeal is dismissed.

[869] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 20th June, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Nuisance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) section 133—Bona fide question of title—Obstruction to a public way—Jury—Verdict on inspection of locality without taking Evidence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), section 138—Use of discretion in nomination of jurors by Magistrate.

When the person called upon under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code to show cause why an obstruction should not be removed from a public way, denies that it is a public way, it is for the Magistrate to determine whether this is a bona fide objection, and he cannot, in spite of the objection (unless he determines that it is not bona fide) refer the matter to a jury.

A jury cannot decide a matter referred to them merely on inspection of the locality without taking any evidence.

In nominating the foreman and one-half of the remaining members of the jury as required by section 138 of the Criminal Procedure Code the Magistrate must exercise his own independent discretion and not appoint the nominees of the parties.

THIS case was referred to the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Sessions Judge of Jessore with the following letter of reference :—

“ In this case there was a petition to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Narail praying that action under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code might be taken in respect of obstruction in a road alleged to be a public thoroughfare. A conditional order was made, and the present petitioners appeared and raised the objection (inter alia) that the road was not a public one. The Deputy Magistrate, instead of deciding the question whether the road was a public one or not, himself referred the question to a jury appointed under section 138 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

“ It has been held in Nasiruddi v. Akiluddi, (1899) 3 C. W. N., 345, that the Magistrate must himself decide the question whether the road is a public one or not, and that the decision of such a question cannot be left to the jury. The order of the Deputy Magistrate in this case is, therefore, an illegal one. He has made [879] his order absolute on the report of the jury, but as he ought himself to have decided the question whether the road was a public one or not the final order based on the jury's report is illegal, and I therefore refer the case for the orders of the High Court with the recommendation that the order complained of be set aside, and that the Magistrate be directed to proceed with the case according to law.”

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows :—

The High Court regret to have to call the attention of the Sessions Judge to the manner in which this reference has been made in disregard of the orders contained in Circular, July 22nd, 1863, General Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court (Appellate Side, Criminal, p. 124).

* Criminal Reference No. 98 of 1899, made by L. Palit, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, dated the 16th of May 1899.

When the person called upon under section 133 to show cause why an obstruction should not be removed from a public way denies that it is a public way, it is for the Magistrate to determine whether this is a bond fide objection, and he cannot in spite of the objection (unless he determines that it is not bond fide) refer the matter to a jury. The jury is not competent to decide whether the way obstructed is or is not a public way. They can merely find whether the Magistrate's order is reasonable and proper, as originally made, when the matter is properly submitted to them. The Magistrate, moreover, is mistaken in thinking that a jury can decide such a matter without taking evidence and merely on inspection of the locality. They are bound to hear the parties and such witnesses as they may desire to have heard. The order of the Magistrate must be set aside.

The attention of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is directed to section 138, which requires him to nominate the foreman and one-half of the remaining members of the jury. This, it has been held, means that he is to exercise his own independent discretion in such nomination. He has not done so in the present instance, for he reports that he appointed "one of the petitioner's nominees to act as foreman" and nominated the others, after inquiry from the mukhtears of both sides, and from the other party.

[This was followed in 6 C.W.N., 886; but the Allahabad High Court in 30 All., 364, followed 18 All., 158, holding that there was no hard-and-fast rule that the parties and witnesses should be heard.]

[871] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 21st June, and 8th July, 1899.

PRESENT :

LORDS WATSON, HOBHOUSE, AND DAVEY, SIR RICHARD COUCH, AND SIR EDWARD FRY.

Diwan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh.....Plaintiff

versus

Indarpal Singh.....Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Onus of Proof—Suit by reversionary heir—Hindu widow—Burden of proving ownership of the husband through whom title is made.

It is incumbent on a plaintiff suing as the reversionary heir of a Hindu proprietor who has died leaving a widow, to show that the property claimed in the suit, and found in her possession, has vested in the husband. There is no presumption of law arising where the late husband possessed considerable property, that property found to be in the possession of the widow after his death must have been included in that which belonged to him unless she shows that she obtained the property from another source.

APPEAL from a decree (15th December 1891) of the High Court, [sic] affirming a decree (2nd January 1890) of the District Judge of Rai Bareilly.

The plaintiff, appellant, sued in 1887, as the next reversioner, to be declared entitled, after the interval of the widow's estate, to succeed to the inheritance from the last male owner Randhir Singh, deceased in 1858, whose widow, Thakurain Ajit Kunwar, was the first defendant in this suit, with a co-defendant, Indarpal Singh, now the respondent. She died pending this suit.

The plaintiff claimed to establish a right to succeed to property scheduled to his plaintiff after the death of the widow. The general contents of the three schedules are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

Thakurain Ajit Kunwar, with whom settlement had been made in 1858 of a talukhdari, and who had received a sanad in 1859, made a document, on the 17th October 1885, whereby she declared Indarpal Singh to be the heir of all her property. This the plaintiff sought to have declared void. Among other defences [872] the ancestral character of some of the property claimed, and the details of other property, were denied.

Almost all the questions in the case were of fact, and were disposed of by the concurrent judgments of the Courts below, adversely to the plaintiff. The question now decided was whether the following was a sound contention: That where a husband has died possessed of considerable estate, and where property has been found to be in the possession of his widow, the presumption, in regard to Hindu law, is that the property in her possession is part of the estate that belonged to her husband, unless the contrary should be shown.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Appellant, in support of this proposition, referred to Bindoo Bashinee Debee v. Fearce Mohun Bose, (1866) 6 W. R., 312; Chunder Nath Moitro v. Krishto Komul Singh, (1871) 15 W. R., 357; Nobin Chunder Chowdhry v. Dokhobala Dasi, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal. 686; and the Evidence Act (I of 1872), sections 110 and 114.

Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q. C., Mr. C. W. Arathoon, and Mr. De Gruyther, for the Respondent, were not heard.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir Edward Fry.—The plaintiff and appellant Diwan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh is the head of the elder branch of a family descended from Sanbar Singh. The original first defendant, Ajit Kunwar, was the widow of Randhir Singh, the head of the younger branch of the same family. The present respondent, Indarpal Singh, claims under a will or other document executed by the late Ajit Kunwar. The original plaintiff in the suit now under appeal sought a declaration that Ajit Kunwar was entitled only for life in three classes of property mentioned in schedules A, B and C to the plaintiff, and that the document under which Indarpal Singh claims was inoperative as against the plaintiff.

The first class of property to which the suit related consisted of certain talukhdari estates in respect of which a sanad was granted to Ajit Kunwar: and it was contended for the appellant in the Courts below that by virtue of certain documents Ajit Kunwar [873] had, subject to a life interest to herself, constituted herself trustee for the appellant of his property. But the District Judge and the Judicial Commissioner's Court unanimously held all these documents to be forgeries, and Counsel for the appellant with great propriety declined to argue against these concurrent findings.

The second class of property consisted of certain non-talukhdari lands mentioned in schedule B to the plaint, and the third class of property mentioned in schedule C consisted of certain moveables, which belonged to Ajit Kunwar at the time that the suit was brought. The plaintiff claimed the land in schedule B in more than one way. First he said in his plaint that it was "immoveable property which had been purchased from time to time out of funds derived from the ancestral estate," i.e., the talukhdari, and that it was "considered as a part and parcel thereof" (paragraph 10). In this point of view it is evident that this non-talukhdari property will follow the fate of the talukhdari in respect of which the appellant's claim has failed. But the plaintiff also claimed it on the ground that the property belonged to Randhir Singh in his life-time and that the plaintiff was the next reversioner to Randhir Singh. There is some conflict of evidence as to whether this property was originally acquired by Randhir Singh or his wife Ajit Kunwar, but Counsel for the appellant, admitting that both the Courts below were adverse to the plaintiff's contention on the evidence, elected to treat the case as if there were no evidence one way or the other, and to base their client's claim on the following proposition of law. They alleged that when a widow is found in possession of property, of the acquisition of which no account is given, and it is shown that her husband died possessed of considerable property, then there is a presumption of law that the property found in the widow's possession was originally that of her husband. No authority was cited at the bar which supports this proposition, and their Lordships are not prepared to adopt it or to lay down anything inconsistent with the general rule that he who claims property through some other person must show the property to have been vested in that person. But even if the proposition contended for were valid, it does not apply to the present case; for there [874] is no evidence that Randhir Singh, the husband of Ajit Kunwar, died possessed of considerable or any property, and the inference to be drawn from some of the facts in evidence tends in the contrary direction. The plaintiff's claim to the real estate mentioned in schedule B therefore falls to the ground.

The third class of property mentioned in schedule C consists of moveables some of them clothes and ornaments of a lady's person, and there being no evidence to show whether these were originally acquired by Ajit Kunwar or her husband, the plaintiff's claim to them was supported only on the same proposition of law with which their Lordships have already dealt.

In every particular, therefore, the appellant's case fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE HILL.

Soonderjee Nanjee.....Petitioner

Revision—High Court's power of revision—Withdrawal of the operation of the Criminal Procedure Code—Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), section 6—Assam Frontier Tracts Regulation, 1880, section 2—Jurisdiction of the High Court—Power of the Supreme Council.

The effect of the rules laid down by the Chief Commissioner of Assam under section 6 of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), taken in conjunction with the notification issued by him in the exercise of the powers conferred by section 2 of the Assam Frontier Tracts Regulation, 1880, directing that the Criminal Procedure Code should cease to operate [875] in the North Cachar Hills from the date of the notification, is to supersede all previously existing criminal authority in that district by that of the Chief Commissioner.

The power of the Supreme Legislative authority of India to remove any place or territory from the jurisdiction of the High Court is, as was said in Empress v. Burah, (1878) I. L. R., 4 Cal., 172 : L. R., 5 I. A., 178, "expressly authorized and contemplated" by the Statutes and Letters Patent which affect the constitution and jurisdiction of the Court.

Semle :—Notwithstanding the withdrawal of the operation of the Criminal Procedure Code from a certain district the High Court may continue to exercise appellate and revisional powers over that district.

ON the 19th of May 1899 the petitioner was arrested under a warrant of arrest issued by the Sub-Divisional Officer of the North Cachar Hills in the Assam Frontier Tracts on a charge of criminal breach of trust in respect of moneys entrusted to him for the purposes of certain works in connection with the Assam-Bengal Railway in the year 1897, at a place called Haflong in the North Cachar Hills. On the 22nd of May the petitioner applied to the High Court for a rule calling on the Deputy Commissioner of Cachar to show cause why the proceedings then pending in the Court of the said Sub-Divisional Officer against the petitioner should not be quashed, or in the alternative why the case should not be transferred to the Court of some other competent Magistrate for disposal on the ground that the said Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction, and that the petitioner had a reasonable apprehension that he would not get a fair trial in the hands of the said Sub-Divisional Officer.

A rule was issued calling on the Deputy Commissioner to show cause why the proceedings in question should not be quashed, or such other order passed with respect thereto as to the High Court might seem fit, and the records were sent for. The Deputy Commissioner of Cachar replied to the High Court's requisitions that "the North Cachar Hills are not within the jurisdiction of the High Court," and abstained from sending the records of the case as well as from showing cause against the rule.

Mr. P. L. Roy, Babu Atulya Charan Bose, Babu Shama Prosunno Mozumdar, and Babu Soshi Shekhar Bose, for the petitioner.

[876] Mr. Henderson, and Babu Prosunno Gopal Roy, for the Crown.

* Criminal Revision No. 386 of 1899 made against the order passed by E. C. S. Baker, Sub-Divisional Officer of North Cachar, dated the 6th of May 1899.

The judgment of the High Court (Prinsep and Hill, JJ.) was as follows:—

This was an application made on the 22nd May 1899 on behalf of one Soonderjee Nanjee for a rule calling on the Deputy Commissioner of Cachar to show cause why certain proceedings, then pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of the North Cachar Hills against the petitioner, should not be quashed, or in the alternative why the case should not be transferred to some other competent Magistrate for disposal.

It appears that on the 19th May the petitioner was arrested under a warrant issued by the Sub-Divisional Officer on a charge of criminal breach of trust in respect of moneys said to have been entrusted to him for the purposes of certain Railway works in progress in the year 1897, at a place called Hailong in the North Cachar Hills.

There being in our opinion matter stated in the affidavit sworn by the petitioner sufficient to justify us in granting the application, we issued a rule on the 22nd May calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the proceedings in question should not be quashed, or such other order passed with respect thereto as to this Court might seem fit. We at the same time sent for the records of the case.

On the 2nd June the Deputy Commissioner of Cachar replied to the Court's requisitions that "the North Cachar Hills are not within the jurisdiction of the High Court," and he abstained from sending the records of the case as well as from showing cause against the rule. Subsequently the question thus raised was argued before us by Counsel on behalf of the Crown as well as of the petitioners, and we took time to consider our judgment. This was unavoidable, as the law affecting the question was not fully laid before us at the hearing, and we were consequently obliged to pursue our researches further.

The learned Counsel for the Crown in support of the position taken by the Deputy Commissioner relied exclusively on a notification issued by the Chief Commissioner of Assam on the 6th May 1884, in exercise of the powers conferred on him by [877] section 2 of the "Assam Frontier Tracts Regulation, 1880," by which he directed that the Code of Criminal Procedure (among other enactments) should cease to be in force in the North Cachar Hills from the date of the notification. It was conceded that prior to this notification the North Cachar Hills were within the jurisdiction of this Court, but the contention was that by virtue of the notification they were removed from it.

The power of the Supreme Legislative authority of India to remove any place or territory from the jurisdiction of this Court is, as was said in Empress v. Burah, (1878) 1. L. E., 4 Cal., 172: L. R., 5 I.A., 178, "expressly authorized and contemplated" by the Statutes and Letters Patent which affect the constitution and jurisdiction of the Court. But the notification of the Chief Commissioner does not purport to affect the jurisdiction of this Court over the North Cachar Hills, and it is quite conceivable that, notwithstanding the withdrawal of the Code of Criminal Procedure, this Court might continue to exercise appellate and revisional powers over the district in question. Indeed, under the Regulation, in pursuance of which the notification of the Chief Commissioner was issued, any alteration of the territorial limits of the Court's jurisdiction would present this difficulty, that the powers vested in the Chief Commissioner by section 2, under which the notification was issued, are to be exercised so as not to affect the criminal jurisdiction of any Court over European British subjects.

The argument, then, founded on the notification appears to us to be incomplete and inconclusive.

The Chief Commissionership of Assam in which the North Cachar Hills are situated has, however, been brought under the operation of the Scheduled Districts Act (XIV of 1874), by section 6 of which the Local Government is empowered from time to time to appoint officers to administer civil and criminal justice within the Chief Commissionership, to regulate the procedure of such officers, and to direct by what authority any jurisdiction incident to the operation of any enactment for the time being in force within the Chief Commissionership shall be exercised. By a notification issued on the 31st July 1884 in [878] exercise of these powers, the Chief Commissioner laid down rules for the administration of justice in the North Cachar Frontier Tract, which includes the North Cachar Hills. By rule 12 the ordinary administration of criminal justice is vested in the Deputy Commissioner, the Sub-Divisional Officer, and the chief village authority duly authorized in this behalf. Succeeding rules provide for appeals from the decision of the chief village authority and the Sub-Divisional Officer, and then rule 24 provides as follows: "No appeal shall lie as a matter of right from any sentence of the Deputy Commissioner of less than three years imprisonment. All sentences of three years imprisonment or more are appealable to the Chief Commissioner. Appeals to the Chief Commissioner must be preferred within ninety days. It shall be competent to the Chief Commissioner at any time to call for and revise, modify, or reverse, any proceedings of the Deputy Commissioner or his subordinates in any case in which it may seem necessary to do so."

Subject to the limitation in respect of European British subjects, to which class the petitioner does not belong, placed upon the powers of the Chief Commissioner by section 2 of the Assam Frontier Tracts Regulation, 1880, we think the effect of these rules, taken in conjunction with the notification of the 6th May 1884, was to supersede in the North Cachar Hills all previously existing criminal revisional authority by that of the Chief Commissioner. Assuming, therefore, as was argued for the petitioner, that there still resides in this Court, notwithstanding the annulment of its powers of revision, a power of interference with the proceedings of the Sub-Divisional Officer (a question on which we think it unnecessary to express an opinion), we think that the powers we were, in the first instance, asked to exercise in this case, and in the supposed exercise of which we issued the rule, are non-existent, and we therefore discharge the rule.

Rule discharged.

[879] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 26th and 27th April, and 18th May, 1899.

PRESENT:

LORD HOBHOUSE, LORD MACNAGHTEN, AND SIR RICHARD COUCH.

Hasan Jafar and others.....Representatives of Plaintiff

versus

Muhammad Askari.....Representative of Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869)—Settlement of Estate—A talukdar settled with on terms imposing a trust on him—Second summary settlement, 1858—Effect of the confiscation—Rights of the Government.

A sanad-holding talukhdar, whose name has been entered in lists I and II, made in conformity with the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, holds the talukh subject to such trusts as have been validly created.

At annexation, four descendants of a Muhammadan proprietor were entitled in equal shares to the ancestral estate, which, in 1858, at the second summary settlement, was settled with the only one of the four who presented himself to the Settlement Officer. The settlement with him as talukhdar which was then made was, however, made upon terms providing that the absent co-sharers on their return should obtain their shares. This accorded with his application expressing his willingness.

Held, that the question whether the talukhdar had become a trustee for the plaintiff in respect of his share depended on the terms on which the estate had been granted to the talukhdar by the Government at the second summary settlement, it having been at their absolute disposal as a consequence of the confiscation of March 1858. The trust was not affected by the sanad. No special provision as to the co-sharers' return, or admission to share, had been deemed necessary by the Chief Commissioner, who authorized the settlement with the talukhdar in reliance on his assurance. The right of the co-sharer, who returned in 1859, was accordingly established.

APPEAL from a decree (7th October 1895) affirming a decree (1st May 1893) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The appellants were the grandsons of the plaintiff, Mir Sadik Husain, who died pending the suit, which was brought on the 9th June 1888, for a one-fourth share of a talukh in the Bara Banki District, named Goothia Zaidpur, formerly the talukhdari estate of Hakim Karam Ali, deceased in 1879. The daughter of Karim Ali, named Afzal-un-Nissa, was entered in the revenue [880] records as proprietor in his place; and on her death in 1887, the defendant, Muhammad Askari, a collateral relation, claiming under her alleged will, obtained entry of his name.

At the first summary settlement (1856-57) the estate was settled with Mir Sadik Husain, and his cousin Ali Meddi. These two, with two other cousins, Karam Ali and Abu Ali, were descended from a common grandfather Muhammad Hanif. All the four were entitled, in equal shares, to the ancestral estate.

At the second summary settlement in 1858, Karam Ali alone presented himself, and with him settlement was made. Sadik Husain was absent. In 1861 Karam Ali obtained a sanad as talukhdar. He was afterwards entered in the lists I and II under the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. On the 18th April 1859 Mir Sadik Husain returned, and received an allowance for his maintenance from Karam Ali.

The main question decided on this appeal was whether Karam Ali had held the talukh in trust for himself and Sadik Husain, who in 1888 claimed his one-fourth share from Muhammad Askari in this suit, or had held the talukh for himself alone.

The facts are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The defendant in his written statement admitted that when Karam Ali applied to have the talukh settled with him at the second summary settlement, he offered to give to the plaintiff and Ali Mehdi their shares, on their coming back and paying what was due to him for payments of revenue made on their account. But the defence was that the settlement was in the end unconditionally made with Karam Ali, the offer on his part never having been accepted by either of them.

The principal issue raised the question whether settlement was made with Karam Ali on his own behalf exclusively, or for himself and as trustee for Sadik Husain.

The District Judge held that Karam Ali accepted a conditional trust on Sadik Husain's behalf, but the condition (which was that of satisfying the authorities as to his conduct, and paying the money due to Karam Ali) had not been fulfilled by Sadik Husain, nor had the condition been waived. The judgment said: "It [881] was of course necessary for him, if he wished to be admitted, to apply to the authorities, and satisfy the condition, or ask to have it waived. He did neither the one nor the other." The dismissal of the suit was affirmed by the Appellate Court, their reasons being given as follow by the Additional Commissioner:—

"The circumstance that Karam Ali expressed his willingness, if the whole talukh were settled with him, to give the other co-sharers their shares when they returned, cannot be regarded as one which of itself constituted him a trustee for them, and that is the only circumstance which can be pointed to in connection with Karam Ali's conduct at the time of the settlement. Karam Ali did not express this willingness as the result of an agreement or arrangement with the other co-sharers, that he should claim the settlement of the entire property and give them their shares subsequently. Karam Ali's willingness to give the other co-sharers their shares did not induce the Settlement authorities to settle the whole talukh with him. What induced them to settle the property with Karam Ali was the fact that the former lambardars, Ali Mehdi and Sadik Husain, had not taken advantage of the proclamation of the 15th March 1858 and promptly come forward and given to the Chief Commissioner their support in the restoration of peace and order, while Karam Ali had done so. The Settlement authorities did not impose any trust on Karam Ali in respect of the shares of the plaintiff and Ali Mehdi. They did not say to Karam Ali, 'we settle the whole estate with you, as you desire, but we do so on the understanding that the settlement is made with you for your co-sharers as well as for yourself.' They said, on the contrary, 'we settle the whole estate with you, but you must not understand that because we do so your co-sharers have forfeited all claim to the restitution of their former rights. If they explain their conduct later on their former rights will be restored to them.' I think that this was the only condition upon which the settlement of the entire property was made with Karam Ali, and the only condition which he accepted, and I cannot agree with the learned District Judge that it may be said that Karam Ali accepted a conditional trust on behalf of the plaintiff, on the conditions referred to by the learned District Judge, when the settlement was made with him. On the contrary, I think that at the time of the settlement Karam Ali imposed upon himself no trust of any kind, and accepted from the Settlement authorities no trust of any kind in favour of the plaintiff."

* As to the establishment of a trust against a sanad-holder, they referred to Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 444; L. R., 17 I. A., 54.

On this appeal,—

[882] Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, for the appellants, argued that there was error in the judgment of the Courts below. The summary settlement was made with Karam Ali upon his consent given and the entry made by the Settlement Officer as to the return of the absent co-sharers. It was recorded that the names of the latter should be entered in the khewat, or register of shares, in which the names of those entitled to shares in village lands are always inserted. Karam Ali by his admissions and conduct in those proceedings placed himself in the position of a trustee for others entitled as co-sharers with him. In his admission of the 8th November 1858 he did not stipulate that the co-sharers were to return within any certain time; and the absence of the plaintiff until April 1859 did not deprive him of his right. The exclusion of the plaintiff had not been directed by the authorities; and on this point the Courts below had not correctly understood the order of the Special Settlement Commissioner, read with that of the Chief Commissioner; for in fact the order of the latter did not insist on any condition to be complied with by Sadik Husain before he could be allowed to get his share. It was sufficient for the plaintiff's case to rely on the entries in the record; and these were in accordance with Karam Ali's application and admissions. As to the constitution of a trust to be fulfilled by a talukhdar, reference was made to Thukraim Sookraj Koowar v. The Government, (1871) 14 Moore's I. A., 112, and to the cases cited in Ramanand Kuar v. Raghunath Kuar, (1881) I. L. R., 8 Cal., 769; L. R., 9 I. A., 41, and Ram Singh v. Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki, (1889) I. L. R., 17 Cal., 444; L. R., 17 I. A., 54.

From the report of the Commissioner, who examined the accounts, and the evidence connected with it, the inference was to be drawn that Sadik Husain after his return received an income proportioned to his share, and that this was accorded to him not merely as a favour, but as a right.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, and Mr. G. E. A. Ross, for the respondent, contended that the judgment of the Appellate Court below was right. There had been no absolute recognition by Karam [883] Ali of any proprietary, or beneficial, interest in the family estate as having been secured at settlement to Sadik Husain, nor was there any distinct evidence that Karam Ali intended to take the estate subject to any trust for his cousin. Also, the contention was that, as between Karam Ali and the Government, the settlement of 1858-59 was absolute when the proceedings ended. That closed the "open door" mentioned by Major Barrow. The only question that should now be raised would be this, was there a concession as between Karam Ali and Sadik Husain that would constitute the acceptance of a trust by the former for the latter? On the evidence taken altogether, the real state of things was that Karam Ali, though he admitted the relationship of his cousins, and former family rights, petitioned for and obtained the settlement of the estate with himself, that implying a grant by the Government. Disappearance prolonged through the month of settlement meant that Sadik Husain had joined the insurgents. In order to get the advantage of the entry in their favour, the absentees should have come back before the proceedings at settlement were concluded. It was not to be inferred that the right to return, and to be admitted to share, was extended for an indefinite period. At the settlement Sadik Husain did not return, and as the result, when he did return, in April 1859, Karam Ali had obtained the whole talukhdari. Subsequent issue of a sanad, the long acquiescence of Sadik Husain, and other circumstances, confirm this view. As to the maintenance accepted by him from Karam Ali, there were concurrent judgments to the effect that this subsequent treatment of the plaintiff, both by the talukhdar and by his daughter Afzul-un-Nissa, was not a recognition of any proprietary right in the plaintiff. There had not been an accounting to him as for the aliquot share of the profits, to which he would have been entitled if he had been dealt with as a co-sharer. On this point reference was made to the judgment in Hyder Hossein v. Mahomed Hossain, (1871) 14 Moore's I. A., 401 (407).

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., replied.

Afterwards, on the 18th May 1899, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by [884] Lord Macnaghten.—This appeal relates to a claim by the appellants to one-fourth share of an Oudh estate which comprises the talukh of Goothia with certain villages in Zaidpur in the district of Daryabad and is now apparently known as talukh Goothia Zaidpur.

The appellants are the representatives of one Sadik Husain, the original plaintiff, who died after the suit had been disposed of in the Court of First Instance.

The respondent derives title under the will of the only child and sole heiress of one Karam Ali. Karam Ali died in 1879. His daughter died in 1887—on her death the dispute arose which led to the present litigation.

It is common ground that on the re-occupation of the Province of Oudh after the mutiny the three-year summary settlement of the estate was made with Karam Ali alone, and that the talukhdari sanad was afterwards granted to him as sole owner. The case on behalf of the appellants is that, although Karam Ali thus acquired the legal ownership of the entire estate, he became in the events which happened and was at the time of his death trustee as to one-fourth of the estate for Sadik Husain.

It appears that in September 1858 when the three-year summary settlement was in progress Karam Ali applied to have the settlement of the estate made with him. He stated that the estate was ancestral property in which he was a co-sharer. The first summary settlement on the annexation of the Province had been made, he said, with his co-sharers Ali Mehdi and Sadik Husain, but they had absconded, fearing that they would be called upon to pay what they had collected in excess during the mutiny. Search had been made, but no clue or trace of them had been found as yet. He offered to pay what was due to Government in respect of the whole estate. At the same time he declared that if his co-sharers re-appeared and paid up what he might have paid to Government they should get their shares. In these circumstances the Settlement Officer entered the name of Karam Ali alone as mal-guzar and sent the papers up to the head office in Lucknow for confirmation. They came in the first instance before Major Barrow, the Special Commissioner of [885] Revenue. His note so far as material was in these words: "Correct, but I would leave a door open to admit the other sharers if they explain their conduct by and bye." The papers then went to the office of the Chief Commissioner, Sir Robert Montgomery. His observation on Major Barrow's note written against it in the margin was this: "The man agrees to this, R. Montgomery, Chief Commissioner, Oudh." The papers were then returned to the Settlement Officer who accordingly retained the name of Karam Ali as sole mal-guzar recording in the column of the summary settlement statement headed "Abstract of the Case," an abstract in English of Karam Ali's statement which so far as is material is as follows: "I am entitled to half and those two," that is, Ali Mehdi and Sadik Husain, "to the remaining half . . . I want the settlement of the whole talukh. When the sharers come back if they pay up what they owe me I will willingly give up their share."

Sadik Husain seems to have come back in April 1859. It is beyond dispute that he returned openly on the invitation or by the written permission of the Government. The record contains a letter from the Commissioner at Lucknow to Daroga Wazid Ali, dated the 18th of April 1849, which, so far as material, is in the following terms: "I am in the receipt of your letter relating to the return of Sadik Ali," that is Sadik Husain, "and your request to permit him to settle himself, 'so I write to you that under the terms of the Queen's Amnesty Proclamation he can settle down and you are permitted to help him in doing so.'" There is also in the record a parwana of the same date addressed to Sadik Husain by the Deputy Commissioner assuring him that if he had committed no offence punishable under the Queen's Amnesty Proclamation he would not be called upon to account for himself because he had not presented himself within the period specified in it. This parwana proceeds to say "you may present yourself without the least anxiety and show your loyalty and attachment to the British Government."

Following the summary settlement the sanad was granted to Karam Ali in 1862, and his name was entered in Lists I and II, referred in the Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869).

[886] The question whether Karam Ali became a trustee of one-fourth of the estate for Sadik Husain upon his return depends, as it seems to their Lordships, upon the terms on which the Government made over the estate to Karam Ali. Owing to the confiscation of the province under Lord Canning's Proclamation the property was at the absolute disposal of the Government. Whatever Karam Ali took under the summary settlement and the sanad which followed it he took as a gift from the Government. It was of course competent for the Government when making the gift to impose upon the recipient of their bounty any terms they pleased not inconsistent with the law. If the intention of the Government is clear it cannot make the least difference whether the terms were imposed by the Government of its own motion or suggested by the grantee and assented to by the Government. Karam Ali did not found his claim to the favour of the Government on the misconduct of those who had been his co-sharers. In his view they were co-sharers still, but they had gone away or disappeared. He was on the spot a loyal man and ready to pay to the Government every farthing of its dues. He asked to have the whole estate settled with him undertaking that if his co-sharers re-appeared, that is, of course, if they came back openly, he would give them their shares. When the papers went before Major Barrow he seems to have thought that some special arrangement ought to be made with a view to the restoration of the co-sharers if they should succeed in explaining their conduct to the satisfaction of the Government. But that was not the view of the Chief Commissioner. His note is very brief, but it is tolerably plain. He differed from Major Barrow. In his view no special provision was necessary. The applicant had undertaken to re-admit the co-sharers if they re-appeared. The Chief Commissioner thought that enough. On that undertaking or agreement, as he calls it, the settlement might be made as the Settlement Officer proposed with Karam Ali alone. And in the result the matter was carried out on that footing.

Their Lordships have dwelt at some length on this part of the case because it appears to them that both the Courts below misapprehended the effect of what took place when the settlement papers of 1858 came before the authorities at Lucknow. [887] Both Courts seem to have thought that certain conditions were prescribed by Major Barrow, and that it was incumbent on Sadik Husain to show compliance with those conditions. The fact, however, seems to have been that the Chief Commissioner put aside Major Barrow's suggestions and authorised the settlement with Karam Ali in reliance on his assurances and representations.

If Karam Ali became a trustee for Sadik Husain on his return the fact that the sanad was granted to Karam Ali alone would not deprive Sadik Husain of his rights. It is not necessary to refer to authority for the purpose of establishing the proposition that the grantee under a sanad of this description takes subject to trusts which have been validly created.

It does not appear that Karam Ali or his daughter and heiress, who succeeded him, ever disputed Sadik Husain's right to share in the estate. It is satisfactory to find a statement made by Karam Ali himself after the sanad was granted to him to the effect that he was not sole and absolute owner of the whole estate. In 1862 the Government called on the talukhdars of Oudh to make a return of their history and services. In May of that year Karam Ali filled up the form which had been sent to him and stated distinctly that he had co-partners. Whether the word translated "co-partners" ought to have been translated subordinate co-partners or not the statement so far as it goes is consistent with Sadik Husain's claim, and at any rate it shows that Karam Ali did not even then consider himself to be absolute owner to the exclusion of everybody else.

The rest of the case may be disposed of very briefly. Sadik Husain alleged that he was admitted to share in the management of the estate. In that contention he failed. But it appears that from his return until the death of Karam Ali's daughter, he received a large and liberal allowance from the family estate. It was not contended by the Counsel on behalf of the respondent that the fact that he received less than one-fourth was conclusive against his present claim or operated to bar the suit.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the appellants have made out their case as to one-fourth of the estate. They will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal [888] should be allowed. The decree of the District Judge and the decree of the Judicial Commissioner and Additional Judicial Commissioner must be set aside with costs in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the costs paid under either of those decrees repaid, and it should be declared that in the events which happened Karam Ali became and was as to one-fourth of the estates comprised in the sanad granted to him trustee for Sadik Husain, and that the appellants as representatives of Sadik Husain are now entitled to recover one-fourth of those estates. Their Lordships think that each party ought to bear their own costs in the Court of First Instance, as those costs were largely increased by certain unfounded claims on the part of the plaintiff.

The respondent will pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[In Muhammad Bakar v. Mahammad Ali Khan, (1910) 33 All., 125, the Privy Council distinguished this case. "Hason Jafar v. Muhammad Askari, 26 Cal., 879, the settlement was effected with the person who took it on a distinct understanding which, in their Lordships' Judgment, constituted him a trustee for his co-sharers who were not present at the time.

In the present case, the settlement officer's proceedings can bear no such meaning. The Nawab was in possession of the villages by virtue of some arrangement regarding the exact nature of which there is no evidence. At the time of the settlement he or his agent opposed the claim of Wazir-un-nissa to have the properties settled with her, on the ground that he was entitled to remain in possession until the moneys he had disbursed on her account were paid off. That objection was upheld, and the Settlement was made with the Nawab 'in accordance with possession' and the lady was directed to proceed by separate application to get her property released by payment of the money due by her. In their Lordships' judgment there is no warrant for the contention that the correlative obligation that lay on the Nawab to release the property on payment of the money created a trust or constituted him a trustee for Wazir-un-nissa."]

SIR FRANCIS W. MACLEAN, K.C.I.E., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BANERJEE.

Napol Chandra Sadookhan.....Judgment-Debtor

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Schedule II, Article 179, clause (4)—Step in aid of execution—Application for execution "not in accordance with law"—Subsequent application for execution—Objection to the previous application.

An application for partial execution of a decree is a step in aid of execution within the meaning of clause 4, article 179† schedule II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

A judgment-debtor, who did not appeal against a previous order for execution of a portion of the decree and who did not dispute the validity [889] of such order, cannot, in the matter of a subsequent application for execution of the remaining portion of the decree, contend that the first application was not "in accordance with law," and that the subsequent application being presented after the lapse of three years from the date of the decree was barred by limitation.

Dulichand Bhudar v. Bai Shivkor, (1890) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 242, followed.

* Appeal from Order No. 37 of 1898, against the order of A. E. Staley, Esq., District Judge of Hooghly, dated the 3rd of December 1897, affirming the order of Babu Nalini Nath Mitter, Munsif of Howrah, dated the 30th of August 1897.

† [Art. 179, Cl. (4) :—

Description of Application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by No. 180 or by the Code of Civil Procedure, section 230.	Three years; or where a certified copy of the decree or order has been registered, six years.	(Where the application next herein-after mentioned has been made) the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step in aid of execution, of the decree or order.]

THIS appeal arose out of an application for execution of a decree. One Amrita Lall Sadookhan obtained a decree for recovery of possession of certain immoveable property, as well as for costs, on the 15th March 1891. On the 10th December 1894, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree in respect of the costs. In that application the decree-holder stated that he would apply for delivery of possession of the land afterwards. No objection was taken by the judgment-debtor as to the procedure adopted by the decree-holder, and the amount was realized. On the 21st April 1897, the present application for execution of the decree for delivery of possession of the land was made, and the judgment-debtor objected to it, on the ground that it was barred by limitation, inasmuch as the decree-holder did not execute the whole decree which he ought to have done when he applied for the execution of decree for costs in 1894. The Court of First instance over-ruled the objection and allowed execution to proceed.

On appeal to the District Judge the decision of the first Court was upheld.

Against this decision the judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court.

Babu Kuruna Sindhu Mookerjee and Babu Purna Chandra Shome, for the Appellant.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.

The judgment of the High Court (MACLEAN, C.J., and BANERJEE, J.) was as follows:—

Maclean, C.J.—The first objection taken by the appellant is that the present application for execution of the decree is [890] out of time. I do not think it is. The decree was for costs and for delivery of possession of certain immoveable property. The decree was made on the 15th March 1891, and an application for execution of the decree in respect of the costs was made on the 10th December 1894. The application for execution, on the face of it, distinctly stated that the decree-holders would afterwards apply for delivery of possession of the land. No objection was taken by the judgment-debtor at the time to this method of procedure on the part of the decree-holder, or that he ought not to be allowed, for execution purposes, to split up his decree, or rather execute it piecemeal. Execution for costs was proceeded with, and the amount realised. The present application for execution of the decree for possession of the immoveable property was made on the 21st April 1897, and the judgment-debtor contends that the whole decree, not having been executed when the decree-holders in December 1894 took out execution for costs, the present application for recovery of possession is too late. I do not think it is. The application for execution for the costs was one to take some step in aid of execution, and seeing that the judgment-debtor raised no objection at the time to the decree being executed piecemeal—not, I admit, a desirable way of executing a decree—it does not now lie in his mouth to say that that application was not in accordance with law. This view is in accordance with that expressed by the Bombay High Court in the case of Dulichand Bhudar v. Bai Shivkor, (1890) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 242.

The first point fails.

As regards the other two points, viz., that the property is not properly described, and that the decree is incapable of execution, I do not propose to say anything more than that I agree with the view taken of them by both the lower Courts. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Banerjee, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

[891] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 14th June, 1899.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE STANLEY.

Nistarini Dassi

Nundo Lall Bose and another.

Fraud—Pleading Fraud—Power of Court at instance of innocent party to treat decree of another Court obtained by fraud as a nullity—Jurisdiction—Administration suit—Acts of mal-administration regarding immoveable property outside jurisdiction—Power of Court to set aside leases of immoveable property outside its jurisdiction—Leave to sue—Letters Patent, High Court, clause 12—Misjoinder of causes of action—Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 44, Rule A.

An innocent party may be allowed to prove in one Court that a decree obtained against him in a different proceeding in another Court of concurrent jurisdiction was obtained by fraud, and if the Court be of opinion that such decree so obtained in the other Court cannot stand it has jurisdiction to treat that decree as a nullity and render its effect nugatory.

In an administration action the fact that amongst other things leases of immoveable property granted by the executors to themselves are sought to be set aside on the ground that such leases are acts of mal-administration does not make the action one for the recovery of immoveable property, and leave under section 44* Rule A is not necessary. If the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain such an administration action the fact that the property comprised in the leases complained of is wholly outside the limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction does not preclude it from setting aside such leases, and leave for that purpose under clause 12 of the Charter is not necessary. The Court assumes jurisdiction in regard to immoveable properties situate outside the jurisdiction in cases where it can act in personam either to compel the owner to give effect to legal obligations into which he has entered or to a trust reposed in him.

Where the suit is one to administer the assets of a deceased person, and in the claim various dealings by the executors of the estate are complained of as acts of mal-administration and sought to be redressed, such dealings do not constitute separate causes of action, and such a suit is not multifarious.

ONE Rai Mohendra Nath Bose died on 16th August 1874, leaving him surviving his widow, the plaintiff Nistarini Dassi, his mother Thakurani Dassi, his sister Kadumbini Dassi, and two brothers, Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose. Mohendra Nath by his will, dated 9th August 1874, bequeathed one-third of his estate to his brother Nundo Lall Bose, one-third [892] to his brother Pashupati Nath Bose, and, after bequeathing various legacies and annuities, including one of Rs. 100 per month to his widow Nistarini Dassi, directed that the surplus income of the remaining one-third Only certain claims to be joined with suit for recovery of land.

* [Sec. 44 A. :—No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property, except—

- (a) claims in respect of mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed,
- (b) damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held, and
- (c) claims by a mortgagee to enforce any of his remedies under the mortgage.]

should be applied in the purchase of Government securities, the interest whereof was to be paid to his widow Nistarini Dassi for her life, and after her death such securities were to go to the person or persons who might then be the heir or heirs of the testator. Mohendra Nath Bose appointed his brothers, Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose, and one Kali Churn Bhattacharji, executors of his will.

Probate of the will was taken out by Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose, on 4th September 1874. Kali Churn Bhattacharji did not take out probate of the will, nor did he take any part in the administration of the testator's estate.

By an Indenture, dated 24th May 1877, and made between Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose of the first part, the same persons, as the executors of the will of Mohendra Nath Bose, of the second part, Kadumbini Dassi and Thakurani Dassi of the third part, Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose, in their private capacity and in their capacity as executors, purported to convey all their property to Kadumbini Dassi and Thakurani Dassi, as trustees to hold it subject to certain trusts declared in the Indenture.

In 1889 a reference was made to certain arbitrators, who by an award, dated 16th July 1889, purported (inter alia) to partition the family property. The award was signed by Nundo Lall Bose, Pashupati Nath Bose, Thakurani Dassi, Kadumbini Dassi, and the plaintiff. After the award was made Nundo Lall Bose applied to the Subordinate Judge at Alipore to make the award a decree of Court, the plaintiffs amongst others being made a party to such application. A petition, bearing amongst others the signature of the plaintiff, was filed in that Court, consenting to the application, and the award was made a decree of Court by the Subordinate Judge at Alipore, the decree being dated the 12th September 1889. In accordance with the award Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose, as executors of the will of Mohendra Nath Bose, purported to grant, with the privity [893] and concurrence of the plaintiff, two mukurrari leases, one to Nundo Lall Bose, and the other to Pashupati Nath Bose, of certain immoveable property allotted by the arbitrators to the residuary estate of Mohendra Nath Bose. Both leases were dated 1st March 1891, and both bore the signature of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff, who was thirteen years old when her husband Mohendra Nath Bose died, brought this suit as the widow and heiress of her husband against Nundo Lall Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose in their private capacities and as the executors of the will of her husband, and Kadumbini Dassi, the surviving trustee of the deed of trust of 24th May 1877. In her plaint the plaintiff alleged that her signature had been obtained by the defendant Nundo Lall Bose, to various documents in connection with the reference, the award, the decree made on the award, and the leases, without her knowing the nature and meaning of such documents, and that she had had no independent legal advice with respect to such documents. She charged the defendants, the Boses, with various breaches of trust in their conduct as executors, and in addition to asking for the construction of her husband's will and the administration of his estate and for accounts from the defendants, the Boses, she prayed that the deed of trust, the award, the decree made on the award, and the leases, be declared to be fraudulent and void as against her, and in no way binding upon her, and so far as they purported in any way to deal with her husband's residuary estate, be set aside and cancelled. At the filing of the plaint leave to institute the suit in the High Court under clause 12 of the Charter had been obtained on the ground that the plaintiff's cause of action arose partly within and partly without the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of that Court.

The defendants, Nundo Lal Bose and Pashupati Nath Bose, filed separate written statements. Kadumbini Dassi did not enter appearance to the suit. In his written statement Nundo Lal Bose admitted that the plaintiff had had no independent legal advice, but took several preliminary objections to the suit. He pleaded (a) that in so far as the suit sought to set aside the decree of the Alipore Court the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it; (b) that as the immoveable property covered by the leases was [894] wholly outside the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, the suit, in so far as it sought to set them aside, did not lie in that Court, and it had no jurisdiction to entertain it; (c) that the suit was bad for multifariousness, misjoinder of causes of action and parties, and for joinder of claims against the defendants, the Boses, as executors of the will of Mohendra Nath Bose, and against them personally, in that it wrongly joined claims for the construction of the will and the administration of the estate of Mohendra Nath Bose with claims to avoid the trust deed, award, decree, and leases; (d) that all the cestuis qui trustent under the trust deed ought to be parties to the suit; (e) that on account of the award the claim for the construction of the will of Mohendra Nath Bose, as regards any rights of the plaintiff thereunder, was res judicata; (f) that the suit included causes of action in respect to moveable property and to immoveable property, and as no leave had been obtained under section 44, Rule A of the Civil Procedure Code the suit was not maintainable; (g) that as part of the immoveable property the subject matter of the suit was outside the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, and as no leave had been obtained in respect thereof under clause 12 of the Charter, the suit was not maintainable in that Court.

When the suit came on for hearing Counsel for the defendant Nundo Lal Bose took these preliminary objections by way of demurrer, and the following preliminary issues were framed:—

1. Has this Court jurisdiction in this suit to set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Alipore, dated the 29th August 1889?
2. Is that decree binding on the plaintiff?
3. Has this Court jurisdiction under the Charter to set aside leases of immoveable property outside the local limits of its ordinary civil jurisdiction?
4. Is the plaintiff entitled in the absence of all the persons beneficially interested under the deed of trust, dated 24th May 1887, to a declaration that it is fraudulent and void as against her, and to have it set aside as against her?
5. Can the plaintiff maintain this suit without having [895] obtained leave under section 44, Rule A of the Code of Civil Procedure?

Is the suit defective by reason of misjoinder of different causes of action?

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. J. T. Woodroffe), Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Mr. Dunne, Mr. J. G. Woodroffe, and Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hill, Mr. O'Kinealy, Mr. Chackravarti, and Mr. B. C. Mitter, for the Defendant Nundo Lal Bose.

Mr. Jackson, and Mr. Allen, for the Defendant Pashupati Nath Bose.

Mr. Hill.—The first point that arises is whether, when A and B are parties to a decree, B in a subsequent suit can impeach that decree on the ground of its being fraudulent and ask for it to be treated as a nullity. A decree cannot be treated as a nullity until it is set aside. It would impede justice, if while a Court was executing its decree another Court of concurrent jurisdiction was deciding that the decree was a nullity. A decree can only be set aside by a bill impeaching it in the Court which pronounced that decree.

In Mussel v. Morgan, (1790), 3 Bro. Ch. C., 73 (78), the only question decided was that a decree obtained by fraud cannot be set aside by a petition, but the remarks of the Lord Chancellor dismissing the petition clearly show that when a suit is brought to set aside a decree obtained by fraud, it must be brought in the Court which passed the decree complained of. Aushootosh Chandra v. Tara Prasanna Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 612 (614). Meadows v. Kingston, (1775) 2 Amb., 756 (762), shows the difference between a stranger and a party to a decree. A stranger cannot set aside the original decree, and is therefore allowed to impeach it in a subsequent proceeding, but a party to a decree must go to the Court which passed it. Kerr on Frauds, pp. 326-327. I am not aware of any case in which a party was allowed to set aside a decree in a subsequent proceeding in another Court. [STANLEY, J., referred to the case of [896] Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D., 70, 210.] In Bandon v. Becher, (1835) 3 Cl. & Fin., 479 (509), the person seeking to impeach the decree was not a party to it. Lord BROUGHAM's language at p. 509 of that report, though very vague, must be taken to refer only to the facts before him: the person in that case seeking to impeach the decree was not a party to the suit, but a remainderman. [STANLEY, J.—Suppose A and B, parties to a suit, collude to defraud C, an infant also a party, and get a guardian ad litem who is in league with them appointed for C and obtain a decree and thereby defraud C. Do you say C cannot go behind that decree?] No, he may do so, but not in another Court. Besides an infant in that case is not really a party. The guardian ad litem does not really represent him if he is in league with others to defraud him. But an adult is in a totally different position, Flower v. Lloyd, (1877) L. R., 6 Ch. D., 297 (302). The old practice was to file a bill in the Court in which the original decree was passed to set aside the decree. To ask this Court to set aside the decree would be treating this Court as a Court of Appeal from the Alipore Court: Allen v. McPherson, (1847) 1 H. L. C., 191, (224, 234); (1841) 5 Beav., 469. Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D. 70, 210, does not touch the point I am dealing with, namely, that one Court will not set aside the decree of another Court of concurrent jurisdiction. [STANLEY, J.—Surely setting aside a decree in its entirety and declaring it not binding as regards a particular individual are two different things.] As far as that individual is concerned it would be setting aside the decree quoad him. In the case of a party he must go to the Court which passed the decree. In Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D., 70, 210, the Court of Chancery only set aside the compromise. [STANLEY, J.—Was not the effect of that to set aside the whole proceedings? What did the Probate Court do when the parties came back?] The Court set aside the decree as the Alipore Court can in this case. It would be a great scandal if the Alipore Court could execute the decree, while his [this?] Court was setting it aside, and neither Court could stop the [897] other. In Solomon v. Abdool Aziz, (1879) 1 C. L. R., 366, it was held that as the former suit was had in this Court, and proceeded to a decree, and as the principal portion of the prayer was to set aside the decree, this Court alone had jurisdiction. [STANLEY, J.—Referring to Shelden v. Patrick, (1854) 1 Macq., H. L. C., 607, my recollection of that case is that it is there stated that any Court, however inferior, may go behind a decree even of the House of Lords, if such decree has been procured by fraud.] The question is as between whom? It may be by a person not a party, but not by a party. Persons not parties may treat the decree as a nullity, but parties to it may not. Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vulleebhoy Cassumbhoy, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 703 (707). The Court will have to deal with the question as to what effect the Evidence Act has on this. See Evidence Act, section 44, Ahmedbhoy Hubibhoy v. Vulleebhoy Cassumbhoy, (1882) I. L. R., 6 Bom., 703 (714, 715); Phipson on Evidence, p. 382, and Stephen's Digest on Evidence, p. 55, article 46. Till the decree is set aside it cannot be treated as a nullity between the parties. It would be a monstrous position, if a person who had obtained a decree by fraud, should be allowed to set up that fraud in a subsequent proceeding. But the words in section 44 of the Evidence Act seem wide enough to admit of this being permitted. The Evidence Act, however, does not of itself confer any rights. In Shedden v. Patrick, (1854) 1 Macq., H. L. C., 607, there was no real suit and no real representation of the infant; the guardian ad litem colluded with the other party to defeat the infant. With regard to jurisdiction there is a distinction between setting aside a decree and enquiring into the proceedings of another Court. Gunnesh Pattro v. Ram Nidhee Koondoo, (1872) 22 W. R., 361, has no bearing on this case. There the Revenue Court, into whose proceedings the Civil Court made an enquiry, had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for title. A decree that is still subsisting and has not been set aside cannot be treated as a nullity by a party to it. Bansi Lal v. Ramji Lal, (1898) I. L. R., 20 All., 370; Morrison [898] v. Morrison, (1838) 4 My. and Cr., 215 (228). In Taylor on Evidence, p. 1132, section 1713, it is stated that a party can apply to the Court which passed the decree to vacate it. Can the plaintiff, being a party to the suit in the Alipore Court, claim in this suit to treat the decree in that suit as a nullity? Unnoda Dabee v. Stevenson, (1874) 22 W. R., 290; Hoghton v. Fidley, (1874) L. R., 18 Eq., 573.

In Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D., 70, 210, the Court had no reason to enquire into the compromise, the plaintiffs simply withdrew their opposition. The Alipore Court by its decree has turned the award into a decree of Court. The Probate Court did not by granting probate make the compromise a decree of Court. In the suit in the Alipore Court the award has become merged in the decree. In this case, while the Alipore Court's decree stands, this Court cannot treat it as a nullity. The fraud in Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D., 70, 210, was the forgery. The fraud here is not the award but the way in which it was obtained.

The leases were from the defendants to themselves, but the plaintiff was a party to them. Under those leases, the defendants, the Boses, are in possession. To set aside the leases brings the plaintiff into possession. This is a suit for possession, and therefore a suit for land. It cannot be said that, although this is an administration suit, the plaintiff is entitled to sue for land outside the jurisdiction without leave. Jairam Narayan Raje v. Atmaram Narayan Raje, (1880) I. L. R., 4 Bcn., 482. Though she does not ask for possession the result is to take the possession from one and give it to another. Has this Court ever attempted to set aside a lease of lands outside its jurisdiction? (STANLEY, J.—In a case of a lease of land by a trustee to himself your proposition is that if the lands are outside the jurisdiction you cannot bring a suit in this Court to set aside the lease although the trustee is subject to the jurisdiction of this Court?) Yes, it is a suit for the declaration of title. A Court of Chancery will not make a declaration of title to lands outside its jurisdiction. [899] It may take away a personal right, such as right of redemption. It is submitted that this Court cannot compel the defendants to re-assign the leases. Delhi and London Bank v. Wordie, (1876) I. L. R., 1 Cal., 249, (262); In re Hawthorn; Graham v. Massey, (1883) L. R., 23 Ch. D., 743. In Kellie v. Fraser, (1877) I. L. R., 2 Cal., 445 (463), the question of title did not arise. So far as this suit seeks to set aside the leases, it is a suit affecting the title of land, and is therefore a suit for land. The relief sought cannot be granted in this suit, without leave under the Charter, and the plaintiff cannot now ask for leave.

As to the question of nonjoinder, this is a case between the cestuis qui trustent themselves; a trustee cannot represent them. Section 437 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to a case like this. See rules of the Supreme Court, Order XVI, rule 8. Hamond v. Walker, (1857) 3 Jur. N. S., 686; Read v. Prest, (1854) 1 K. & J., 183; all the cestuis qui trustent must be joined, or that portion of the claim must be struck out. The defendant Kadumbini Dassi has executed a release and is no longer a trustee.

A suit to set aside a deed of trust is a purely personal matter and stands on a totally different footing from a suit for the general administration of an estate. There are different parties concerned, and two such claims cannot be joined in one suit. The plaintiff in this suit is seeking to have her title declared to immoveable property acquired subsequent to the death of her husband, and to the premises, No. 13, Mohendra Bose's Lane, on behalf of her husband's estate, also to recover personal property said to have been misappropriated by the executors. She cannot join such claims, except with the leave of the Court. Such leave must be obtained before she brings her suit. She cannot bring her suit first and then make it good by obtaining leave afterwards. Civil Procedure Code, section 44, rule (a): Lutifunmissa Bibi v. Nazirun Bibi, (1884) I.L.R., 11 Cal., 33; The Oriental Bank Corporation v. Gobind Lall [900] Seal, (1883) I. L. R., 19 Cal., 604 (608). See the judgment of TREVELYAN, J., 21st May 1891, in Soshi Bhusan Sreemani v. Kali Kristo Sreemani, an unreported case, and Pilcher v. Hinds, (1879) L. R., 11 Ch. D., 905 (907).

The Advocate-General, contra.—I will deal with the objections in the reverse order in which they have been argued. This is in the nature of an administration suit, the object being the due administration of the estate, which was of Mohendra Nath Bose. Section 44, rule A, deals with claims to moveable and immoveable property based on the same title. Guyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tamburan, (1886) I. L. R., 10 Mad., 375 (506). That case I submit furnishes the law as to that section. In order to make out that section 44, rule A applies, the defendants have to make out that this is a suit for the recovery of immoveable property or declaration of title to immoveable property. It is submitted that it is not so. The Madras case shows that no leave is necessary, and there is no decision to the contrary. As regards leave having to be obtained at the time of filing of this suit, there is no such hard and fast rule. There is nothing to prevent the Court from granting the leave now. Clark v. Wray, (1885) L. R., 31 Ch. D., 68. The plaintiff says there has been mal-administration. Her title to both moveable and immoveable property is one and the same. Section 44, rule A does not apply to a case like this, where the title is the same and the wrong or infringement of right is the same.

With regard to the non-joinder of the cestuis qui trustent under the trust deed of 24th May 1877, there is nothing in the Indian Code analogous to order XVI, rule 8, Annual Practice, 1898. The defendant's case is that the trust deed has been wiped out, and by the parties interested in it. They say they have nothing to do with it. If that is so, well and good. But they have treated it to a certain extent as governing this suit. They say if you set aside the award and decree you revive the trust deed. If so, among whom would it be revived? If it is shown that the deed does affect the plaintiff's husband's estate, then she asks that it be [901] set aside so far as it does affect that estate. If the trust deed can be revived it may stand perfectly good as regards the trustees and the parties to it. But if it is shewn that it does affect the residuary estate, the plaintiff says that it is an act of mal-administration, and asks that it be set aside so far as it is shown to affect that estate. It is in no way necessary to have all the beneficiaries before the Court.

With regard to clause 12 of the Charter it is submitted that leave has been obtained, and the defendants do not say it was improperly obtained. Such leave having been obtained the Court now has jurisdiction to determine all the issues arising in this suit. Jairam Narayan Raje v. Atmaram Narayan Raje, (1880) I.L.R., 4 Bom., 482; Prasannamay Dasi v. Kadambini Dasi, (1868) 3 B.L.R., O.C., 85. The immoveable property in this suit is partly within and partly without the local limits. Leave was applied for and obtained.

The Bombay case was cited to show that where immoveable property was wholly without the local limits, leave could not be given, but that is wholly outside this case. Is this a suit for land? A suit for land has been construed as a suit for the possession of land. This is not a suit for the possession of land. The residuary estate of Mohendra Nath Bose and the legal title to it is vested in the defendants, the Boses, as his executors. Whatever property may in the course of the administration of that estate be found to belong to it will vest in them. There will be no change of title and no taking away the possession of any part of the estate from the persons in whom it is vested. In a suit of this nature the Court proceeds in personam. Bagram v. Moses, (1862) 1 Hyde, 284; section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code; Juggodumba Dossee v. Puddomoney Dossee, (1875) 15 B.L.R., 318; Land Mortgage Bank v. Sudurdeen Ahmed, (1892) I.L.R., 19 Cal., 358; Kellie v. Fraser, (1877) I.L.R., 2 Cal., 445; Ramdhone Shaw v. Nobumoney Dossee, (1865) Bourke, 218. This is not a suit for land. When the law allows a suit to be [902] brought in a particular Court, you cannot pick out a specific item in order to try to make out that the suit is not maintainable in that Court. As to the order which can be made with regard to these leases, the Court could declare them acts of mal-administration, and that they impede the due administration of the estate. The defendant may be directed not to set them up, or to execute a reconveyance. The possession of the lands will not be changed in any way, nor do we ask that it should be changed. With reference to the issue of jurisdiction what is the nature of this suit? I have submitted it is a suit for administration. The answer of the defendants is you can only get partial administration, as it has already been administered to a certain extent. They are setting up the decree and the award in answer to the plaintiff's claim. To go to the Alipore Court would only be delaying the evil day.

The question in Solomon v. Abdool Aziz, (1879) 4 C.L.R., 366 (369) was whether that particular plaint could remain on the files of this Court, and has no bearing on this case. It has not been suggested that it has been anywhere actually decided in England that an innocent party to a decree obtained by fraud cannot obtain relief except by bringing a suit to set aside the decree in the court which passed it. Muscl v. Morgan, (1790) 3 Bro. Ch. C., 73, is one of the class of cases deciding procedure. There was no question there as to the jurisdiction of any Court. The only question was could you come in by the cheaper method of a motion? In Miralu Rahimbhoy v. Rehmoobhoy Habibbhoy, (1891) I. L. R., 15 Bom., 594, the question was also one of practice not of jurisdiction. In neither of these cases did the question arise whether one Court could interfere with the decree of another Court. In Aushootosh Chandra v. Tara Prasanna Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 612, the only question was whether the proper course was to proceed by review or by a regular suit. Fraud vitiates all proceedings. When a decree is set forward as a bar, it may be shewn that it was obtained by fraud. [903] Shedden v. Patrick, (1854) 1 Macq. H.L.C., 607; Price v. Dewhurst, (1837) 8 Sim., 279 (304); Bandon v. Beecher, (1835) 3 Cl. & F. 479 (509). In the case of Allan v. McPherson, (1847) 1 H. L. C., 191 (209); (1841) 5 Beav., 469, the plaintiff brought his suit in Chancery, alleging that in the Ecclesiastical Court he had not been allowed to adduce evidence regarding undue influence on the testator. That case is quite distinct from this case. The only remedy for the plaintiff there was to appeal on the ground that evidence had been improperly rejected or accepted. The assistance invoked here is wholly different. To make that case applicable the defendants must show the plaintiff is seeking relief against the decree of the Alipore Court on the ground that it had improperly rejected or admitted certain evidence, which is not the case. Flower v. Lloyd, (1877) L. R., 6 Ch. D., 297, was a motion in the Appeal Court asking that Court to set aside the decree made by the Appeal Court after they had heard the matter. The Appeal Court said they had no original jurisdiction and were functus officio. When the matter came before the Appeal Court again [Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L.R., 10 Ch.D., 327,] the only question to be decided was whether, owing to the alleged fraud of one of the parties, imperfect evidence had been adduced, and the Appellate Court held on the facts that no fraud had been practised. At no stage has that case any bearing on this. If evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected the proper procedure is to go to the Court of Appeal; but in this case the fraud the plaintiff alleges goes to the root of the matter, there being no real contest in the former proceeding; Gunnesh Pattro v. Ram Nidhee Koondoo, (1874) 22 W. R., 361; Unnoda Dabee v. Stevenson, (1874) 22 W. R., 290; Mewa Lall Thakur v. Bhujhun Jha, (1874) 13 B. L. R., App. 11: 22 W. R., 213. The cases cited under section 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure have a useful bearing on this point. It has been decided that when an application has [904] been made by a decree-holder it is competent for the Court executing the decree to enquire whether the holders of decrees for money are holders of real decrees; In re Sunder Dass, (1844) I. L. R., 11 Cal., 42, and Chhaganlal v. Fazarali, (1888) I.L.R., 13 Bom., 154. The Court has power to see whether a holder of a decree for money has obtained it bonâ fide or by fraud; Subramanian Patter v. Panjamma Kunjamma, (1881) I. L. R., 4 Mad., 324; Chogalal v. Trueman, (1888) I. L. R., 7 Bom., 481; In re South American and Mexican Co., (1895) L. R., 1 Ch., 37 (47); Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister and Son, (1895) L. R., 2 Ch., 273 (281).

An order or decree passed by consent may be set aside formally or treated as of no account, if it can be shown that the compromise upon which the consent decree was passed has been entered into by mistake. Was the plaintiff a party to the suit? Was she sufficiently and properly represented in the case? The argument proceeds on the facts stated by us, and that is that the plaintiff, a purdah lady, knew nothing of these matters: she was admittedly without independent legal advice.

As to the position of purdah women—Manohar Das v. Bhagabati Dasi, (1867) 1 B. L. R., O. C., 28, and Kanai Lal Jowhari v. Kamini Debi, (1867) 1 B. L. R., O. C., 31, note,—it is a recognised rule that purdah ladies must be most carefully protected. It is admitted in this case that the plaintiff had no independent legal advice; Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banco Begum, (1877) I. L. R., 3 Cal., 324; Buzloor Rulceem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum, (1867) 11 Moo. I. A., 551 (585), Behari Lal v. Habiba Bibi, (1886) I.L.R., 8 All., 267.

The Court has power, and if the facts the plaintiff alleges are proved, will set aside and treat as a nullity the Alipore Court's decree so far as the plaintiff's husband's estate is affected. The Court has full power to entertain the suit. Kali Prosanno Ghose v. [905] Rajani Kant Chatterjee, (1897) I. L. R., 25 Cal., 141. In this connection it may be noted that although section 522 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that no appeal shall lie against a decree passed on an award, except in so far as it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, yet it has been held that under certain circumstances an appeal does lie from such a decree, although it was not in excess of and was in accordance with the award.

Mr. Hill in reply.—An administration suit does not stand on any particular footing. If in the course of administration there is an attempt to include property, which another person claims, it is a suit for land. There can be no question of curtailing the Court's jurisdiction. Leave under section 44, rule A, can always be asked for. Whatever the form of the suit may be, if in fact you are seeking to recover property for an estate, it is, even if that matter be ancillary, nevertheless a suit for land. It is submitted leave under section 44, rule A, is necessary. Leave cannot be given afterwards. See the judgment of TREVELYAN, J., dated 21st May 1861, in the unreported case of Soshi Bhusan Sreemani v. Kali Kristo Sreemani. As regards land wholly outside the jurisdiction no leave can be obtained. The conveyances pass the title to such lands. The plaintiff joined in the conveyances. A cestuis qui trust can join with one trustee in conveying to another trustee to express his concurrence. As regards the deed of trust, if they say it affects them, the other cestuis qui trustent must be made parties. Kadumbini, the trustee, does not properly represent the other cestuis qui trustent.

As regards the main point my argument is not that a decree obtained by fraud cannot be set aside, but the question is by what Court? It is submitted that it must be by the Court which pronounced the decree. The case of Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister and Son, (1895) L. R., 2 Ch., 273, does not help the other side. It shows that a regular suit may be brought, but it does not say in what Court the decree must be set aside by an action, Flower v. Lloyd, (1877) L.R., 6 Ch. D., 297, and the question is in what Court does such an action lie. The [906] argument of inconvenience is one of a very strong character. Suppose this Court makes its decree, and the Alipore Court in a subsequent proceeding holds the decree to be fraudulent and therefore invalid, and this Court sends the decree down to the Alipore Court to be executed; the Alipore Court would have to execute it; and the inconvenience would be enormous.

Price v. Dewhurst, (1837) 8 Sim., 279 (304), dealt with foreign judgments. These stand on their own footing and are not on the same footing as judgments of a Court in this country. In this country the Courts derive their power from the English Crown. Section 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure recognizes this distinction. When a fraud has been practised on a Court and a decree is made in consequence of the fraud the decree is a nullity. But where there has been a real suit, and one of the parties has been defrauded, then the decree subsists until it is set aside. The argument on section 44 of the Evidence Act by the Advocate-General has never suggested itself to any one else; that section has never been so construed by any Court in the country. When you have to construe a section you have to see whether the construction sought to be put upon it will lead to an uprooting of the common principles of equitable jurisdiction or not. "Party" in that section must be read as meaning "party in that proceeding against whom the judgment is set up" and not "a party to the proceeding in which the judgment was made," otherwise there would be no such thing as res judicata.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows :—

Stanley, J.—A number of preliminary objections to the maintenance of this suit have been raised by the defendant Nundo Lall Bose. The first and most serious of them is that this Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the decree of the Alipore Court. The plaintiff in her statement of claim alleges that the joint property of her late husband Mohendra Nath Bose, and of the first and second defendants, which was undivided joint family property, was partitioned by arbitrators under an agreement to which her consent was fraudulently obtained, and that by the fraud of the same defendants, a decree upon the award was subsequently passed by [907] the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. In her claim, which is for the administration of the estate of the late Mohendra Nath Bose, the plaintiff seeks among other things a declaration that the award and the decree made thereon are fraudulent and void, as against her, and in no way binding upon her, and so far as they purport in any way to deal with the residuary estate of Mohendra Nath Bose that the same may be set aside and cancelled. For the purpose of the objection the defendant Nundo Lall Bose admits that the award and decree were fraudulently obtained, but his Counsel contends that, even admitting this, inasmuch as the plaintiff was a party to the decree-proceedings in the Court at Alipore, she is estopped by that decree, and cannot in this Court set it aside; that whatever relief she may be entitled to in respect of the decree, proceedings must be taken in the Court which pronounced the decree, and the relief which she claims cannot be granted in this Court, and that a bill to set aside a decree for fraud is in the nature of a bill of review, and must be filed in the Court in which the decree was obtained.

A number of text books and authorities have been cited, and as is not unusual opinions and decisions somewhat conflicting are to be found as to whether or not an innocent party would be allowed to prove in one Court that a judgment against him in another Court was obtained by fraud. It is clear that a guilty party would not be permitted to defeat a judgment by showing that in obtaining it he had practised an imposition on the Court; but can an innocent party, who may apply directly to the Court which pronounced the judgment to vacate it, apply to another Court to set it aside? The author of Taylor on Evidence suggests a doubt as to this, p. 1133, 9th edition, as does also the author of Kerr on Frauds. In the case of Aushutosh Chandra v. Tara Prassanna Roy, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 612, the Court held that for the purpose of setting aside a decree passed in pursuance of a compromise come to out of Court there were two available modes of procedure—(1) by suit; (2) by a review of the judgment sought to be set aside, the latter being the more regular mode of procedure. In that case WILSON, J., abstained from saying whether, if a suit were brought, [908] it ought to be brought in the Mofussil where the decree was obtained, or on the Original Side of this Court. The principle upon which judgments are set aside for fraud is tersely and forcibly stated by Lord Chief Justice DE GREY in Meadows v. Kingston, (1775) 2 Amb., 756, thus: "Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice." In the Queen v. Saddlers Company, (1863) 10 H.L.C., 404(431), WILLES, J., says: "A judgment or decree obtained by fraud upon a Court binds not such Court nor any other, and its nullity upon this ground, though it has not been set aside or reversed, may be alleged in a collateral proceeding." In applying this rule it matters not whether the impeached judgment has been pronounced by an inferior tribunal or by the highest Court of Judicature in the realm: in all cases alike it is competent for every Court, whether superior or inferior, to treat as a nullity any judgment which can be clearly shown to have been obtained by manifest fraud, Shadden v. Patrick, (1854) 1 Macq. H. L. C., 607, Fabula, non judicium hoc est, in scena non in foro res agitur. In the case of Bandon v. Escher, (1835) 3 Cl. & Fin., 479, where sales of estates had fraudulently taken place under decrees of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland obtained by collusion between the tenant-for-life, the mortgagor, the person in whose favour a charge had been created, and the purchaser, and where the interests of the tenant in remainder had not been protected, the Court of Chancery in Ireland on the tenant in remainder coming into possession granted him relief on a bill filed to redeem. The House of Lords affirmed that decree, and held that though the Court of Chancery cannot review or correct a decree of the Court of Exchequer, yet where such decree has been obtained collusively and fraudulently a party whose interests are affected by it may raise in the Court of Chancery either as actor or defender a question as to its validity. In this case the remainder man was not a party to the collusive proceeding; the tenant-for-life represented the estate of the mortgagor.

[909] In the case of Flower v. Lloyd, (1877) 6 L. R., Ch. D., 297, which is relied on by the defendant, where final judgment had been pronounced by the Court of Appeal dismissing an action with costs, it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled by motion in that action to apply to the Court of Appeal for leave for the rehearing of the appeal on the ground of the subsequent discovery of facts showing or tending to show that the order of the Court of Appeal was obtained by fraud practised on the Court below. That application was, however, refused on the ground that the Court of Appeal having once determined an appeal was functus officio and had no further jurisdiction in the matter. The Court, however, intimated that the plaintiffs had another proceeding open to them, namely, to bring an independent action to set aside the decree for fraud. Such action was subsequently brought before Vice Chancellor BACON, who gave judgment for the plaintiffs. On appeal the Court of Appeal was of opinion that fraud was not proved, and dismissed the action: Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 327. On this appeal a doubt was expressed by JAMES, L.J., as to whether or not an action was maintainable to impeach a judgment on the ground alleged by the plaintiffs, namely, falsehood and fraud practised upon an expert named by the plaintiffs and not objected to by the defendants for the purpose of inspecting the defendants' process for printing on metal plates.

"Where" said he (JAMES, L.J.) "is litigation to end if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris and at arms length could be set aside by fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first action, or that false answers had been given to interrogatories."

BAGGALLAY, L.J., declined to express an opinion on this question, and stated that he should much regret to feel himself "compelled to hold that the Court had no power to deprive the successful but fraudulent party of the advantages to be derived from what he had so obtained by fraud." BRETT, L.J., [910] in a later case commenting on the doubts expressed by JAMES, L.J., in Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 327, says: "It seems to me the fraud alleged in that action was probably fraud on the part of certain servants of the party and not fraud brought home to the party himself; Abouloff v. Oppenheimer & Co., (1882) L.R., 10 Q. B. D., 295 (307)." It is to be observed in passing that in the case of Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 327, the plaintiff and the defendant were at arms length fighting out a real suit.

In the present case the fraud alleged is the fraud of the first defendant in procuring the plaintiff's consent to the agreement to refer to arbitration and her consent to a decree upon the award, the true fact being that she was a mere puppet in the hands of the defendants and knew not what she was doing; that in fact the defendants deceived the Court by their fraudulent conduct. I have been referred by Counsel for the first defendant to the statement of Phipson in his useful book on Evidence, where he says: "Proof of fraud however can in general only be taken advantage of by a stranger to the judgment who is in no way privy to the fraud, and not by a party, since if the latter were innocent he might have applied to vitiate the judgment and if guilty he cannot escape the consequence of his own wrong." This no doubt, as a general proposition, is true. The judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction is in general undoubtedly conclusive proof in subsequent proceedings between the same parties or their privies of the matter actually decided. Likewise foreign judgments in personam are, subject to certain grounds of impeachment, conclusive between parties and privies, yet it has been held that a foreign judgment obtained by the fraud of a party to the suit in the foreign Court cannot be enforced by him in an action brought in an English Court. In the case of Abouloff v. Oppenheimer & Co., (1882) L. R., 10 Q. B. D., 295 (307), to which I have referred, it was held that even although the question whether the fraud had been perpetrated was investigated in the foreign Court, and it was then decided that the fraud had not been committed, the judgment would not be enforced in England. In that case to an [911] action claiming the value of goods and brought upon a foreign judgment whereby the defendants were ordered to return to the plaintiff the goods or to pay to her their value, the defence was that the judgment was obtained by the false representation to the foreign Court by the plaintiff that the goods were not then in her possession and by fraudulent concealment by the plaintiff from the Court that the goods then were in her possession. Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., commenting on the argument, that upon the pleadings in that case it must be taken that the allegations of fraud were brought before the foreign Court and that the foreign Court came to a conclusion against the defendants, and that whether this conclusion was right or wrong on the matters of fact the question of the plaintiff's alleged fraud could not be tried in the Courts of this country, says: "I may state the arguments for the plaintiff also in somewhat different words, namely, that although the Russian Courts at Tiflis were led to decide against the defendants through believing a false state of facts to exist owing to the fraud of the plaintiff, nevertheless the defendants are not now at liberty to say that the judgments against them were procured by that fraud. Certainly this contention seems unreasonable. Many authorities from Meadows v. Kingston, (1775) 2 Amb., 756, down to our own time have been cited during the argument, but not one of them throws a doubt on the broad proposition that where a judgment has been obtained by the fraud of a party to a suit in a foreign country, he cannot prevent the question of fraud from being litigated in the Courts of this country, when he seeks to enforce the judgment so obtained." BRETT, L.J., in that case says: "I cannot help thinking that the same doctrine which is now asserted with regard to a foreign judgment would be applicable to an action brought on a judgment obtained in an English Court other than the Court in which the action is brought. There may be a difference where it is sought to enforce by the process of a Court a judgment of that very Court, because if that judgment has been obtained by improper means the objection does not arise in a new action brought on that judgment, but it arises with regard to the process [912] of the Court to enforce a judgment of its own. In a case of that kind it was perhaps formerly necessary to proceed in a Court of Equity in order to get rid of the judgment, but I doubt whether it was necessary, because, at least in my opinion, a Court of Common Law would have in the exercise of its own jurisdiction set aside a judgment procured from it by deception." And again: "With one exception none of the authorities cited before us in the least militate against our decision; they all seem to show that the fraud of a party to a suit is an extrinsic and collateral act which will vitiate the judgment. That exception is to be found in the doubts expressed by JAMES, L.J., with the assent of THESIGER, L.J., in Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 327. It seems to me that the fraud alleged in that action was probably fraud on the part of certain servants of the party, and not fraud brought home to the party himself. Moreover it was, as I understand, fraud committed, not before the Court itself at the trial of the action, but previously to the case being brought to a hearing before the Court. If it is to be taken that the doubts of JAMES and THESIGER, L.JJ., related to a fraud of a party to the action, committed before the Court itself for the purpose of deceiving the Court, I cannot, after having heard the present argument, agree with the doubts expressed by them. These doubts are not binding, and no decision as to the effect of fraud was pronounced by these Lords Justices in Flower v. Lloyd, (1878-79) L. R., 10 Ch. D., 327."

Again in the case of Vadala v. Lawes. (1890) L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 310, in which an action was brought by the plaintiff in the English Courts upon a judgment obtained in the Court of Palermo, the Italian action was brought upon certain bills of exchange, and the defence raised in the Italian action was that the bills were given in respect of gambling transactions by an agent of the defendant without his authority. It was held that the defendant might raise the defence that the judgment was obtained by the fraud of the plaintiff, even though the fraud alleged was such that it could not be proved without retrying the question adjudicated upon by the foreign Court. LINDLEY, L.J., in the course of his [913] judgment says: "But we now come to another and a more difficult question, and that is whether this defence can be gone into at all. There are two rules relating to these matters which have to be borne in mind, and the joint operation of which gives rise to the difficulty. First of all there is the rule which is perfectly well established and well known that a party to an action can impeach the judgment in it for fraud. Whether it is the judgment of an English Court or of a foreign Court does not matter; using general language, that is a general proposition unconditional and undisputed. Another general proposition which, speaking in equally general language, is perfectly well settled, is that when you bring an action on a foreign judgment you cannot go into the merits which have been tried in the foreign Court. But you have to combine those two rules and apply them in the case where you cannot go into the alleged fraud without going into the merits."

The case of Carew v. Johnston, (1805) 2 Sch. and Lef., 280, is an instructive illustration of the power which a Court of concurrent jurisdiction will assume in a matter of this kind. In that case a decree for foreclosure on sequestration in 1777 against an absent mortgagor known by the plaintiff to be of weak and feeble understanding and incompetent to conduct his affairs, where advantage had been taken in the account of the estate of the defendant and of his absence and of his having no one to manage his defence, and a sale had in 1780 in pursuance of such decree to the person under whose directions the proceedings were taken, were set aside as fraudulent on an original bill filed for that purpose by the heir of the mortgagor in 1785. Lord REDESDALE, in the course of his judgment says: "On the whole I think it is impossible for me to hold the decree, which has been pronounced, conclusive on the party. If I should be of opinion that the party has brought himself completely within the saving of the Act I cannot pay any attention to the decree, I must treat it as a nullity; but if I should think that he has not brought himself precisely within the saving of the Act by the allegation in his bill, then I must decide on the ground of unconscientious advantage being (by means of a Court of Justice) taken [914] of the imbecility and of the absence of this man, by which gross injustice has been done, and in fact a fraud practised on the Court. That would not be a ground for relieving against trifling errors or little inaccuracies, but it will be a ground for relieving against palpable injustice, such as could not have existed, if anybody had appeared for this man to state his rights, and the Court or the Master had entered into considerations of the subject, and acted upon the instruments which were the foundations of the proceedings."

The statement of LINDLEY, L.J., in Vadala v. Lawes, (1890) L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 310, is consistent with the view of Vice-Chancellor SHADWELL expressed in the case of Price v. Dewhurst, (1837) 8 Sim., 279, namely: "The Court by means of the injunction set aside the judgment of a foreign Court, and the ground on which the Court proceeded was that the foreign judgment had been obtained by fraud." "Now I take that to be quite consistent," says the Vice-Chancellor, "with the principles on which this Court acts; and it is of no consequence where the judgment is given if it appear to have been obtained by fraud; in every such case the Court will consider it as a nullity." In Cole v. Langford, (1898) 2 Q. B., 36, a judgment which had been obtained by fraud was set aside in an action brought for that purpose. In Priestman v. Thomas, (1884) L. R., 9 P. D., 70, 210, which was an action in the Probate Division, in which C. Thomas and E. Gunnell propounded an earlier and H. W. Priestman propounded a later will, the action was compromised and by consent a verdict and judgment were taken for establishing the earlier will. Priestman discovered that the earlier will was a forgery, and in an action in the Chancery Division, to which Thomas and Gunnell were parties, obtained the verdict of a jury to that effect, and judgment that the compromise should be set aside on the ground that the compromise was obtained by the fraud of Thomas and that the will was a forgery. In another action in the Probate Division for revocation of the probate of the earlier will, it was held affirming [915] the decision of the President of the Probate Division that Thomas and Gunnell were estopped from denying the forgery.

In the case of Eshan Chunder Safoor v. Nundumoni Dassee, (1884) I. L. R., 10 Cal., 357, it was held that where a person acting for a minor has fraudulently withdrawn the minor's suit under section 97 of Act VIII of 1859 without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit, and by such withdrawal an absolute statutory prohibition is imposed on the minor from bringing a fresh suit, it was open to the minor to relieve himself from the consequences of the fraud in one of three ways: (1) by an application to the Court in the suit in which the withdrawal took place; (2) by a regular suit to set aside the judgment founded upon the withdrawal; or (3) by bringing a fresh suit for the same purpose and setting up the fraud as an answer to the statutory bar.

The latest English case on the subject is that of Wyatt v. Palmer, W. N. (20 May 1899) p. 74., where LINDLEY, L. J., says: "The proposition that an action would not lie to set aside a judgment by default on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud could not be sustained. There was no reason for saying that because the rules (that is the English Judicature rules) provided a summary method of setting aside such a judgment, it was no longer possible to have recourse to the older method of setting it aside by action. This procedure did not interfere with the old jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, under which a decree or judgment might be impeached on the ground of fraud by filing a bill."

Nowhere, however, is there to be found a clearer exposition of the law on this subject than in the judgment of Lord BROUGHAM in Bandon v. Becher, (1835) 3 Cl. & Fin., 479. "The first ground," says he, "of objection assigned appears to be one of form, but in fact it is one of substance, for it goes to the jurisdiction. It is said that the whole of these proceedings spring from a decree of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, and that that decree being pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, upon parties legally before it, [916] cannot now be questioned in another Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction; but if brought into dispute at all, should be brought into dispute in the Court where it was originally pronounced. I agree generally to the proposition, but I must add to it this one qualification, that you may at all times in a Court of competent jurisdiction,—competent as to the subject matter of the suit itself—where you appear as an actor, object to a decree made in another Court, upon which decree your adversary relies; and you may, either as actor or defender, object to the validity of that decree, provided it was pronounced through fraud, contrivance or covin of any description, or not in a real suit; or if pronounced in a real and substantial suit, between parties who were really not in contest with each other. That it is undeniably true that the Court of Chancery has no right to review a decree of the Court of Exchequer: that nothing but a Court of Appeal can give redress if such decree is erroneous, is clear, and indeed nothing can be more true than such a proposition; but it is equally true, that if the decree has been obtained by fraud it shall avail nothing for or against the parties affected by it, to the prosecution of a claim, or to the defence of a right. These two propositions are undeniably true; they are recognised in practice: they are independent of each other, and they stand well together." And then he quotes the language of Mr. Solicitor-General Wedderburn summing up all the authorities, viz.: "A sentence is a judicial determination of a cause agitated between real parties upon which a real interest has been settled; in order to make a sentence there must be a real interest, a real argument, a real defence, a real decision. Of all these requisites not one takes place in the case of a fraudulent and collusive suit; there is no Judge, but a person invested with the ensigns of a judicial office is misemployed in listening to a fictitious cause proposed to him; there is no party litigating, there is no party defendant, no real interest brought into question."

I should refer to the case of Allen v. Macpherson, (1841) 5 Beav., 469; (1847) 1 H. L. C., 191, which has been strongly relied upon by the defendant's Counsel. That was the case of a will in which the Ecclesiastical [917] Court had exclusive jurisdiction. The Courts of Equity were bound to receive as testamentary a will in all its parts which had been proved in the proper spiritual Court, though in certain cases they might affect with a trust a particular legacy or residuary bequest which had been obtained by fraud. Also where probate has been obtained by fraud on the next-of-kin, Equity interferes and either converts the wrong-doer into a trustee in respect of such probate or obliges him to consent to a revocation of the grant of probate in the Court in which it was obtained (Mitford's Pleas of the Crown, 257, 4th edition). In Allen v. McPherson, (1841) 5 Beav., 469, (1847) 1 H. L. C., 191, the plaintiff unsuccessfully resisted the admission to probate of a codicil, which revoked a bequest to him on the ground that the codicil had been obtained by fraud. He thereupon filed a bill in Chancery to set aside the probate. A majority of the House of Lords held that this was in effect an attempt to review the decision of a Court of Probate by the Court of Chancery, and that the proper course would have been to appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If there had been an appeal to the Privy Council the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might have been put in conflict with the House of Lords, they both being Courts of the last resort.
